Frankly, I do not believe that man understands woman perfectly or that woman perfectly understands man. The nature of each is complex in the extreme. Some qualities the sexes share, but if there is a secret that woman consciously or unconsciously holds in her own heart, there is, perhaps, more than one that lies hidden in the heart of man. It is not easy to shed sex in thought, to fit a man's shoes on a woman, or vice versa. There are masculine needs and desires which are imperative, and which women cannot comprehend, just as there are implanted in the feminine breast yearnings, dreams and necessities no man may understand. In the Danish book the author declares that there reigns between the sexes an "irreducible enmity!" This is an hysterical exclamation. Reserve exists, yes, but who that has known the meaning of love absolute, selfless, passionate, immortal, will agree with such an argument? And as to reserve, as to a secret, is not every human being a secret to another? Are we absolutely truthful with ourselves? Do you ever think of the being who looks out at you from every skull—of its absolute lineliness, its aloofness—of the immense solitude in which every one of us lives? Alone we live, alone we go on, that last awful, mysterious journey—out into the dark—afraid, like children.

"The Dangerous Age" is not the publication of some secret, sacred to woman. It is the story of a woman who has lost self-control at a time when the balance is apt to be a little uneven. It is the last cry for love—the last of "life's sweet madness." Elsie Lindtner sees her youth departing, and with it her beauty, and she despises the quiet, unfevered domestic affection into which Love changes when he folds his wings and rests by the fireside of Home. In a last passionate outburst she reaches out to catch the wings of the elusive little god who prefers to play with the butterflies among the roses of youth, and, scorning the firelight upon the hearth, she wanders out—as many another woman did before her—into the mirk and the wind and the rain, but to find Love fleeing from her in horror. Only so far as it illustrates the folly of which a woman can be capable is "L'Age Dangereux" a human document. It is mainly the outpouring of a neurotic woman at a neurotic age; a burst of hysteria; a story in which the demon Neurasthenia is both hero and heroine.

I have just received a Christmas present. Have you heard of pot-pourri beads? They are beads made of rose leaves fresh gathered and spiced, turned in the sun for a number of days, then cut up and moulded with the fingers into round shapes of equal size. These are polished, when hard, with olive oil, pierced with a hatpin and strung with small beads of gold or black between each rose bead. A clasp is attached, and when the little rosary is worn for a while it gives forth a rich perfume of roses and spices—such as you feel when the lid is lifted from the pot-pourri jar—a most delicious fragrance. I do not know whether you can procure one of these "rosaries" in the shops. This one I wear came from California, and was made by a friend of last summer's roses. An odd and charming Christmas gift it makes, the more welcome since it comes in advance of the season. One cannot afford to be a laggard in gathering any of the sweets of life, especially the last roses of summer. It is never too early—nor too late—to receive such a fragrant gift as this.

A correspondent writes complaining of the Woman's Page in the average daily or weekly paper. The man-editor's conception of what women want in the way of mental pabulum is assuredly not complimentary to the sex. Too often, under some flat heading, the Woman's Page is a jumble of odds and ends—a bit about fashions that are impossible to the woman of shallow purse, clippings from articles on beauty culture, a recipe or two, inferior far to those in a first-class cookery book, a bit of gush over some society person, or visitor of rank, a pot-boiler interview with an actress, and answers to correspondents who send such inane questions as "How should a girl of sixteen do up her hair?" If the editor has larger ideas as to the mentality of women, and favours, say, the suffrage, or the temperance movement, or missions, the woman journalist is permitted to attack—in a feeble manner—these heavy subjects. As to social items: "Be careful, Miss M." the dear man will say, "and do not offend anyone. Put in all the names and be accurate in your description of the dresses and fallals, and that sort of thing. Interest the women. That is what you are here to do. In-ter-est the wo-men." Why, my gracious! dear man, women know how to dress, and how to cook, and how to find the pin that makes the baby cry. They knew it all since the first baby, barring Adam and Eve, who were made, not born—came into this "misfortunate" world. Don't you think they would like to hear about plays and books and music, about far places and things, about the big doings of a big world, about politics and polemics, and princes and clowns, about bargains and battles, fabrics and football? Are we hens that we must only scratch in our own barnyard and listen in admiring awe to the crowing of our own rooster? When a big event occurs and men reporters are hurried to the scene of action, the women journalists—if any are sent—are advised to report only those things which are supposed to in-ter-est the wo-men. Bonnets, and what she had on, and whether her hair was done in rats or curls. Reams of sloppy nonsense about this dear lady's gown, or that dear lady's feathers, and how graciously she bowed, and how your knees knocked together when her great ladyship deigned to notice poor you. Poor you, indeed, and poor me, and the rest of us. Perhaps some day—before the millennium—the good men-editors will wake up to the fact that women read every part of the newspaper and take as keen an interest as the other sex in the ball game and the editorial on European politics. Perhaps some of us will even live to see women writing daily editorials not "from the woman's standpoint"—on the great affairs of the world, when it will be discovered to the amazement of the great men-editors that men and women see exactly through the same spectacles, only women keep their glasses brighter. "The Woman's Page," "Miladi's Kingdom," "Madame's Realm," "Woman's Empire"—and each filled with trumpery! I know. I've been through it. Some day we'll gather it all up and stuff it under the hat of the stolid man who always says, "Women have no sense of humour."

ARE YOU AS WELL AS A YEAR AGO?

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Point the Way to Health and Strength

Ask yourself the important question whether you are as strong as you were a year ago, as bodily fit as you should be. Many a reader has to confess "No." Some weakening ailment has during the past year laid hold of the system, unfitting you for the duties of life and seriously clouding the outlook of the coming days. It may be rheumatism with its sharp twinges of pain, indigestion, headache, nervous debility, depression and lack of energy, or the pains and ailments which only common folk know. It is well to know that all these weakening disorders arise from an impoverished condition of the blood. Renew and enrich your blood and all your troubles will cease. This is a strong statement, but it is made on the testimony of thousands who once suffered, but who have gained health and strength by the aid of the new, rich blood supplied by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. We can quote thousands of cases similar to the following; Mr. Jos. Grandmaison is a young man well known in the town of St. Jerome, Que. He says: "For a couple of years I began to find my strength failing, but did not dream that the trouble was serious. As I grew weaker I began to doctor, but it did not help me. The least exertion made my heart palpitate violently, my stomach seemed out of order and my whole system became so run down that I was finally forced to quit work. I had now been doctoring for almost six months and I was very naturally growing discouraged At this juncture I read of a case similar to mine, cured through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and decided to try them. I took the Pills faithfully for about two months, gradually growing stronger and at the end of that time I was as well as any man could be. I shall always praise the medicine that raised me from despair to the blessings of good health."

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Esther Pleading for Her People.—Esther iv.; v., 1-3.

1. Verses 1-3—In what city did the events of this lesson occur?

2. What were the circumstances which caused Mordecai to rend his clothes and put on sackcloth?

3. Why would it ever or never be right, no matter how awful the calamity, for a man of God in these days to experience or show such great grief as Mordecai and the Jews did?

4. What are the benefits of prayer and fasting, in the presence of an impending calamity?

5. How did the actions of Mordecai suggest that we should never give up trying to the utmost, to prevent any impending calamity?

6. Verses 4-9—Who was Esther, and how came she to be the wife of this Persian King?

7. Is grief as necessary as joy in the life of every person? Why or why not?

8. Is it always right for us "to weep with them that weep?"

9. What in substance was the decree which had been issued against the Jews?

10. From the actions of Haman, what would you say is the strongest passion which makes men cruel and vindictive?

11. Verses 10-12—What were Esther's reasons for not wanting to go in unto the King, with the request to save her people?

12. What were probably the reasons for attaching the death penalty to all who should enter the king's inner court unbidden by him?

13. What, if any, reason is there to suppose that, as Esther had not been called by the king for thirty days, Haman had been working some scheme to keep them apart?

14. Verses 13-14—Why was it probable, if there had been no interference with Haman's plans, that Esther would have been slain with the rest of the Jews?

15. In carrying out His purpose has God generally more than one plan with which to do it? If so, give an example.

16. Was it true that Esther had been, in the providence of God, placed upon the throne for this crisis, and is it also true that God has a special purpose in life for every person? Give your reasons.

17. Verses 15-17—In what respects did Esther show the spirit of a heroine, a martyr, and a wise woman?

18. Are such noble qualities as Esther possessed possible for everybody? Give your reasons.

19. What is the benefit of getting others to join us in fasting and prayer when we anticipate a great calamity?

20. Chap. v., 1-3—What is the difference between a coward and a brave man?

21. Does God ever disappoint a courageous man?

POPULAR BUT "BAD FORM"

Many girls are "bad form" without suspecting it. Here are a few things little considered that are popular, but not in good taste:

Inquisitiveness. Have you never pried into personal affairs by question?

Boisterous. Noisy fun, especially in public, is common in both senses of the word. A girl can have a good time without laughing and talking at a high pitch.

Practical joking. What seems pure wit to the perpetrator, to the victim is stupid horseplay or downright malice.

Intrusion. Some girls have no respect for privacy. They burst into a closed room without knocking, offer their society unasked, and will interrupt the most earnest conversation without a perfunctory, "I beg your pardon."

Disloyalty. It is ill-bred if nothing else to run down those to whom you owe fealty or to betray a friend's confidence. Even worse is it to discuss family affairs with outsiders.

Bickering. Girls may not mean anything when they argue before a third person, but the listener is just as uncomfortable as though the disputants were at daggers' drawn. Especially poor taste is it for one to argue with her fiance or husband in public.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE
In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders. Later come dropsy, acute rheumatic pains, and perhaps diabetes. But don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and aches and make you well again.

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was almost helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a big change, so I took six bottles and I am now strong and well again. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. P. ENDLICH, R. F. D. No. 7, Erie, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

"Why?" she asked.

"They're helpless in there . . . . they've no ammunition!"

She compelled herself to calmness again.

"But surely they'll know . . . . . surely . . . . . in time," she murmured.

"Yes, they'll know!" he answered, absently, for his squinting eyes were on the undulating sweep of open ground ahead of him. He could see little barefooted men in ragged denim uniforms, creeping and running from hollow to hollow, spreading out in irregular line ,like the fan-edge of a breaking side-swell.

"They're coming . . . . keep low!" he said. And as he spoke he sighted and fired.

The response to that first fire of his was prompt, almost instantaneous. It brought a steady crescendo clatter of sound and a patter and throb of bullets against the pit-front.

McKinnon swung the emptied rifle back into the hands of the waiting girl and caught up its mate, with one movement of his body.

He was firing calmly and deliberately now, watching for each upthrust shoulder and advancing head as it rose above the dip of the creek-bottom.

Then the heads began to show thicker and faster, and it left him no time for deliberation. He pumped the lever and fired until his arms ached. He chose his man and emptied his shell until the powder-smoke hung thick and acrid about the little rifle pit ,until his face was streaked and smutted with it, as though it had been lampblacked. He fired until his eyes smarted with the drifting fumes and his lungs ached with their stench. He fired until a sickening smell of scorching oil rose from the metal of his rifles and the empty shells littered the pit-bottom.

But in the end he held the dodging and shifting little denim-clad figures in check, puzzled by the fury of his fire. He swept his appointed ground clear. He allowed no worming and skulking rifleman to advance even twenty paces beyond the creek-bank.

They drew back under cover, bewildered, wondering ho wmany men that overturned car could have held The staccato of sound dwindled down to a sulky and intermittent dribble of reports. McKinnon saw it, with a shout of gratitude ,for he knew that he had reached his utmost limit.

He staggered back to gulp down great swallows of tepid water from the gasoline can which the girl was holding up for him. Then he helped her reload ,and waited for the smoke to lift.

"Have they gone?" she asked.

"No," he told her, as he swung up to his embrasure again. "But they've found out just what they've got to face!"

"What will they do?"

"It looks as though they're going to try different tactics now. They'll take their time, after this, and try to grill us out. Don't give way, please! Don't imagine——"

But he did not stop to finish, for he braced his smoke-blackened shoulders and fired, and pored afterward, and fired again, and still again.

"They think they can dishearten us, now, with sniping," he told her. "It'll be a waiting game, I'm afraid . . . . but you mustn't give way!"

The pallor of her face had disturbed and worried him. But what was disturbing him more was the thought that they might at any time bring up a field gun, and end his last and only hope.

It was this fear that clung to him, and took the marrow out of his courage, and made the long, hot hours of midday seem purgatorial in their endlessness. But still he watched and sighted and fired, and reloaded, and fired again, grimly, doggedly, pertinaciously, giving them a counter-challenge for every challenge they sent in to him.

Then midday lengthened into afternoon, and a disturbing weakness descended upon him. So he leaned against his embrasure and chewed milk tablets, and fired when he saw a moving shadow to target into ,or a threatening gun-arm to aim at, and made the white-faced girl eat her portion of the milk tablets and drink the last of the brandy and water.

And as he watched the afternoon grow older ,and the sun swung lower over Guariqui . But still he fired and reloaded and wondered if the Princeton had steamed into Puerto Locombia, and silently and devoutly prayed for help.

Then all thought of prayer went from his mind, for his squinting eyes had fallen on what looked like a salt-barrel as it appeared over the brink of the creek-bank, a ludicrous and unlooked-for thing of staves and hoops.

McKinnon watched this barrel, in wonder, for it seemed to shift about by itself. Then it began to roll slowly forward. It advanced towards the rifle pit, inch by inch, propelled by no visible human hand. It moved ponderously onward, foot by foot, as though it had been endowed with some miraculous power of locomotion.

Then it came to a stop, on a barren "hogback," high above the ground that surrounded it. But even before the betraying black finger of a rifle-end appeared cautiously and slowly above one corner of it, McKinnon knew it was a blind, a moving shelter. He knew it was a barrel filled with sand, a roughly improvised ambuscade being pushed forward by some intrepid sharpshooter from De Brigard's camp.

The man in the rifle pit watched that barrel, uneasily, frowningly, firing maliciously at it, from time to time, as it advanced and stopped and delivered its whistling challenge of lead and still crawled onward. It seemed a thing to fear and hate, like some venomous and loathsome dinosaurian reptile armoured against attack. Then the man watching it schooled himself to calmness, and fired more deliberately, studying his sight and range and trajectory, feeling his way about that incongruous and reptilious enemy with a hissing antenna of lead.

When the rifle-end showed again McKinnon fired, as calmly and judiciously as before, but this time three inches to the right of the rifle-end and the fraction of an inch lower.

He had the satisfaction of beholding a pair of hands thrown up in the air, wide apart, and of knowing that the rifle had fallen to the ground. Beyond that there was no sign. But the sand-barrel did not move again.

Then, as he watched with heavy eyes, he caught sight of a figure on horseback, circling out from what must have been the most southerly edge of De Brigard's camp, to the higher stretch of the creek-bank. He saw the horseman stop, gesticulate, and apparently give orders. Then he swung about again, and circled out of sight. But five minutes after he had done so a second line of infantry detoured from the coppice-screened fringes of the camp and crept in towards the men who had earlier in the day taken their position along the creek-bed. Each man McKinnon saw, carried a rifle. And again he wondered if the Princeton had reached Puerto Locombia, and again he secretly and desperately prayed that help would still come to them. Then he called to the girl at his side.

"They're going to try to rush us!" he explained to her, very quietly. But he found it hard to say to her just what he wanted to say.

"Can they?" she asked; her faith in him, now ,was blind and unreasoning.

"Well, they'll pay for it!" was all he had the heart to say, as he swung his reloaded rifle up to the dusty wall-top.

He did not speak again, for there was no time for it. He was firing now, quickly and yet dispassionately. He caught up one gun after the other and poured his fire into the shifting and advancing shadows cut out with cameo-like clearness in the full afternoon sunlight. He kept firing, feverishly, and yet almost unconcernedly, until the magazines were emptied and the barrels were too hot to hold. But he could no longer keep his ground clear. They were at last clearing the creek-bank, clearing it in swarms. They were finally overwhelming him, in sheer force of numbers.

Powder-smoke enveloped him. Dust and splinters flew about him. Runnels of sweat ran down his lean and grimy face. But still he kept firing, faster and faster, pouring his lead into the advancing line in a frenzy of hopelessness.

Then one of the guns jammed, irretrievably. He caught up the other, and emptied it, until the overheated steel scorched his shaking hand. But still the ragged and shouting line came on, unchecked. He had nothing but the revolvers to fall back on. So he snatched them and stood up to it, breast-high above the sand box rampart in front of him.

"Come on ,you cowards!" he exulted, drunkenly, recklessly, as he faced and watched the spitting and snapping and ever advancing line, for he knew it was the end. Then the girl dragged him down, while she reloaded, and caught up the third revolver and stood at his side, with her breast against a smoke-blackened cartridge box.

"It's the end!" he said.

"I know!" she answered, moving closer, so that her body touched his.

But the line she looked out on was not the same line that McKinnon had last seen. It had shifted and wheeled in an inexplicable side movement. It had crumpled and twisted up on itself, like leaves caught and tossed in a wind eddy.

"Look!" she said, with a sob.

For swinging about the track-curve were two flat-cars. Mounted on these cars she could see glimmering and burnished machine guns. And behind these guns stood cheering and shouting bluejackets, stabbing the air with adder-like tongues of flame as the spinning chambers were discharged and the puffing locomotive pushed them slowly upward along the narrow track.

They seemed little more than boys, those quick-moving and bright-eyed jackies. They were shouting with the foolish joy and pride of youth at the thought of its first baptism of fire. They seemed like an excursion of mad men to McKinnon. He wondered what they meant ,where they came from. But he could not give them much thought. He had other things to think of—for a wounded Locombian, a little brown-faced demon with a long-barrelled magazine rifle, was crawling towards him on a broken thigh, taking pot-shots as he came. And McKinnon knew he had to hold that man off ,and it worried him to think that he had only a revolver to do it with. But he fired and reloaded and fired, leaning out over his wall-top and hurling half-delirious imprecations into the smoke-hung air. He fought on ,to the last, like a man in a dream. All the world, to him, had become a chaotic pit of contending spirits who clamoured for his blood.

Then he was stirred and disturbed by the sudden scream of the girl at his side. Her voice seemed to come from a great distance; it smote on his ear thinly, as though heard through a wall.

"You're wounded!" she cried, foolishly, hysterically. He denied it, indifferently, and wondered why he was no longer standing beside his cartridge boxes . He saw her white and smoke-streaked face bent over his arm and heard her repeated cry of alarm as she tore away a part of his ragged shirt sleeve. He could see her fingers, when she lifted them, they were wet, and dark-red in colour. Then he knew that she was tearing some part of her dress, that she was binding and twisting a strip of linen about his arm, somewhere below the left shoulder.

She twisted and tightened it cruelly; but he was too tired to argue with her about it. He felt it would be best to humour her; she had had to endure so much for him. And it was rather pleasant ,he told himself, having her fussing about him that way. But he wished she wouldn't cry and shake and that he could explain to her how much he wanted to go to sleep. Then he was aroused by more shouts and cries, and by a voice quite close to him, which said, in wonder: "Good God, he's a white man!" Then came other men and other officers, and a thin and far-away babbling of voices, till the yellow sand where the car lay changed into a lake of swarming and crowding human beings, into a sea of little brown-faced jumping-jacks who shouted and contorted and flung foolish little red-striped army caps up in the air, gibbering and arguing and calling, all the while, in some outlandish and incomprehensible tongue.

McKinnon neither knew nor cared what it meant. He only wanted to get somewhere where it was quiet, where he could rest in peace. Then the noise grew louder again, and a shouting and cheering column of bluejackets swung up, followed by a swarthy-skinned band of horsemen, with carbines, on prancing little Peruvian ponies. McKinnon could see that they were tearing his boxes open, that they were carrying away his precious ammunition.

He tried to fight against them, but he found himself held down, and through the drifting sand dust he saw Alicia's white face bent low over him. Then somebody called out angrily, "Stand back there! Back!" and a huge hairy white hand tried to choke the breath of life out of his body by pouring what seemed liquid fire down his throat, from a leather-covered flask. This flask was quickly and mercifully knocked to one side, by an angry-faced man in white duck, who wore spectacles, and said in perfect English: "Get the poor beggar into a fiacre!" Then there was the repeated cry of "Stand back!" and "To the Hospital!" and "No; to the Palace!" and the next moment hands were hauling and lifting at his tortured body. He felt, at times, that a woman was weeping somewhere beside him. But he could not be sure of this. He heard a thin and ghostlike pound of hoofs and a rumble of wheels. And that was all he could remember.

CHAPTER XXXIII.
THE LAST WORD

McKinnon was very happy. It was six long days since they had dug the bullet out of his arm and told him to lie quiet for a while and rest up and make blood. But on this particular morning President Duran's own glimmering state coach had carried him away from the Hospital, and he had been given prompt and official permission to go to the Palace roof, where Aikens ,the Boston youth who acted as the Guariqui operator, was still struggling over his half-renovated wireless apparatus.

So McKinnon had been carried to the roof in a chair, by two of Duran's own body guard, and the white sunlight and the many tinted city and the companionship of the lonely and garrulous boy from Boston went to his head like wine, and left him foolishly and wistfully happy.

He laughed at the idea of a corrugated iron wireless station on the roof of a Palace; it seemed as incongruous to him, he told Aikens, as a Crusader smoking a Pittsburg stogie, or a monastery with mail chutes, or a Cathedral wih a cash register. Then Aikens led him to the battlemented edge of the flat roof, and showed him the arc lights that swung in Avenida Sacramento and Calle Florida ,and the new power house toward Paraiso Hill, and the statuary that gleamed through the green palms of the Parque Nacional, and the Asilo Chapai and the roof of the new Boynton Hospital, and the columned front of the Theatro Locombio. Then he drew himself up and protested that Guariqui wasn't such a one-horse town after all.

McKinnon continued to look down at Guaraqui, after Aikens had gone back to his work. He could see the iron-fenced Palace gardens, cool and shadowy and secluded-looking, in the Plaza beyond he could see the splash of water from a frond-hidden fountain, and the white statue of some unknown hero who had died in some unknown war for Locombian liberty. He could see the yellow front of the cathedral and the sun-steeped Prado white with dust. He could see the American blue-jackets, from the Princeton, who were still picketing the streets, and a bullock cart that crawled noisily over the cobblestones.

At the head of Avenida Sacramento he could see another deachment of white-helmeted marines clustered about one of the Princeton's machine guns. He could make out a scattered group of Ulloa's mounted Irregulars crawling in towards Guariqui, across the undulating, flat shadowed plain of burnt grass. He could see rows of flat houses and red-tiled roofs ,and tame buzzards perched on ridge-poles, and a lonely and high-standing royal palm or two. And beyond the sun-bathed town and the burnt plain lay the gray-green hills and the lonely blue peaks of the Cordilleras.

Then the sound of cheering floated up to him, and to the east, advancing along Calle Nacional toward the Plaza, was a long line of infantry headed by a mountain band that broke into shrill and stirring music as they detoured in past the turreted

Many Years an Invalid—Untold Agony From Headaches

Dizziness, Sinking Spells and Excessive Weakness Disappear With Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Nearly every woman will read with interest the letter of Mrs. Geo. Bradshaw, quoted below. It tells of years of great suffering from nervous Headache and other symptoms arising from weak, watery blood and a starved and exhausted condition of the nervous system.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Cosy Nook, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I am glad to state that I received benefits from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food which I failed to get any place else. I was troubled for many years, in fact from my early womanhood, with weak, watery blood, and given to dropsy. I suffered untold agonies from nervous sick headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, in fact was a semi-invalid for many years. I tried many kinds of patent medicines and got no help, and tried every new doctor that came along ,but all failed to help me. Doctors told me I had no blood, and that my heart and kidneys were diseased, and that I had so many complaints there was not much use in doctoring up one or two. Four years ago I took six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and was glad to see I felt better, and then got six more, and they have cured me of many of my complaints. When I began taking Nerve Food I weighed 110 pounds and to-day I weigh 139, and am 46 years old.

"Eat With Your Fingers If You Would Be Healthy"

LONDON, Nov. 1.—Devour your food "like a lion"—and you banish indigestion. This advice, which controverts the well-known maxim of "Eat your food slowly," is the considered opinion of three doctors as the best cure for inability to eat a square meal.

Such an unorthodox mode of dealing with dyspepsia was first suggested by a doctor in a spirit of frolic, but on talking the matter over with a Harley Street specialist, and also with a family doctor with a large London practice, it was found that doctors scout the suggestion that there is anything funny in it at all.

"It is a most extraordinary thing," the specialist said, "but I find that the patient who is allowed to eat chicken by picking it up in his fingers is the far better able to digest his food than is the invalid who is worried by a knife and fork.

"A great deal of decorous formality in eating makes for bad digestion. Eat with the fingers like a healthy savage, and you will digest your food like the savage—at any rate for a time, until the novelty has worn off.

"Probably after the novelty wears off the good effect will not be so marked, but a return to dainty feeding would then have the same effect as the other method had.

"The more like an animal you eat the more like an animal will your alimentary system behave itself, and the better it will be for your general health.

"If a man takes his meat in his fingers he can pick it with more relish," the other doctor said. "Children, whose instincts are often very sound, love to eat their food held in their fingers ,and they are right."

Famous Books Are To Be Sold By Auction

LONDON, Nov. 1.—More than 1,200 books, forming a portion of the great Huth Library ,will come under the hammer during an eight-day sale at Sotheby's this month.

Formed by Henry Huth, the well-known bibliophile and antiquary, the library was famous thirty years ago for its beautiful illuminated and rare specimens of early printed books. It has been valued at many thousands of pounds, but the intervention of the American collector in the book market, which has been such a prominent feature of recent sales, makes it impossible to guess what such a collection will realize at auction.

It may be stated ,however, that the first folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, issued in 1623, of which there is a copy in the library, has fetched as much as $18,000. The third edition of 1663, rarer still, has not yet made its highest record, and it is safe to say that all the Shakespeare folios will excite the keenest competition.

But the quarto editions of single plays are also much in favour with American buyers, who gave high prices for them in the Van Antwerp and earlier sales. Of these the collection has thirty-five, including "Lucrece," issued in 1594, of which only five perfect copies are on record.

First Edition of Shakespeare

A first edition of Shakespeare's Sonnets, 1609, and a copy of the Poems, 1640, make the section of Shakespeareana one of the most complete in existence. What characterizes the portion of the library to be sold, in addition to the above, is the number of quaint and rare old publications—old plays, broadsides, theological and scientific works—of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

One rare old treasure is John Milton's copy of "Britannia's Pastorals," by William Browne, with copious notes, believed to be in the poet's autograph. A first edition and other early copies of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" will interest admirers of the tinsmith author.

Many curious editions of the Bible, too, will have their attractions for certain collectors. There are beautiful old manuscript copies of the Latin Vulgate, some of them exquisitely illuminated, and numerous printed versions in various languages.

"Life of Christ," 1488

When it is remembered that $11,125 was paid for the famous "Regal Book," one can understand the value of volumes proceeding from Caxton's press. The Huth collection contains the "Life of Christ" of St. Bonaventura, printed by the first English printer in 1488, while a choice old fifteenth century block-book is, needless to say, also of the greatest rarity.

Some volumes of old broadside ballads are exceedingly quaint ,and they are valuable as records of the popular ditties and mirth of our forefathers. They contain such pieces as "The Fryer well fitted," or "A merry jest that once befel," "How a maid put a Fryer to cool in the well."

It is impossible to take leave of this intensely interesting collection of books without mention of the set of first and early editions of Lord Byron's works, including "Childe Harold," and also of the rare Kilmarnock edition of Burns's Poems, which should draw many buyers from north of the Tweed.

The Death Of Kyrle Bellew

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, Nov. 3.—Kyrie Bellew, the actor ,died here at five o'clock yesterday morning of pneumonia. Funeral services will be held here and the body sent to New York.

Mr. Bellew was in Toronto acting the part of Raffles last March. His life has been one long romance, brim full of vicissitudes. Born in Prescott, England, March 28, 1855, the son of the Rev. J. C. M. Bellew, who was well known as a public reader, and was the friend of Dickens and Thackerey. Harold spent the first years of his childhood in India, where his father was a chaplain at the time of the Mutiny. The hill station near Darjeeling ,where they lived at the time, was attacked by the rebels, but the British troops arrived just in time to save the British residents, who were hard pressed by the enemy. After their return to England Harold's father, who had been appointed to St. Mark's, Hamilton Terrace, was made a Queen's chaplain. He went on an expedition to Palestine for the London Morning Post, and later, with two other clergymen, started a school in St John's Wood, in connection with St. Mark's.

It was at that time that Harold first became acquainted with the stage. Fechter, the great German actor, daily visited Harold's father to take lessons in elocution, and Harold often heard his father drill the actor in the proper rendition of Hamlet's soliloquy. It was Fechter who first taught young Bellew how to fence.

Entered British Navy.

Harold entered the British Navy as cadet, and served seven years, when he entered a commercial establishment, with which he remained but a short time. Equipped with a strong letter of introduction to Gavin Duffy, who had offered him a position as census collector, young Bellew went to Australia. He never became census collector, but, instead, became lecturer in a panoramic show at Melbourne. This lasted seven weeks, and at the expiration of that time, Bellew made an unsuccessful effort to obtain a position on the Melbourne Theatre.

When the great gold rush came, Bellew followed the motley crowd to the goldfields. He had good luck, and accumulated quite a little fortune; but it did not last long, and he was compelled to make his living as best he could. His occupations were of a varied nature, sometimes working in the mines, sometimes on a station, at other times tramping, begging, sheep-herding, chopping wood, or drawing water. For a while he made a good living painting tavern signs, and when the fever broke out, he and his chum started a cemetery, acting as sextons and undertakers, and reading the service over the dead.

A Police Reporter.

After his return to Melbourne, young Bellew worked for a while as police reporter on a daily newspaper. But soon tired of the work, returning to England, working his way home as their mate. His father had died in the meantime, and he had no other near relatives living. By mere chance he came across an advertisement in the Daily Telegraph in which a man named Charles Barrington asked for a light comedian to act with Miss Helen Barry in "Clancarty." Bellew had no coat besides the one belonging to his mate's uniform, but he cut off the gilt buttons, replacing them with other less conspicuous buttons before he called at the Adelphi. Curiously Barrington never asked him directly whether he had ever been on the stage. Bellew made a good impression and was engaged at a salary of two pounds a week. He signed the contract under his Christian names, "Harold Kyrle." Ten days later he played the part of Lord Woodstock in "Clancarty."

After he had gathered a little more experience Bellew went to Dublin, where he obtained a part in "Led Astray," in which he made a highly favourable impression. His next venture was the part of the heavy villain in W. S. Gilbert's "Engaged." His work attracted attention, and in 1881 A. M. Palmer cabled to him from New York, offering him an engagement. Bellew came to New York and called on Palmer ,who received him rudely and asked him to play a part in "Diana," a play which had utterly failed in Paris. Bellew declined the part, and after a violent quarrel with Palmer, left New York and returned to England, where he was engaged to play in "Civil War" at the Gaiety, with Mrs. Brown Potter

With Mrs. Brown Potter.

He returned to America in 1886, when he became leading man in Wallack's Theatre, New York. In 1887 he went to England once more, and, in partnership with Mrs. Brown Potter, made an extended tour through all English-speaking countries. In 1900 he headed an exploring expedition in Northern Queensland, and after his return to the United States toured the country at the head of his own company, playing many parts with invariable success. Among the best known roles were those in "A Gentleman of France," Romeo in "Romeo and Juliet," "Raffles," Brigadier Gerard in the play of the same name, and still later in "The Thief," when he appeared as joint star with Miss Margaret Illington at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, in 1907.

The Peerless Peninsular

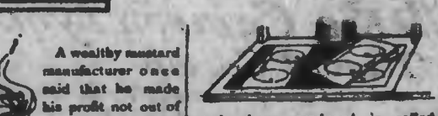
A wealthy mustard manufacturer once said that he made his profit not out of what people ate, but what they left on their plates.

The coal dealer might say about the same thing.

It's not the coal you use that buys his six-cylinder car, but the coal that goes up the chimney.

You might as well save some of that coal.

Building ranges to do good cooking and at the same time to save coal has kept us thinking and working over in Preston for upwards of 50 years. Every year improvements in range construction have been made. The flues have been widened here; a wall made thicker there; weight reduced in one spot and added to another. But every change has made the oven heat with less fuel and the construction of the range strong and durable. The perfect range which these years of study have produced is called "Peninsular."



Nickel ornaments, the number of lids, the special features or the size do not affect the internal construction or honest materials and workmanship that go into the "Peninsular." So that when buying one, a housewife may feel free to consult her own tastes as regards finish and appearance. If the range is "Peninsular" she will know that it will give her good baking for the least amount of coal.

The Peerless

The PEERLESS Peninsular is a modern cast-iron range. Modern, because it has all the advantages of cast-iron and none of its disadvantages. In fact, it should be called a combination range—a combination of cast-iron steel. It has the firm close-fitting parts, the durable everlasting frame and the cosy home-like appearance, dear to all women; but—and here it differs from other cast-iron ranges—it also has a quick oven—an oven that heats evenly on every side, top and bottom—a square oven big enough to cook four pies at once; and it has a drop-oven door, which is not usual on a cast-iron range.

The PEERLESS Peninsular may be had with a steel warming closet and hot water reservoir and with a low closet under the oven for pots, pans and irons.

The PEERLESS is a perfect beauty and has many a convenience not found on other ranges.

Take the top of the Peerless Peninsular.

It is made in three separate sections which are interchangeable and which slide along so as to put out whenever you want to clean the flues.

In most ranges the oven is either "on" or "off." That is, it is getting full heat or none at all. The Peerless Peninsular oven is regulated by means of a sliding damper so as to get just as much heat as you need. This is another way you save fuel.

Get "The Cost"

"THE COST of a Range" tells more about these Peninsular Ranges—not a list of pictures and prices, but a book showing that the after-cost is the big cost and how the "Peninsular" cuts it down. Yours, for the asking.

THE CROOKED SEAM

An Adventure of Peter Crewe—"The Man with the Camera Eyes."

By Harold Carter.

(Copyright, 1911, by W. G. Chapman in the United States and Great Britain.)

The story told me by Sir Arnold Blythe appeared to contain the elements of some mystery the solution of which required the aid of Peter Crewe. He had assisted me in the unraveling of many a case which baffled the detective forces both of New York city and London, chiefly by virtue of his invaluable gift of optical visualization. I therefore made an appointment at my office for the following day, when the two men were to meet.

"Now, sir, will you repeat your story as you told it to me yesterday?" I said to the Englishman, after the formalities of the introduction had been complied with.

Sir Arnold was an Englishman of international reputation as an expert on ancient textiles. He had, in fact, come to New York at the invitation of Phineas Boone, the multi-millionaire, to assist him in the classification of his rare collection of Oriental rugs.

"You had a valuable rug destroyed recently by vandals?" asked Crewe, before the Englishman could commence his story. "There was an account of it in last Sunday's papers, together with illustrations of the mutilated corner."

"Yes, but it is not of that I wish to speak," replied Sir Arnold. "The matter is in the hands of the police, who hold out every hope of discovering the criminal. I want to tell you of my dog."

"The fact is," he said, "that both my wife and I are being shadowed by Syrians. She is almost prostrated with fear and anxiety, and the matter must be cleared up at all hazards. And the chief objective of the wretches seems to be my dog, or my wife's dog, rather."

"Only last week," Sir Arnold answered. "Lady Blythe was passing down Broadway on Thursday afternoon and had just reached its intersection with Thirty-sixth street when her attention was attracted by a Syrian man, who was offering some puppies for sale upon the corner. My wife is fond of animals and of an impulsive nature. One of the creatures came fawning toward her, and she could not resist the temptation to purchase it. The animal is only a mongrel and the fellow demanded an undue price for it; finally he threw in a pretty Syrian dog blanket, of modern make but an excellent imitation of an old Persian weave. This clinched the bargain, and Lady Blythe bought the beast and took it home.

"On the following morning, when she had the creature on a leash in the park, she noticed that she was being followed by the same Syrian. She sat down upon a bench to rest and the man passed her, traversed a short distance, turned back and whistled. Immediately the dog broke from her control and set off at full speed toward its former owner. Happily a gentleman who had witnessed the occurrence gave chase, caught the beast and restored it to Lady Blythe, while the fellow succeeded in making his escape. Much upset by this occurrence, Lady Blythe returned home.

"The next day she took the dog out again, but, on reaching Fifty-ninth street once more perceived the same man following her. She was so unnerved at the sight that she called a taxicab and came home and went to bed. That night a death threat was received. The dog must be delivered, blanket and all, at a certain spot, the following day, or our lives would be forfeited.

"I called in the police and it was arranged that a messenger should take the dog to the place agreed upon. But nobody arrived; however, on the next morning another letter was received by me. It was signed with a bloody hand and in effect repeated the former menace, but still more strongly. The creature is valueless; the blanket is worth, at most, two dollars, and I am wholly at a loss to understand the cause of this persecution."

"This rug that was mutilated who cut with a pair of scissors," said Crewe. "Did not that strike you as strange?"

"I would prefer to discuss one thing at a time," replied Sir Arnold. "The mutilation of Mr. Boone's rug has nothing to do with the matter I have been speaking of."

"Nevertheless, I would like to hear about the rug," persisted Crewe. "There may be some immediate connection. Will you tell me, Sir Arnold, the circumstances of that affair?"

"There is nothing to tell, beyond what the papers said," answered the Englishman tersely. "One of the rugs, a Persian textile of great antiquity, had a corner cut away with a pair of scissors, leaving a jagged tear. The act was perpetrated some time after midnight on Wednesday, and the perpetrator succeeded in making his escape undetected."

"The police have discovered no clue?"

"So far none. They have searched every rug depository in the city in vain. It seems evident that the criminal has succeeded in making good his escape."

"But you said the police hold out every hope of discovering him."

"Yes, of course, sooner or later the mutilated fragment will reappear somewhere, probably in the possession of a peddler. But to come back to the dog——"

"I have here a photograph of the rug," persisted Crewe, drawing a sheet of newspaper from his breast pocket. "The matter interested me exceedingly." He handed it to Sir Arnold. "What are those arabesques immediately above the tear?" he asked.

"Meaningless and conventional Persian borders," answered the Englishman. "They are a feature of all rugs of a certain century. That border was cut off by the marauder, apparently aimlessly. But now, sir, I insist upon discussing this affair of the dog. What do you advise me to do?"

"Let me see him and his blanket," Crewe answered. "When would it be convenient for us to call?"

"You can come back with me at once," Sir Arnold answered. "And if you can solve the mystery I shall be most grateful, and Mr. Boone will——"

Crewe waved away the suggestion of the reward. He rose and took his hat. "Are you ready, Langton?" he asked.

I rose and we two followed Sir Arnold out of my office. We descended to the street and took a Lexington avenue car to the millionaire's town house, which was temporarily occupied by the Englishman and his wife. Once inside Crewe asked to be taken to the collection of textiles.

Sir Arnold led us into the chamber in which they were spread but for classification. The mutilated rug was not at first apparent, for the injury had been much slighter than we had supposed. Only one extreme corner had been removed, having been cut out in a zig-zag fashion with a pair of blunt scissors, and the woolen threads were curled and warped over the texture. Crewe studied the rug long and earnestly.

"The arabesque was in the part removed?" he asked. "Then why was there no similar border woven into the fabric upon the other corners?"

Here Sir Arnold felt himself upon safe ground. This was his province. He turned upon Crewe somewhat pompously.

"My good man," he said, "the craze for evenness of design did not, most fortunately afflict the Persians of the date when this fabric was made. The weaver chose to place a border upon one corner of the rug alone, and that fact, in itself, fixes the date of it beyond all doubt. And now, if you have quite satisfied your curiosity, will you look at my dog or not?"

Before Crewe could answer there came a scampering of feet along the passage and the animal bounded into the room with many demonstrations of affection for its new master. It was a curly mongrel, of no particular breed, and worth perhaps fifty cents in the open market. Trailing from its back was the dog blanket. Crewe stooped, unfastened it, and placed it upon the table.

"And this, you say, is of modern workmanship?" he asked. "What do those Persian words signify?"

"That," replied Sir Arnold, "literally translated, is: 'May the wealth of Arziban and the treasures of Mulik's castle go to the possessor.' It is a purely conventional expression, woven into their blankets by the modern Syrians in imitation of the ancients, and wishes prosperity to the owner."

"And the blanket cannot possible be of the same date as the rug?" asked Crewe.

Sir Arnold smiled in a patronizing way.

"You can take it from me," he said, "that there is no possible connection between the rug and the blanket. They were made several hundred years apart. Do you mean to suggest that the man who mutilated the rug sold me the blanket?"

"Offhand, I should say that it is extremely unlikely," answered Crewe.

"Then will you tell me, sir, the meaning of this persecution, and why the former owner of the dog desires him back again, and why the blanket is an essential feature of the demand?"

"My God! There he is again!" he cried.

We looked in the direction indicated and saw a man of swarthy countenance standing on the opposite side of the road and watching us intently. As soon as he saw that he was perceived he shook his hand menacingly toward us and leaped on a passing street car. There was no possibility of capturing him; before we could have reached the door he would have been out of sight.

"My explanation," I said, when our host had recovered from the unexpected shock, "would be that you are the victims of an insane Syrian who imagines that you are keeping his property from him, and, having mutilated your rug, he now desires the dog's blanket."

"But he sold my wife the dog," cried Sir Arnold. "And he wants the dog as well. Confound it all, there's no sense in the affair at all."

"Let me advise you," said Crewe. "Send the dog out by a messenger boy, with instructions that it is to be delivered to the first man who asks for it."

Sir Arnold was thoroughly exasperated. "That is similar to the advice of the police," he cried. "The dog is my property, and let me tell you I would rather be murdered than abate one jot of my rights. Do you think I am going to be cheated by a dirty Syrian dog peddler? If that is all you can advise me I might as well never have consulted you."

"Then let me warn you that your life is in grave danger," answered Crewe. "Think the matter over and, for your wife's sake, if not for your own, alter your mind. Good afternoon." He clapped on his hat and strode toward the door, leaving me the task of mollifying the Englishman, which I did with only partial success.

"It would have been impossible to assist that pig-headed old gentleman," said Crewe to me as we strolled homeward. "The only thing to do is to await developments."

"Do you think that the matetr of the rug and the blanket are connected?" I asked him.

"But he sold it to him," I cried, almost as exasperated as Sir Arnold had been himself when uttering the same protest.

"That makes it most improbable that the man who sold the dog was the same man that mutilated the rug. To be frank with you, Langton, my sympathies are more than half with the latter. But as for the scoundrelly dog seller, who betrayed his friend's confidence, if we can find him and have him lodged in jail, we shall not only put an end to the persecution but be enabled to restore the mutilated fragment to Sir Arnold."

"Do you suspect where it is?" I asked.

"I know where it is."

"Then why do you not restore it to its owner?"

Crewe stopped short and regarded me benignantly.

"Because," he said, "if I did so his life would not be worth three days' purchase. It is one of those cases where I must sacrifice my reputation as a detective to save my client. I hope that his dog is stolen, that the blanket is stolen and is never found. Unless we can find the dog seller," he added. "That would be the most satisfactory conclusion of all. Come, let us look for him."

"Where? In the Syrian quarter?"

"As far as possible from the Syrian quarter," answered Crewe. "You remember him?"

I shook my head. "I only caught a glimpse of him through the window," I protested.

"But you saw that he was dressed in blue, that he was freshly shaved, and that a pair of scissors bulged in his coat pocket?" asked Crewe with genuine eagerness.

"You may have seen these things. I saw only a ragged, dirty Italian-looking man. But even if you can thus picture him, how will you locate him?"

"Well," said Crewe, "since the Syrian quarter lies far down town, and he naturally wishes to avoid it——"

"Why should he wish to avoid it?"

"He will not leave that Lexington avenue car until it is well uptown. Now, since it is almost a matter of existence to him to keep watch upon Sir Arnold, he will take the Lexington avenue car downtown again this evening. In consequence, all that we need do is to watch the cars. And the best way will be to take a car uptown and keep our eyes fixed upon all cars that pass us."

I could make neither head nor tail of Crewe's reasoning. But I knew that he had his own ways of procedure, and that, however unintelligible they seemed to me, there was always some motive in them deeper than I could fathom. Accordingly I went with him; we boarded the next car that came along and rode uptown to the terminus. But though we passed many cars there was no Syrian on them.

"He may, of course, have left the car at some intermediate point," he said. "Well, sooner or later we will have him. He will probably attempt some disguise. The police will never know a Syrian from an Italian when he puts on a soft felt hat and a flowing tie. The matter is——"

He broke off, for a newsboy had sprung on the footboard of the car and shoved an evening paper into our faces. Confronting me, in big, staring headlines, were the words, "Armenians in Duel. One Dead, One Dying."

I snatched the paper from the boy, flung him a coin, and opened it. A few lines told the story. At One Hundred and Second street an unknown Armenian had been about to descend from a Lexington avenue car when another of his nationality leaped forward and plunged a knife into his throat. In his dying struggles the man had wrested the knife from the murderer and driven it home into his side, inflicting a fatal wound. The murdered man lived but a few moments; the murderer had been conveyed to the Unsectarian Hospital, where he lay dying. He had refused to make an ante-mortem statement and had quickly lapsed into a condition of coma, from which there was small probability of his awakening.

Crewe laid the paper down. "That is the end of Sir Arnold's troubles," he said. "Come, let us go back to him."

"You think the murdered men were the agents in all these happenings?" I asked.

"The murderer was the man who mutilated the rug," he answered. "The murdered man was the dog-seller who turned dog-stealer."

We descended from the car in front of the Boone mansion and were speedily shown into the presence of Sir Arnold Blythe. He had been called from his dinner to receive us and was not disposed to be cordial. He took the paper from me with a gesture of weariness.

"Your rug mutilator has killed your dog-seller and lies dying," said Peter Crewe. "You will not be troubled by either of them further."

"That sounds good," he said, contemptuously. "And now, since you have solved my problem with so much ingenuity, perhaps you will be so kind as to restore the missing fragment of the rug to me."

"I will with pleasure," answered Crewe, "on one condition. "Will you give me the dog blanket, to do as I please with it?"

Sir Arnold indicated the blanket, which still lay upon the table. "It is at your disposal," he answered. "And when, pray, may I expect the corner of the rug?"

"Immediately," Crewe answered, drawing a little penknife from his pocket. He placed the point to the dog blanket and, with a few deft motions, cut it in half, diagonally. He held up one corner to Sir Arnold.

"Here is your missing fragment," he said calmly.

I gasped. Sir Arnold gasped and stood, holding up the corner and stupidly gazing at it. Then, as in a dream, he walked over to the rug and placed the fragment against the fabric. It fitted exactly. It was, beyond all doubt, the missing corner. Presently he regained his self-possession.

"Well, Mr. Crewe," he said, extending his hand, "you have got the better of me. And now the best amends that I can make to you is to ask you and your friend to join me at dinner. You will, I am sure, excuse the absence of Lady Blythe, who is still confined to her room. And if a bottle of '48 port can induce you to let me in on the secret, why——"

And the blunt, short-spoken Englishman proved the most delightful guest that I ever met. After the coffee had been brought in and the cigars lighted Crewe expounded his theory to us.

"I do not pretend to be infallible," he said, "and it is possible that I am wrong. If you can hit upon a happier solution you are at liberty to adopt it, for it seems evident that the secret will perish with the murderer. But here is how the matter struck me." He turned to me. "Langton," he said, "what was your impression when you looked at the dog blanket?"

"That it was a dog blanket," I replied. "I saw nothing peculiar about it."

"Did you not see that it had a crooked seam?"

I shook my head.

"Nor that the seam ran in a series of zig-zags exactly corresponding to the zig-zag cut upon the mutilated rug?"

"I confess that I did not notice that."

Crewe smiled tolerantly. "Well," he said, "it is inexplicable to me that you should not have seen it. It seemed as plain as Pike's Peak that here was the missing fragment, right under the eyes of our host himself. And by the way, Sir Arnold, that dog blanket was not an imitation Persian, but, as you see now, a genuine Persian. Moreover, the other half of the dog blanket had originally formed part of the original rug. In fact, in joining the two together, the Armenian, as we must now call the supposed Syrian, was merely replacing what had been removed centuries ago. Again, the 'arabesques,' the supposed meaningless border, when joined to the other half, proved to be the top portions of the Persian lettering. And this inscription, far from being a conventional wish, was, in fact, an ancient deed.

"To be succinct, the original rug was what is called a chirograph. It was a deed to 'the wealth of Arziban and the treasure of Mulik's castle.' Each party to the deed retained one-half of this woven document, which was slit in such a way that it could only be restored by the two owners fitting the halves together. This effectually prevented any forger from presenting a spurious fragment and claiming the property.

"Apparently, at some remote period, the owner of one portion, fearing the loss of his piece of the rug, had it cunningly woven into one corner of the larger rug which came into your possession. But the legend lingered and the family which inherited the other half of the deed always hoped to fit the two pieces together and thus some day recover the property. Finally the one half came into the possession of the man whom we will call Armenian A.

"In company with a friend he set sail for New York to recover the second fragment of the deed. He learned that it was in Mr. Boone's possession and succeeded in stealing it. But he knew that the police would certainly discover it. There was no place to hide his trophy. Thereupon he hit upon a most ingenious scheme. Having sewed together the two fragments, thus completing the deed, he induced Armenian B, his friend, to place it over a dog and sell the creature upon the streets. He was to keep watch over the animal and, as soon as the police search had been concluded, to steal it from its owner. By some extraordinary chance Lady Blythe became the purchaser of the dog and, with it, obtained the deed, in the form of a dog-blanket.

"Meanwhile Armenian B, the dog-seller, elated by the possibility of becoming sole owner of 'the wealth of Arziban and the treasures of Mulik's castle,' gave his friend the slip. He wanted all for himself. He did not let him know who the purchaser was, or where she lived. Had he done so the two together would indubitably have managed to regain the animal. Armenian B played a lone hand for several days, but the man whom he had betrayed succeeded in locating him this afternoon. The consequence of their encounter is now known to you. I think you will no longer be troubled, Sir Arnold Blythe, and you can restore the rug to Mr. Phineas Boone intact, and with it the fabled properties in Persia, if he should care to put in a claim to them, for the other half of the deed is also yours."

"I have been wondering how you gained your knowledge of rugs," he said. "No man but one is able to controvert my judgment. Are you the man? Are you the Crewe who wrote a monograph on 'The Rugs of Kurdistan and the Lower Caucasus?'"

Here the conversation became too technical for me. I have no interest in the ravings of rug lovers. The rest of the evening passed, so far as I was concerned, less pleasantly.

She noticed that she was being followed by the same Syrian.

CARRETA HAS LONG HISTORY

Ancient Indian Vehicle That Has Been in Use Over Two Hundred Years.

The ancient carreta, now in the exhibit room of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, has had an eventful history, as wagons go. It was the property of Alfonso, a Tesuque Indian, eighty-five years old. Alfonso said it had belonged to his great-grandfather and that it had been exhibited at a local fiesta years before as the oldest carreta in the neighborhood. From these facts, well substantiated, and the great age to which Indians live, as a rule, this ancient carreta is estimated to be much over 200 years old. It was purchased by Captain Newton Chittenden, a noted Indian explorer, antiquarian and ethnologist, now living in Pomona, Cal.

On November 22, 1896, this old time cart left Redlands, Cal., on its own wheels and reached Los Angeles December 15, a distance of over sixty miles. Captain Chittenden accompanied it, camping on the way and walked most of the distance, watching with anxious eyes to see that it did not fall to pieces, like the "deacon's wonderful one-horse shay," from its great age. But it survived the journey in good shape and was hauled to the Chamber of Commerce exhibit room, where, sheltered from wind and weather, it may remain a possible 200 years more.

The wheels are made of cross sections of a sycamore tree, 28 inches in diameter and about six inches thick at the outer rim. The hubs are of one piece with the body of the wheels and are roughly extended out to a length of 18 inches. Wooden pins through the axle secure the clumsy wheels. The body is made of cottonwood, excepting the tongue, which is a twisted and gnarled stick of mesquite four feet long. It was driven by oxen hitched to the horns with thongs of rawhide. Its counterpart may be seen in the country districts of Mexico today, drawn in a similar manner, as this was when new, 200 years and more ago.

Aeroplane Is Simple.

The working parts of the modern flying machine are infinitely fewer in number than those of the automobile, the motor boat, the railroad locomotive or the steamship. Far more complex is the operation of a high-powered motor car than that of a high-powered aeroplane. Far more delicately adjusted are the thousands of parts of the steam or electric locomotive than the mechanism of the flying machine. It is this very simplicity of construction and operation that has enabled the aeroplane to outdo in continuous motion every other known form of conveyance, except steamers, motor boats and sailing ships, and these last named are able to maintain their motion only because of their huge driving mechanism, out of all proportion to the bulk that is propelled.

HER WORDS SPOILED IT ALL

Speculation About the Sweet-Faced Waitress Died Out Entirely When She Spoke.

There were tables, also, of course, for it was really a very good restaurant and one that I had consistently patronized during my ante-nuptial career, but now that wife and the baby had gone to the country for two weeks (sans any tra-las, tra-loo accompaniment on my part, be assured) its seemed to me that I owed it to reminiscent bachelor days to again sit at the horseshoe-shaped counter during my temporary grasswidowhood.

A sweet-faced woman of about 45 took my order and I found myself busy speculating upon the strange vicissitudes of fate that might reduce a woman of her age and obvious refinement to such a sphere of action in her declining years.

Had she loved, married and buried the one sweetheart of her youth, or was she still longing for the "letter that never came?" The wistful expression of her soft brown eyes inclined me to the latter belief.

However, I had finished my modest lunch and was waiting more or less patiently for my check. When I finally caught her eye she moved over to the counter, and, after feeling first in one and then in the other pocket of her immaculately white apron and slapping various portions of the ample anatomy without visible result, murmured, quite audibly:

"Where the dickens did I put them checks?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

All in the Use.

Even the best things, ill used, become evils, and, contrarily, the worst things used well prove good. A good tongue used to deceit; a good wit used to defend error; a strong arm to murder; authority to oppress; a good profession to dissemble; are all evil. Even God's own word is the sword of the spirit, which, if it kills not our vices, kills our souls. Contrariwise (as poisons are used to wholesome medicines), afflictions and sins, by a good use, prove so gainful as nothing more. Words are as they are taken, and things are as they are used. There are even cursed blessings.—Bishop Hall.

Proved Himself Worthy.

Davis Shupe, son of the captain, dislikes mollycoddles. When he saw another boy come to school a rainy day, remove his rubber boots and put on slippers, Davis took his own dripping umbrella and stood it in the other boy's boots, taking turns so as to divide the drippings impartially. After school, however, the boy with the rubber boots unhesitatingly put his feet into the wet boots, whereat he was admitted to full fellowship.

"You're all right, kid," adjudged Davis Shupe. "You c'n belong!"—Cleveland Leader.

Would Change Old Custom.

The custom of distinguishing married from unmarried women by giving them different titles is antiquated and undignified and must be abolished, according to the German Mothers' society of Berlin. A correspondent of the Chicago News says the society has adopted resolutions calling for the reform, in which it says: "The classification of women into those who have been through the marriage ceremony and those who have not is improper and unethical. Every man, irrespective of his marital status, is called 'Herr,' and every woman who respects the dignity of her sex should demand to be called 'Frau.' This would be a great step toward the uplifting of our ethical ideals." As there is no legal obstacle to applying the title of "Frau" to all women, the society petitions the authorities to make a beginning by employing only that title in all official communications.

HEROISM OF THE LIEUTENANT

A Short Story

Two men were lying in the same tente d'abri—lying quite close together, because there is not much room in a fifteen pound tent; moreover, it was bitterly cold. They were two subalterns of the Royal Reds, and this was the first whole night they had had in bed during the last week—in fact, the regiment was just in from picketing a ridge which covered the camping ground of the division. It was a comparatively quiet night after those they had spent at the heel of the outlying pickets, and even now, though the last post had gone some hours previously, the skulking Pathan was dropping bullets with the regularity of minute guns into the sleeping mass of camp. Martini bullets whistled weirdly in the stillness of the night, followed by the busy spit of the Lee-Metford ,or the boring whirr of the soft lead Snider. Most of them were as harmless as aimless;, but the boys, as they lay in their bivouac, often heard the sickening thud of the landing bullet, followed by the cry ,now so common, of "Hospital! Hospital!" At intervals, one side or another of the camp would burst into a rattle of fire ,as the men at the breastworks located the enemy's flashes or made out the movement of dark, prowling forms within range. Such was this warfare on the Indian frontier—such that it mattered not how much a man had been under fire in the day he lay down at night with the knowledge that he was still equally exposed.

"Isn't this beastly?" said Percy Jones, as he rolled closer to his companion. "There's another drabi hit."

"Yes, I'm sick of it," said Austin. "I'm sick of it all, and my heart yearns for the flesh pots of Pindi Club bar."

"I'd give anything to be back," said Jones, "or at least to have a decent show. Here I've been under fire without intermission day or night for the last three weeks, and I don't believe I've seen an Afridi, dead or alive, in the whole time. These weapons of precision are the very devil. I'm all for peace, or a decent show when you can see the man you're to have a smack at."

"Love or war, you mean," said Austin, nudging him violently with his elbow. "I think it's a mighty good thing that you got neither, because if you'd stayed longer in Pindi you'd have come to wholesale grief. The impertinence of a second lieutenant falling in love, and with a pretty girl ,too! And, my young friend, if we had Dargai over again, you'd be shot; you don't get off twice like that."

Percy Jones pulled his blanket and waterproof sheet closer round him and thought of the letter he had in his pocket—a letter from a little fair-haired girl in Pindi—a letter which was straightforward and simple, and yet between the lines of which he loved to think he could read. She, too, had heard of what he had done at Dargai, though he had never told her. How ,during that awful pause as the regiment had lain with their dead and wounded a few yards from them, so close that they could hear the groans and curses of the dying and the wails for help of the less injured, the youngest subaltern in the regiment, unable to forbear, had leaped up, and facing that awful fire, half dragged, half carried, the nearest wounded man back into cover. His life had been charmed, for a hideous hail of lead swept past him: but though the man he sought to save was struck again three times, he returned back to cover with his burden without a scratch upon his own body.

She had heard all this ,for the letter conveyed a gentle remonstrance, and told him for his own sake to do no more than was his duty. Yet he loved to think that when she wrote "his own sake" she meant her own as well; and in spite of the occasional bullets the boy slept with a peaceful mind.

The Royal Reds were out all the next morning covering the usual foraging party up the valley ,and as Austin's company fell down from the spur they had held while the mules were being loaded up with grass and grain, both men and officers were congratulating themselves that there had been no enemy about. The company formed up at the foot of the hill to wait and cover the machine guns and their escort as they came down from the opposite spur.

"This is a record day," said Austin to his subaltern, Percy Jones. "I believe we shall get back to camp without firing a short and without a casualty. It really looks as if these politicals were working some settlement."

"Shall be mighty pleased if they do, as I want to get back. I shall go for the staff corps."

Austin, who had been watching the opposite hill, dropped his field glass to the full extent of the lanyard and turned suddenly upon the subaltern. "Why, what's the reason of that? Your governor has plenty of stuff, hasn't he?"

"He's beastly rich. It isn't that; but I think our old man's down on me. He was ugly about that missing rifle."

"Don't talk rot! You youngsters always take things too much to heart. He's no more down on you than on anybody else."

"Yes he is. What does he shoot me about for like this? I haven't had two years' service and I have been in every company in the regiment. It doesn't give a man a chance when he's moved about like this. Besides, suppose I wanted to marry—— Hello, something's up!"

A couple of shots rang out from the opposite ridge, and in a minute the whole crest line was dotted with puffs of white smoke. It was the same old story again; the tribesmen, with their wonderful instinct for taking cover, had remained unseen over the reverse of the crest line while their watchman had signalled that the retrograde movement to camp had commenced. Waiting, before they took the initiative, till the mountain guns had limbered up and were well off the covering position they had held all day ,the tribesmen had now suddenly crowned the crest line of the spur which the machine guns and escort had evacuated, and were pouring a rapid fire upon the Reds as they caught them half way down the hill. In a moment Austin gave his company the range and opened a covering fire at seventeen hundred yards; but long range volleys from one company avail little to keep down the fire of a force of skirmishers who knew every inch of the country, and who take their positions accordingly, without formation. It was going badly with the machine gun detachment, for they were hung up on the steep hillside, and by the opening fire four men had been hit. Knowing this, the enemy were pressing down upon them, trusting that if they could close upon the party their mountain guns could not help them. They had chosen their time admirably, because by the time a section of the battery came into action they were almost mixed with our men. It was a moment for action on the part of individual commanders. Austin seeing at a glance that the gun detachment was beyond the aid of artillery fire, ceased firing ,and turning to his subaltern, said:

"Jones, take the right half company, and under the cover of that spur on the left work up as high as you can, and you'll turn their flank. I'll cover you with the other half company. Off you get. Take them at the double."

It was rough work, but the men knew that a company of their regiment was in difficulties, and they raced across the nullah bed. Jones nursed his men for a moment at the foot of the hill, and then they slanted up the spur. For a hundred yards they were unseen; but then the enemy, who were closing up on the right, ran into them. It was a brisk two minutes, and Jones lost a man: but one party of tribesmen, at least, had been surprised.

Creeping along a ledge, Jones' party could hear the voices of their own men as they stood by the Maxim and the rocks splintered and dusted around them as the enemy they had driven sought to take change for their first discomfiture. And then for the first time it dawned upon the boy subaltern what a serious position he was in—but for the whistle of Austin's volley above his head, he and his half company were alone in the midst of the enemy. He could not afford to wait, so starting to his feet he shouted:

"Open magazines—for the gun, boys!" And as the men leaped to their feet, the sound of the first boom of the mountain gun reverberated up against them, followed by the spattering report of bursting shrapnel. "Thank God!" said the boy, and they bounded down to where they knew they would find the Maxim detachment. There were fifty yards of sloping hillside, and the subaltern saw that the detachment had been beaten back and had left the gun, for it was surrounded by a mob of hillmen. "The bayonet, men—the bayonet!" he shouted, and in a moment they closed. What quite happened no one could say. It was all too rapid for words; but as they stood in a group around the gun, the red blood trickling from the silver steel, the colour-sergeant put his hand on Jones' shoulder and said:

"We cannot stay, sir; we have six men hit ,and the hill is full of them Pathans."

Percy Jones was himself again; he heard the steady boom of rapid artillery fire from the nullah below; and knew that help was at hand. Turning to the colour-sergeant:

"Graham, take the men and wounded down—straight down towards the battery; you will meet the supports." Then addressing his panting men: "Five volunteers to stand by the gun with me."

Like one man, those who were not attending to the wounded crowded around their officer, saying, "Here, sir." It was a moment for selection, so he chose the five nearest and ordered the others down. They had barely got the wounded over the ridge when the checked enemy refound the range, so, pressing their backs against the flat of the rock, the six men waited for the tribesmen to make a second rush.

But the shrapnel from the battery was now gaily bursting along the hill crest, and the supports, extended, were working up the hillside; and as Percy Jones adjusted his glasses he could see that it would be but a few minutes before the enemy would be driven off the hill.

"You're hit, sir," said the man next to him; and for the first time he noticed that the whole side of his tunic was wet with blood, and as soon as he knew this he felt the pain. The man undid his officer's belt and opened his tunic, and as he did so the boy reeled and fell fainting to the ground.

* * * * * * *

Percy Jones was sitting up for the first time since he had been in Nowshera, a base hospital, when the curtain was lifted and Austin stepped in. He was bright and smiling as usual, and looked the picture of health in spite of the fact that his arm was in a sling.

"Hallo, old chap! But whatever has happened to you?" said Jones.

"Oh, I've not been hit. I'm not a hero. I've only had my arm broken by a kicking mule."

"Well, tell me all about it. I'm dying to hear about the regiment."

"We have had much of a time since you left, and they all send their love to you—the old man especially. He told me to tell you we are all proud of you."

"Me—why? Because I got a bullet in my side?"

"No; but just you listen to this. The day you were sent down, our little brigadier sent for me and said, 'I want you to come with me and tell the G.O.C. what you told me about the recapture of that Maxim.' He took me straight along to headquarters camp, and I told the story there; and when I'd finished he general said: 'Thank you, Austin; you and your company behaved splendidly; and from what I hear, Mr. Jones is deserving of the highest reward that can be given to his rank. I shall recommend that he gets it.'"

The convalescent subaltern's eyes dilated with emotion, and his brother officer stood up, and, putting his left hand softly upon his shoulder, said: "I mustn't stay long; but I wrote and told her all about it."

HELD UP TRAIN

MEMPHIS, TENN., Nov. 1.—Six masked men held up westbound Rock Island passenger train No. 43, known as the Arkansas-Oklahoma express, midway between Memphis and Hurlburt, Ark., early his morning, ransacked mail pouches, and fired seven nitro-glycerine caps into the "local" safe of the express car, which not only tore away the safe doors, but wrecked the car. In the midst of their pillage they were frightened away when a switch engine, searching for the overdue train, approached from Hurlburt.

The robbers boarded the train when it slowed down near Hurlburt, eleven miles from Memphis. Intimidating the engine crew by a display of weapons, the men forced the engineer to back the train several miles. The express and mail cars were cut from the coaches and hauled ahead a short distance, where the half-completed robbery was executed. In the meantime other members of the train crew, as well as express messengers and mail clerks, were brought to submission by the robbers.

When the detached cars were brought to a standstill each of the men set about a certain task. One began gathering registered mail, and another to set the charge of explosive in the safe, while others stood guard over the train crew and the passenger coaches. The robber having charge of the explosive selected the larger of two safes for his attack. This one, it happened, contained only the less valuable packages.

When the charge was fired the ends and sides of the car were splintered and the entire front of the safe blown away.

Just at this point in the hold-up, the switch engine steamed into sight and the robbers took to their heels, with only what they could hastily grasp around for their daring. It is believed what they got was of comparatively little value.

THE LONGEVITY OF BIRDS

In reading the "Proceedings of the Zoological Society of London" for 1911 we have been interested in the ages attained by many of the birds mentioned. Of course it is only the exceptional bird that reaches the extreme age indicated, just as it is only the exceptional man that lives to be eighty or ninety. We give only a few of the birds spoken of in the volume referred to above:

Ravens have been known to live to be 69 years old, nightingales 25, skylarks 24, goldfinches 23, canaries 20, the American robin 13, an eagle-owl 68, a gray parrot 93, a sulphur-crested cockatoo 81, an Amazon 102, a white-headed or Egyptian vulture 118, a golden eagle 104, pelicans 50, common herons 23, a black stork 30, a mute swan 70, a domestic goose (authority somewhat doubtful) 80, wild ducks 29, doves and pigeons from 23 to 40 years, herring-gulls 44, ostriches 35, cranes 10. A peacock now living near Aylesbury is known to be 40 years old.

Dr. Mitchell, the author of the book, who is also at the head of the London Zoological Gardens, says: "I think that the most certain general conclusion which I may draw regarding the longevity and viability (capacity of living after birth) of the groups of birds is, that in proportion to size, longevity and viability increase with perfection of organization. The further a bird has advanced along the lines of evolution of the bird group, the more viable it is."

HEROISM OF THE LIEUTENANT

A Short Story

Two men were lying in the same tente d'abri—lying quite close together, because there is not much room in a fifteen pound tent; moreover, it was bitterly cold. They were two subalterns of the Royal Reds, and this was the first whole night they had had in bed during the last week—in fact, the regiment was just in from picketing a ridge which covered the camping ground of the division. It was a comparatively quiet night after those they had spent at the heel of the outlying pickets, and even now, though the last post had gone some hours previously, the skulking Pathan was dropping bullets with the regularity of minute guns into the sleeping mass of camp. Martini bullets whistled weirdly in the stillness of the night, followed by the busy spit of the Lee-Metford ,or the boring whirr of the soft lead Snider. Most of them were as harmless as aimless;, but the boys, as they lay in their bivouac, often heard the sickening thud of the landing bullet, followed by the cry ,now so common, of "Hospital! Hospital!" At intervals, one side or another of the camp would burst into a rattle of fire ,as the men at the breastworks located the enemy's flashes or made out the movement of dark, prowling forms within range. Such was this warfare on the Indian frontier—such that it mattered not how much a man had been under fire in the day he lay down at night with the knowledge that he was still equally exposed.

"Isn't this beastly?" said Percy Jones, as he rolled closer to his companion. "There's another drabi hit."

"Yes, I'm sick of it," said Austin. "I'm sick of it all, and my heart yearns for the flesh pots of Pindi Club bar."

"I'd give anything to be back," said Jones, "or at least to have a decent show. Here I've been under fire without intermission day or night for the last three weeks, and I don't believe I've seen an Afridi, dead or alive, in the whole time. These weapons of precision are the very devil. I'm all for peace, or a decent show when you can see the man you're to have a smack at."

"Love or war, you mean," said Austin, nudging him violently with his elbow. "I think it's a mighty good thing that you got neither, because if you'd stayed longer in Pindi you'd have come to wholesale grief. The impertinence of a second lieutenant falling in love, and with a pretty girl ,too! And, my young friend, if we had Dargai over again, you'd be shot; you don't get off twice like that."

Percy Jones pulled his blanket and waterproof sheet closer round him and thought of the letter he had in his pocket—a letter from a little fair-haired girl in Pindi—a letter which was straightforward and simple, and yet between the lines of which he loved to think he could read. She, too, had heard of what he had done at Dargai, though he had never told her. How ,during that awful pause as the regiment had lain with their dead and wounded a few yards from them, so close that they could hear the groans and curses of the dying and the wails for help of the less injured, the youngest subaltern in the regiment, unable to forbear, had leaped up, and facing that awful fire, half dragged, half carried, the nearest wounded man back into cover. His life had been charmed, for a hideous hail of lead swept past him: but though the man he sought to save was struck again three times, he returned back to cover with his burden without a scratch upon his own body.

She had heard all this ,for the letter conveyed a gentle remonstrance, and told him for his own sake to do no more than was his duty. Yet he loved to think that when she wrote "his own sake" she meant her own as well; and in spite of the occasional bullets the boy slept with a peaceful mind.

The Royal Reds were out all the next morning covering the usual foraging party up the valley ,and as Austin's company fell down from the spur they had held while the mules were being loaded up with grass and grain, both men and officers were congratulating themselves that there had been no enemy about. The company formed up at the foot of the hill to wait and cover the machine guns and their escort as they came down from the opposite spur.

"This is a record day," said Austin to his subaltern, Percy Jones. "I believe we shall get back to camp without firing a short and without a casualty. It really looks as if these politicals were working some settlement."

"Shall be mighty pleased if they do, as I want to get back. I shall go for the staff corps."

Austin, who had been watching the opposite hill, dropped his field glass to the full extent of the lanyard and turned suddenly upon the subaltern.

"Why, what's the reason of that? Your governor has plenty of stuff, hasn't he?"

"He's beastly rich. It isn't that; but I think our old man's down on me. He was ugly about that missing rifle."

"Don't talk rot! You youngsters always take things too much to heart. He's no more down on you than on anybody else."

"Yes he is. What does he shoot me about for like this? I haven't had two years' service and I have been in every company in the regiment. It doesn't give a man a chance when he's moved about like this. Besides, suppose I wanted to marry—Hello, something's up!"

A couple of shots rang out from the opposite ridge, and in a minute the whole crest line was dotted with puffs of white smoke. It was the same old story again; the tribesmen, with their wonderful instinct for taking cover, had remained unseen over the reverse of the crest line while their watchman had signalled that the retrograde movement to camp had commenced. Waiting, before they took the initiative, till the mountain guns had limbered up and were well off the covering position they had held all day ,the tribesmen had now suddenly crowned the crest line of the spur which the machine guns and escort had evacuated, and were pouring a rapid fire upon the Reds as they caught them half way down the hill. In a moment Austin gave his company the range and opened a covering fire at seventeen hundred yards; but long range volleys from one company avail little to keep down the fire of a force of skirmishers who knew every inch of the country, and who take their positions accordingly, without formation. It was going badly with the machine gun detachment, for they were hung up on the steep hillside, and by the opening fire four men had been hit. Knowing this, the enemy were pressing down upon them, trusting that if they could close upon the party their mountain guns could not help them. They had chosen their time admirably, because by the time a section of the battery came into action they were almost mixed with our men. It was a moment for action on the part of individual commanders. Austin, seeing at a glance that the gun detachment was beyond the aid of artillery fire, ceased firing ,and turning to his subaltern, said:

"Jones, take the right half company, and under the cover of that spur on the left work up as high as you can, and you'll turn their flank. I'll cover you with the other half company. Off you get. Take them at the double."

It was rough work, but the men knew that a company of their regiment was in difficulties, and they raced across the nullah bed. NATIONAL TRUST CO., LIMITED, TORONTO

The legal opinion of Messrs. Blake, Lash, Anglin and Cassels, Toronto will be furnished.

We emphasize the following salient points of this issue:

(1) Value of assets as of July 1st, 1911, $5,000,000—Consisting of Real Estate, Buildings, Plant and Goodwill, $3,837 911.94, and Net current quick assets in excess of current liabilities, $1,162,088.06.

Included in current assets is the sum of $734,909 invested in Municipal and other bonds.

(2) Average annual net earnings for past four years (1907-1910) $291,719 or practically 3¼ times the interest on the present bonds.

(3) An annual Sinking Fund beginning July 1st, 1916, sufficient to retire the present issue prior to maturity at a maximum price of 105 and accrued interest.

The Company has outstanding $1,500,000 7% Cumulative Preferred Stock and $2,000,000 Common Stock, both of which are listed upon the Toronto and Montreal exchanges.

The present capacity of the plant which may be said to comprise everything required for the building of the most modern and up-to-date locomotives, provides for a yearly output of seventy-five engines, but as each year many satisfactory orders have been declined owing to the inability of the Company to make the deliveries required, it has been decided to proceed immediately with such enlargement of the works as will increase their future output to at least double their present capacity. Therefore, it may safely be assumed that a corresponding increase in the earnings of the Company will be assured.

At the present time, the Company has a sufficient number of orders on its books to keep it fully employed for about a year, and if negotiations for additional contracts now pending are successful, the Company will have abundance of work until the early months of 1913.

The excellent management of the Company has been further strengthened by the acquisition of Mr. A. W. Wheatley as its General Manager. Mr. Wheatley is one of the foremost locomotive manufacturers in America, having, previous to joining this Company, been the General Manager of the American Locomotive Company's plant at Dunkirk, N.Y., the second largest locomotive works on this continent.

Are Charged With Murder

BUFFALO, NOV. 2.—Joseph Galbo, 29 years of age, of 240 Monroe avenue, proprietor of a fruit store at Public market, and his brother, Domenico, who lives at Joseph's store, were held at midnight by District-Attorney John W. Barrett, on charges of murder in the first degree, for the killing of Francesco Mansella, whose dismembered body was found shortly after 8 o'clock Monday morning in a barrel at the foot of a gully along the Webster highway, about a quarter of a mile beyond the Sodus Bay power house at Float Bridge.

Joseph Galbo is a son-in-law of Sam Ollis, the "banana king" who is an uncle of Antonio Ollis, who was murdered on February 27th. It is supposed that Mansella had a part in this murder, and that his killing was in revenge on the part of Ollis's relatives.

The two defendants were brought into Police court at 10 o'clock this morning for formal arraignment, but when their names were called Public Prosecutor Marsh asked the court to postpone the formality to to-morrow morning. Louis E. Fuller, who appeared for the prisoners, consented without argument.

BRIGHT-LOOKING PRISONER

Joseph Galbo is a good looking young Italian about 29 years old. He did not appear to be despondent over his plight although there was no apparent sign of levity. Dominico, his brother, a swarthy complexioned man, did not present such a good appearance. He was carelessly dressed and stood with his head and shoulders bent over. He has long, shaggy hair which is not well kept.

Joseph Galbo was arrested September 25th at 1.30 o'clock in the morning near the Public market on a charge of carrying concealed weapons. He was in an argument with a compatriot and Patrolman Abbott arrested both men. Galbo had a fully loaded revolver of .38 caliber in his pocket. The grand jury did not indict him, evidently considering that he was justified in carrying the weapon if his work took him into a dangerous locality at late hours. Later Galbo asked for a permit to carry a revolver, but it was refused.

Coroner Kleindienst has not set a date for the inquest. Asked if the arrest of the two men would have any effect on his plans, he said it did not look now as though the inquest would be held this week.

Coroners' Physicians Benjamin F. White, of Honeoye Falls, and T. T. Mooney are completing their autopsy on the body this afternoon. The autopsy this afternoon is expected to reveal positively whether Mansella was dead before his head was severed from his body.

The examination of witnesses who will be called to give evidence before the next grand jury in this case, was called in the district-attorney's office this morning, Assistant District-Attorney Thomas taking the statements.

STRONG CIRCUMSTANTIAL CASE

According to District-Attorney Barrett, this is one of the strongest cases of circumstantial proof ever investigated by authorities of the city or county. "The motive of the crime," he said after the men were held, "was either revenge or fear, arising from very recent relations of the accused with the deceased. The wagon and horses that carried the barrel to the gully have been positively identified. We have not found where Mansella had been living just before the tragedy, but we know he returned to Rochester last week. Before that time he had been in Detroit. We have a very strong opinion as to where the murder was committed, but do not care to announce our conclusions on that point."

The Galbos were brought to the Court house by Deputy Sheriffs Abbott, Pollock and Bermingham, at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, eight hours after the discovery of the body. Of the forty witnesses examined in the district-attorney's office, they went through the most severe grilling, and Monday night they were locked up at Police headquarters as material witnesses. No definite charge was made against them until last night.

ESTABLISH A CLOSE SEARCH

District-Attorney Barrett, Director Whaley, Sheriff Gillette and several detectives started out in two automobiles yesterday morning to trace the barn in which the crime was thought to have been committed, and they searched Italian districts in all parts of the city. Several Italians were rounded up and taken to the district-attorney's office, where they were questioned by the assistant district-attorney. About 10 o'clock yesterday morning the authorities entered the yard of Joseph Galbo's commission house at Public market. A light spring "banana wagon" stood in the yard near the barn. Close inspection showed that it tallied with the descriptions of Emil Wolfschlager and Charles Penfield, who told of encountering a wagon, containing a barrel covered with burlap or canvas, while driving on the Webster highway early on Monday morning.

The farmers also testified the horse hitched to the wagon was of a gray sorrel colour, and a horse found in the barn answered their description. Several articles were gathered in bags, for evidence, but the nature of the articles was not given out by the authorities. The one missing link in the chain of circumstantial evidence is the connection of the driver of the wagon with the murder, although there is every probability that it will soon be cleared up. The men may have been identified already.

Giuseppi Alessi, the young Italian, whose letter to Mansella was found in the dead man's pocket, came here with Deputy Sheriff Abbott late last night. His examination was brief, and it is understood he can threw no light on the crime, as he had not seen Mansella in several years. He is a bright person, speaking English fluently, and is acquainted with several members of the police department.

For And About Women

THE CEDAR CHEST

Searching through the cedar chest!
What a rare, alluring quest—
What a store of things forgot
Come to light of day unsought!
Broken plates, a little shoe,
Marbles and a top or two,
Colored string in tangled lots,
Twined and tied in hopeless knots—
Tangles that, as day depart,
Tighter bind some aching heart.

Wrinkled faces, quaintly framed—
Long forgotten, long unnamed—
Peering from daguerreotypes;
Locks of hair ad bubble pipes—
Tattered books whose pages hint
Smudgy thumbs and finger print—
Telltale prints that seem to be Long lost keys to Memory
Found again, and turn to show
Baby hands of long ago.

Old and gray, it holds aloof
Underneath the attic roof—
None to see it, none to care,
Yet it guards its keepsakes there;
Treasure trove of smiles and tears—
Heart beats of forgotten years—
Little things that whisper of Someone's sorrow, someone's love;
Someone's life—its very best—
Molders in the cedar chest!

—John D. Wells, in Buffalo News.

TO WEAR THE KOH-I-NOOR

Two notable crown jewels which did not appear at the coronation will be worn by Queen Mary at the coming Durbar at Delhi. One is the famous Koh-i-noor, and the other is a large diamond lotus which will form the pendant to a necklace of matchless stones.

A tradition concerning the Koh-i-noor says: "Who holds the Koh-i-noor holds India,' for it was this marvelous gem that crowned the head of an Indian Emperor 5,000 years ago. King Edward once wished to have the gem set in his crown, but was petitioned not to do so by many leading Indians on account of the superstition that the gem had always brought dire disaster to the man who wore it, whereas if the wearer were a woman, fortune would shine on her for the rest of her days. Thus it is that five years ago, the Koh-i-noor was mounted in Queen Alexandra's diadem, from which it is being transferred to that of Queen Mary.—New York Times.

EMBROIDERED STOCKINGS

The girl who affects individuality in dress will have several pairs of embroidered stockings to match her dainty gowns.

These are quite expensive when bought and are not difficult to do at home; the only requisites are a knowledge of the satin stitch, short embroidery needles and enough file silk to work the design.

Select a good grade of silk stockings, black or colours t omatch your gowns. Dainty designs can be bought that are easily transferred to the stockings; they come in perforated patterns and are very inexpensive. The most convenient way to work is over a darning egg. Use one thread of silk if the stocking be light weight, but if heavy a double thread is used. Cut the skein of silk twice, as a longer thread is likely to knot and cannot be easily straightened out on a stocking. The smartest stockings are embroidered in self-tones—black upon black, white upon white, etc.

Flowers are still popular, and if the colour contrast is not too startling they are dainty. The flowers should be very small and well scattered over the front of the stocking. Ony small conventional design is pretty, and clocks, too, can be worked as an added charm to the stockings.

CARE OF BOUGHT HOIR

If your glory crown is not what the rose growers call "root grown," extra pains must be taken to keep it in condition. Neglected, the most costly hair is soon worthless, worse, disease breeding.

The switch of transformation should be brushed as carefully as the real hair and as often. The best way to do it is to put a towel on lap or table and spreading the "piece" on it, brush with a rubber-looking boar bristle brush, first one side, then on the other. This removes tangles and does not tear the hair as does a comb.

Without natural oils "bought" hair soon grows lustreless. It should be brushed frequently with brilliantine. Put a few drops in the palm of the hand, then rub he brush over it. Be sure to get a brilliantine that is not greasy. There are several makes that give lustre yet do not leave the hair sticky.

False hair can be washed in thick soapsuds made from pure white soap. Only the lather should be used and rinse in several waters. Dry between chamois cloths or press almost dry in the hands, then hang in a current of air and when dry shake and brush until fluffy.—Albany Journal.

PAT WONDERED

A certain Irishman, having sustained a slight injury through falling off a ladder that had a defective rung, employed a lawyer to obtain compensation for him. He won his case in court, but, to his surprise the legal fees came to two-thirds of the amount awarded, which made Pat scratch his head and say to his lawyer, "Begorra, I'm just wonderin'." "Wondering what?" the lawyer asked. "Whether it was you or me that fell off the ladder," replied Pat.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

The other day I chanced to be in a certain business manager's office, when the subscription paper for a wedding present to one of his co-workers was brought aronnd.

He put his name down for two dollars — the largest amount subscribed.

After we left the office, I spoke highly of his generosity. My companion happened to be an intimate friend of the family. Her lip curled.

"Were you ever at his house?" she asked.

"No."

"You might feel differently if you had been."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that instead of being generous he is one of the most selfish men living," she said.

And then, in answer to my request for explanation, she told me how, despite the fact that he had a fairly good salary, his poor little wife was always scrimped and pinched for money, never went anywhere, had to constantly be trying to make one dollar do the work of two or three, and hadn't a new gown for two years. And all the while he goes about lavishly letting money for little things dribble through his fingers and grandly playing the munificient gentleman.

Such generosity is the rankest kind of selfishness. It's like stealing a blind man's pennies in order to make a big contribution to some memorial fund or some other showy charity or philanthropy.

How often I've seen men and women giving more than liberal tips, when I knew that half their bills weren't paid or half their family obligations met.

I know a working girl who gives munificently of her large salary to every charity, philanthropy and subscription list, yet doesn't contribute a cent to the sadly impoverished family treasury.

I have often been displeased by a slightly different, yet basically identical, species of that generosity which lavishly gives away what belongs to other people. This is the hospitality of the man who is perpetually inviting guests to his home, despite the fact that his wife has no maid and finds the steady stream of company too heavy a tax on her slender vitality.

The many who do not understand, admire this man for his ready hospitality and his cordial manner, and think his wife ungracious when she fails to second his invitations so eagerly.

The few who understand realize that he is unwarrantably giving away her strength and time in order to win undeserved praise and liking for himself.

There is one thing I'd love to know about this matter.

Do you suppose it's possible that these selfishly liberal folks really believe they are being fine and gracious?

I wonder.

Ruth Cameron

THE FAMILY HEARTH

If you think a house should have only one head, and that be yours, postpone your wedding indefinitely.

* * *

There is an old saying to the effect that an untidy mother has disobedient children, and, while neither parents nor children may realize the why or wherefore of it, yet there is always a lack of respect and an indifference to the authority of a mother who takes no pride in her personal appearance.

* * *

The meanest men in the world are those who have allowed themselves to drift away from their mothers and forget all about them. The best and bravest men in the world are those who have never been so proud as when doing something pleasant for the kind old mother.

* * *

Who does not feel more cheerful and contented for receiving a polite bow, a genial "good morning," a hearty shake of the hand? Who does not make himself the happier by these little expressions of fellow-feeling and goodwill? Silence and a stiff, unbending reserve, are especially selfish and essentially vulgar.

* * *

There is a certain species of reptile found in all parts of the known world; its home is not so much in the jungles and wilderness, as one might suppose. This serpent frequents the haunts of men, showing by this that it is of a sociable character: cities, villages, and the sparsely populated neighborhood, each and all claim its attention. The name of this serpent is slander. We hope it has no abiding place in the home of any of our readers. The Home Circle department is the best antidote yet discovered for this vile reptile, and seldom fails to drive it from the home by its weekly visits.

* * *

The woman whose life-book has love written on every page; who makes a home for a man, a home in a house and in a heart, a home that he is sure of, a home that is full of love presided over by one whose price is above rubies—She is the model wife.

* * *

Parents make their great mistakes in their training of children, by not recognizing their individuality. Each child has its peculiarities in mind, temperament, disposition and character which makes it an individual problem. Mothers in lamenting the failure of home discipline sometimes say, "I am sure I cannot understand it; I have always tried to do my duty by them, and have always treated my children exactly alike." There in lies the very secret of her failure: she has not realized their individuality; she has made the mistake of using the same formula for different problems; she has sought to move distinctly different locks by the same key. The same sun melts wax and hardens clay.

* * *

Of all the evils prevailing among young men we know of none more blighting in its moral effects than the tendency to speak slightingly of the virtue of women. Nor is there anything in which young men are so thoroughly mistaken as the low estimate they form of the integrity of women—not of their own mothers and sisters, thank God, but of others, who, they forget, are somebody else's mothers and sisters.

* * *

There is no question that a child can seriously and fairly ask that cannot be as seriously and fairly answered. To tell a child or to lead it to infer that it is "too little" to know anything more on any subject about which it already knows enough to frame a question, is to deny its capacity for further growth. It is to thrust the child's mind into a dungeon, instead of opening it to the light.

* * *

We do not know why any one should object to a wife calling her husband by his first name when among friends, but it is seldom regarded as good form to do so excepting in the presence of relatives. No one, however, can object to Mr. Smith or Mr. White. And don't say "Smith" for "Mr. Smith." If you want to call your husband "Darling" or "Love," pray do so as often as you like, but always in the privacy and seclusion of your own homes. The people who "Love" and "Dove" and "Darling" each other in company are often the very ones who call each other by strangely different names when at home.

* * *

Success is never obtained in a country like this without effort. If you fail once, try again. If you fall down, get up. If it is dark, strike a light. If you are in the shade move around; if there is shade on one side there is sure to be sunshine on the other. It takes longer to skin an elephant than a mouse, but then the skin is worth something. Never be content with doing what another has done—excel him.

* * *

Don't wait till some one is gone from you to tell their virtues. Don't wait until your sister is far away in another land to tell her how helpful, how pretty or how courteous she is; and don't wait until the weary hands are crossed and the long sleep comes before you make mother know what a beautiful blue are her eyes, how tender her heart, and how dearly you love her. Tell it all now—now, when the walk through life is hard, and the sunshine of praise is yearned for to brighten it, and to warm and encourage the pilgrim by the wayside.

* * *

Let the sunshine into the gloomy rooms, have a couch to lie on, a piano to play on; in fact, a home to live in; one wherein a sense of hospitality and good cheer exudes from the very tables and chairs, instead of a mausoleum of gloomy elegance, wherein everything is for show and nothing to be used.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES

Whip cream in a pitcher instead of a bowl to do it in half the time and without spattering.

Paraffin rubbed on the heels of stockings will cause them to last much longer without wearing out.

If a curtain or portiere pole is rubbed with hard soap before being put up the draperies will slip on easily.

In cooking beans and peas their flavour will be much better if they are cooked in as little water as possible.

Dates and figs cut in small pieces and served with plenty of sugar make a tasty accompaniment to a dish of rice boiled in milk.

To use sour milk for griddle cakes, never add baking powder, but, instead, an even teaspoonful of baking soda to each cup of milk.

Strange as it may seem, beef may be kept for months if immersed in sour milk. The lactic acid destroys the germs of putrefaction.

Some of the most attractive glass mustard jars come provided with glass spoons. Many prefer these to silver, as they will not tarnish.

Scraps of toilet soap should be saved, and when half a cupful or so is on hand it is a good plan to make the scraps into a soap jelly.

Whole wheat or brown bread cut into very thin slices and spread with unsalted butter is tasty served with oysters on the half-shell.

Cheese may be kept soft and good for a long time if wrapped in a cloth wrung out in vinegar and then wrapped again in dry cloth.

Stick a pin through the cork of every bottle that contains poison, and this may save tragic mistakes when seeking medicine in the dark.

Potato balls which are sauted in butter after being boiled are delicious. They should be served with a generous sprinkling of minced parsley.

A bare broom splinters matting easily. If you have no long-handled soft brush, make a gray canton flannel covering for the top of the broom.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Tie a paper bag over the mincer when grinding stale bread. It will prevent the crumbs from scattering.

An unused paint brush will be found of great assistance when dusting a room in which there is much carved furniture or intricate moulding. It will bring the dust out of cracks and corners better and more quickly than a cloth will.

When cleaning an especially prominent piece of white enamelled woodwork try using milk and ammonia, two tablespoonfuls of the latter to a quart of milk. This mixture will not turn the enamel yellow, as some kinds of soap are likely to do.

Rubbers of the new pattern are apt to stretch if they are hung up by the strap at the back. To obviate this, a good plan is to have a wallbag made and fitted with pockets in which to slip the overshoes after wearing.

Wipe all the dust from your windows and rub them with a cloth dipped in vinegar, if you like a high polish on the glass.

ABOUT COURTESY

Small courtesies of life seem to be entirely lost in the rush for big things. The leaving off of the little things that go to make living worth while is a well known and recognised fact to women who crave those graceful attentions, so easy in the giving when the thought is right.

Many men no longer consider it necessary to rise when a lady enters the room. If they proffer a chair it is seldom done with the old-time alacrity, and a few trips on a city car will be sufficient to convince the veriest skeptic of the truth of courtesy's decadence.

Be it said in favour of man, continually on the rack regarding these omissions, that he is by no means the greater offender. Women who entertain will tell you of scores of invitations to which they have never received the courtesy of an acknowledgment. "R.S.V.P." at the end of a card or note means nothing to a woman too thoughtless or too ill-bred to take five minutes for a reply. Such treatment of a social courtesy is an offence bad enough to cause the offender's name to be struck from the social list of the hostess.

The small courtesies of woman to woman are fully as important as those from man to woman, or woman to man.

SKULL FRACTURED LOST HIS IDENTITY

(From the Vancouver World.)

On May 1, 1897, S. Chandler Rogers had his skull fractured in a brawl in New York. Thereupon S. Chandler Rogers disappeared, and one George Kelly turned up in the United States navy.

A week ago Kelly underwent an operation in a Seattle hospital and a portion of his skull which was pressing on his brain was removed. When he recovered consciousness he was no longer George Kelly, but S. Chandler Rogers.

Rogers had no knowledge of Kelly. For Rogers the clock stopped May 1, 1897, and the intervening years simply did not exist.

Such cases, while not frequent, are still common enough to cause little comment beyond a remark or two on the impenetrable mystery which shrouds our mental operations.

Science can describe almost every vital function except that of the brain. While we can pass into a sleep which apparently excludes consciousness and yet know when a given hour has arrived and waken ourselves to that hour, no one has yet told how we accomplish it.

So it is not the long years of oblivion that make the Rogers case of greater interest than the usual run of such cases, but the particular period which has been wiped out for him.

More than one great novelist has awakened his hero to consciousness after a lapse of time sufficient to change the whole aspect of human affairs and has thus brought one era into effective contrast with another.

But what has only been imagined by Wells, Haggard, and Bellamy has in a large measure actually happened to Rogers; for May 1, 1897, comes as near marking the ringing out of the old and the ringing in of the new as any single day that could be selected since Stephenson's "Rocket" hauled the first passenger train from Manchester to Liverpool.

When Rogers fell unconscious in New York the motor car was still a toy, wireless telegraphy was a scientific experiment, the moving picture was yet to come, and we appeared to be no nearer the flying machine than we had been any time since Montgolfier sent up his balloons two hundred years ago.

These things are now the veriest commonplaces to us, yet every adult man and woman remembers the sudden irruption of automobiles, the installation of wireless apparatus on passenger ships, the first blinking moving pictures, and the earliest successes of the Wright brothers.

So, too, names which for us connote vast tracts of information to-day mean nothing to Rogers. Yukon, Roosevelt, Ladysmith, U.S.S. Maine, Taft, Hobson—one could extend the list indefinitely.

For on that first of May, fourteen years ago, Queen Victoria was about to celebrate her diamond jubilee; the Maine was still to sail to her fatal anchorage; the Spanish War and the Boer War were yet to be entered on, and all the vast changes resulting therefrom still to come; McKinley was president and Roosevelt's succession to that office undreamed of; Taft had not gone to the Philippines; and the treasure ship which started the rush to Klondike would not arrive at Seattle for another two months or more.

Contemplation of Rogers' condition brings event after event and name after name of which he knows nothing crowding into the mind, but notwithstanding the vast social and political changes wrought by both inventor and soldier; and full as these fourteen years have been of tremendous events—we had nearly forgotten, for instance, that San Francisco had been destroyed and rebuilt since 1906—we may question whether the most far-reaching change of all is not one which in all probability will strike Rogers last.

About the time that Rogers met with his accident, the chemists discovered means of treating refractory ores which made available vast deposits of low-grade quartz, with the result that the gold production of the world increased so enormously that the stock of gold was doubled in ten years and the prices of other commodities increased in the same proportion.

Consequently when Rogers gets out into the streets he will find that everything he wants to buy costs almost twice as much as it did when last, so far as he can remember, he walked into a store.

Rogers will gasp at the moving pictures and automobiles, but he will soon get used to them; he will learn what "C.Q.D." and "S.O.S." mean; he will find plenty of people who have not yet seen a flying machine.

He will gradually pick up the fourteen years of world history he has lost, for until he does much that he hears will be unintelligible to him.

But he will be a long time in getting accustomed to paying a dollar for what he will regard as fifty cents' value.

How long may be estimated by the fact that, with years of experience, we other people have not got quite accustomed to it yet ourselves.

ENDS INDIGESTION IN A FEW MOMENTS

Gas, Heartburn, Sourness and All Misery in Stomach Vanishes

Nothing will remain undigested or sour on your stomach if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally. This powerful digestive and antacid, though as harmless and pleasant as candy, will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you can eat.

Eat what your stomach craves, without the slightest fear of Indigestion or that you will be bothered with sour risings, Belching Gas on Stomach, Heartburn, Headaches from stomach, Nausea, Bad Breath, Water Brash or a feeling like you had swallowed a lump of lead. Don't go suffering now from any stomach disagreeable miseries. Should you be suffering no wfrom any stomach disorder you can get relief within five minutes.

If you will get from your pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin you could always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and your meals would taste good, because you would know there would be no Indigestion or Sleepless nights or Headache or Stomach misery all the next day; and, besides, you would not need laxatives or liver pills to keep your stomach and bowels clean and fresh. Pape's Diapepsin can be obtained from your druggist, and contains more than sufficient to thoroughly cure the worst case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. There is nothing better for Gas on the Stomach or sour odours from the stomach or to cure a Stomach Headache.

You couldn't keep a handier or more useful article in the house.

Seen And Heard

RIGHT TO THE POINT

Wesley M. Oler, the witty President of the Knickerbocker Ice Company, said of scientific management at a recent dinner in New York: "Scientific management would increase every woman's profits by a thousand per cent., provided—and this is the important point—that the employee would go in for it as zealously as his boss.

"Would he employee take a very ardent interest in a system which would cause him to do three or four times more work than before—a system that would quadruple his employer's income without benefiting his own?"

Mr. Oler smiled.

"I'll tell you a story," he said, "a story very much to the point."

"A friend of mine was travelling through New England in his touring car with his wife and two daughters. They stopped one day for lunch at a very nice hotel, and after the meal was over, my friend said to the waiter:

"'Bring the bill, please. We have had four sandwiches and four pieces of apple pie. Wait a moment, though. What has the chauffeur had downstairs?"

"'The chauffeur, sir,' replied the waiter, 'has had a Parmesan omelet, a grilled brook trout, lamb cutlets and peas, an ice, a cup of black coffee, a 15-cent cigar, and a pint of champagne.'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

IT DIDN'T WORK

"The late Andrew Gernand, of Baltimore, was an inventor who devoted his life to perpetual motion, pausing, by he way, to invent for one son a corn reaper that brought in $1,000,000, and for another son a corn sheller that netter an almost equal fortune."

The speaker, an official of the patent office in Washington, shook his head sadly.

"Once," he resumed, "I ventured to take the brilliant Grenand to task. I told him he was wasting his time on perpetual motion. I said that there ought to be a law forbidding all perpetual motion work.

"'Do you think,' he said, 'that a law forbidding work on perpetual motion would do much good?'

"'I'm sure it would,' said I.

"'And yet you must remember,' said Mr. Gernand, "that there was a law forbidding apples in the Garden of Eden.'"—Washington Star.

A DOTING WIFE

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, the suffragette leader, tells this story of a forgiving wife:

"I used to kno wa married pair," she says, "of whom the wife was a devoted and charming woman and the man was a good-for-nothing. But no matter what he did, his wife always forgave him. One day I was calling upon her, when I saw her butler pass the door with a huge green parrot in a cage.

"'Oh,' said I, 'are you going to get rid of Uncle Tom?' Uncle Tom was he parrot.

"'Yes,' said the poor little wife, with a sigh. 'I'm very fond of him, but I feel that it is my duty to send him away.'

"'And why is it your duty?' I asked.

"'I just found out the other day,' said she, 'that naughty Uncle Tom is teaching my husband to swear!'"—Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Household Recipes

DILL PICKLES

Make a strong brine—strong enough to bear up an egg—and add half as much more water as there is brine. Wash cucumbers in cold water, and put a layer into a stone jar, cover with a layer of grape leaves, and a layer of dill, using both stems and leaves of the latter. Repeat until jar is full. Pour the brine over this and cover the jar, first with a cloth, and then with a plate, putting a weight on the plate.

TOMATO CATSUP

Boil together one peck sliced unpeeled tomatoes with six large white onions until very soft. Put through a colander and return to kettle with a tablespoonful each powdered cloves, mace, pepper, sugar and salt, three bay leaves, one-half teaspoon paprika. Tie a tablespoon celery seed in a little bag, put into the catsup and boil the whole for six hours, stirring frequently. Remove bag, and add one pint vinegar. Bring to a boil and remove from fire. When cold, bottle and seal.

GRAPE WINE

Three pounds of sugar to a basket of ripe grapes, remove stems and place in small layers of fruit, make barrel airtight; put away for ten or twelve weeks; then bottle for use; the older it is the richer in flavour.

CANDIED GRAPES

Pick grapes from stem, wash carefully, then place in jar; have boiling water ready and pour over them; let stand twenty minutes, then pour off and repeat twice more. When the third water is put on, place sugar in water on stove to make this syrup. Then pour off water and fill with syrup. Seal as any other fruit.

OYSTER BALLS

Stew oe quart of oysters in their liquor, then drain and chop very fine. Rub them through a sieve; work into them half a cupful of hot milk, the yolks of four eggs, two heaping ablespoonfuls of finely chopped parsley, salt, a grate o nutmeg, a few drops of lemon juice, and lastly add the oysters. When well mixed form into balls, then flour them, brush over with beaten egg, toss in fine breadcrumbs, an dfry in smoking hot fat to a golden colour, drain and serve hot.

BLACK PRINCE

One tablespoonful of fresh butter, one cupful of white sugar, one cupful of flour, one cupul thick cream, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful vanilla extract, one egg and yolk of one, one-half teacupful of cocoa, dissolved in boiling water.

Beat butter, sugar and cream with the eggs—add the flour, then the baking powder, lastly the cocoa. Bake in three layers, and put together with frosting made of the beaten white of the one egg, into which is poured the following:

Three dessertspoonfuls of water and one cupful of white sugar. Let boil for five minutes. Beat together until cool enough to spread—cover the top with the same and sprinkle over a cupful of chopped pecans or walnuts.

DEVILED MEATS

Cut some thin slices of cold meat —the remains of any kind will do— put them in a deep dish, and saturate with the following marinade: One wineglassful of claret, the strained juice of half a lemon, one teaspoonful of olive oil, one teaspoonful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, ne teaspoonful of mushroom catsup, a pinch of mustard, half a teaspoonful of white pepper, salt and red pepper to taste. Put a few small pieces of butter here and there on the top. Place the dish in a hot oven for about half an hour, and serve hot.

When prunes are o be stuffed it is well to select large ones and soak them overnight. Then cook them ever so little. Drain and let them dry before stuffing. A mixture of chopped nuts and figs makes a delicious filling for this fruit. After stuffing the prunes should be rolled in confectioner's sugar.

English molasses pudding is made of one cupful of chopped raisins, three-quarters of a cupful of molasses, a teaspoonful of soda beaten into the molasses, hree tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one egg, and a half cupfuls of flour, and one and one-half cupfuls of sweet milk. Steam for one hour in the oven.

To make a good milk sherbet take one quart of milk, one pint of sugar, the juice of three lemons, the rind of one, and the white of one egg. Dissolve the sugar in the milk and put into he freezer. Turn the handle quickly until the mixture thickens. Then add the whipped white of an egg, the lemon juice and rind and freeze hard.

To make celery sightly and crisp, cut white, tender stalks into two-inch lengths and score the pieces lengthwise about half an inch from each end until both ends are fringed. Drop them into a pan of ice water in which a slice of lemon is soaking and let stand for an hour before serving. Dry thoroughly before putting on the table.

Raisins will make a delightful beverage. Take one pound, seeded, two pounds loaf sugar, three lemons, and two gallons of boiling water. Cut the thin yellow peel from the lemon, cover it with boiling water, and when the water has cooled add the juice of the lemons and raisins and sugar. After it has stood for several days strain through a jelly bag and bottle. It is then ready for use.

A recipe ofr sugar cookies is as follows: Four even teacupfuls of flour, one even teaspoonful of soda, two even teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, ne heaping coffeecupful of butter, two teacupfuls of sugar and milk enough to make a pastry. Mix the flour, soda, cream of tartar, and butter and rub together. Put in the sugar, break in two eggs, add a little vanilla and the milk. Roll out, cut and bake.

Specialist Did Skin Trouble No Good

Very Itchy and Disfiguring. Got a Little Cuticura Soap and Ointment and Was Cured.

"For two summers I suffered with skin trouble on my arms, and on my legs from my knees down. My arms were badly disfigured, and I kept them covered. It came like the hives, and was very itchy. I consulted a specialist, who gave me medicine, as well as an ointment, but seemed to do no good. It was beginning to appear on my face.

"I got a little Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap. The first touch of Ointment seemed to relieve, and before the Cuticura Ointment was finished I was cured. I have not the least sign of trouble. I think it would have spread over my whole body if Cuticura Soap and Ointment had not cured me. I am delighted with them, and do feel pleased to think I have something I have confidence in. I tell all my friends about them, and I think Cuticura Ointment is the best I ever saw." (Signed) M. J. Boddy, 73 McCaul St., Toronto, Dec. 22, 1910.

Cold-Sore Began to Heal With First Use of Cuticura Ointment.

"Cuticura Ointment cured a very bad cold-sore that gave me hours of severe pain and loss of sleep. I tried lots of other remedies but nothing did me any good till I tried Cuticura Ointment, and from the very first application it began to heal and now there is not even a scar left." (Signed) Mrs. W. Boyce, Mermaid Farm, P.E.I., Jan. 8, '11.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have afforded the speediest, safest and most economical treatment for skin and scalp troubles, of young and old. A MOTHER'S PRAISE OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. B. S. Baker, East Margaretville, N. S., writes: "No mother would recommend for her baby any medicine of which she was not absolutely sure. A baby's life is too precious. A mother is always pleased to recommend to other mothers something that has been valuable in restoring the health of her own child. That is why I can highly recommend Baby's Own Tablets. They cured my baby who was suffering from constipation and I feel that I cannot praise them enough. I would advise all mothers with sickly babies to give them a trial, well knowing what the result will be." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Ireland has 76,000 less inhabitants than it had ten years ago.

Berlin has a restaurant in which 10,000 people can dine at one time.

There are 110,000 telephones in use in Japan, and the number is increasing.

Peru is hte natural home of the potato, which grows in many varieties.

The candy bill in the United States last year reached the astonishing aggregate of $78,000,000.

The British Mint recently turned out its first square coins—5-cent nickel bronze pieces for use in Ceylon.

Green was the colour selected for banknotes because that colour cannot be photographed.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS

The cocoanut palm is said to have as manu uses as there are days in the year, and it supplies man with food, drink, medicine, clothing, light, household utensils, and the house itself.

Pearls are of extreme antiquity, for records of their existence in China are found that show they were gathered 1000 B.C., while in the same country, twenty-two centuries before our present era, pearls were taken in taxes. Pearls of the Orient adorned the dresses of the patrician Roman woman; and the story of Cleopatra's expensive compliment to Marc Antony, when she dissolved a pearl in wine and drank his health in it, proves the existence of the gems in Egypt.

The most expensive act of damage ever committed by a railway worker was that of an Italian navvy employed on the construction of a tunnel through one of the mountains in the Black Forest. Having a grudge against his foreman, he succeeded one night in altering the position of the stakes which marked the course of the work. The excavators were working upon the tunnel in two sections, one from the north and one from the south. Owing to the shifting of the stakes, the sections, instead of being direced to the same point, were found to be 26 feet apart when they reached the middle of the mountain. The northern half of the tunnel had, therefore, to be entirely reconstructed at a cost of $175,000. —London Chronicle.

Two Minute Talks About

PANDORA RANGE

for Coal or Wood

HAVE you seen the Perfect Spring Door on the warming closet? It is the newest Pandora feature.

The ordinary door, when opened, is inside the warming closet and takes up valuable space.

But the Perfect Spring Door, when opened, is entirely outside of the warming closet. By being outside it adds two inches to the height of the space inside the closet. That extra space provides room for fourteen more dinner or dessert plates. The door cannot drop down and smash the dishes because the spring holds the door up out of the way until you desire to close it.

The Perfect Spring Door is a convenience worth having. There are more than a score of other conveniences on the Pandora. Our Pandora booklet tells about them. Send for a copy.

WHOLE CITY ON FIRE AND IT IS FEARED THAT THE WESLEYAN METHODIST HOSPITAL IS GONE

Imperial Chinese Forces Firing on Hankow Have Fired Town and Many Wounded Lost Their Lives in the Blaze.

REFUSED TO CEASE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

HANKOW, CHINA, NOV. 4.— Following an attack this morning by the imperial troops on the fortification held by the rebels, the whole city is on fire. It is feared that the Wesleyan Methodist mission hospital which contained seventy-five blind people and three hundred wounded rebels, has been destroyed. The English surgeons in charge of the hospital implored the imperial officers to cease fire while the wounded were taken out, but they failed to do so. Word comes from Shanghai this morning of another insurrection, apparently urged by the royalists against the rebels who are in charge there. The indiscriminate slaughter has been terrific.

MET WITH ACCIDENT

A man named V. T. Carroll, employed by the C.P.R. on the construction work on the new grain route, was the victim of a painful accident yesterday afternoon. In some manner a rail was dropped on his right foot, badly crushing the member. He was brought to Peterborough at once and taken to the Nicholls Hospital, where Dr. Young attended his injuries. It was found necessary to amputate two of the toes and the injured man will be laid up for some time. Carroll has only been in Canada about six months coming here from his home in Ireland.

CONCERT AT LAKEHURST

LAKEHURST, NOV. 4.—A very successful school concert was held in No. 3, Harvey, Friday, October 27th. The pupils and young people of Lakehurst were ably assisted by Mrs. F. Miles of Peterborough, and Mr. Theodore Simpson of Rockfort. Mr. Blain acted as chairman. The programme was very lengthy and every number was well rendered, but owing to the length of the programme not many encores were given. The school was crowded and the people showed by their ready applause how thoroughly every number was enjoyed.

Misses Blanch Bennett and Edith Fulton visited at Mrs. Stevenson's, last week.

Were Entertained

The members of the Junior Epworth League of the George St. Methodist church were very pleasantly entertained at the parsonage last night by Mrs. (Rev.) Couch. About fifty of the boys and girls of the League were present and the evening was very enjoyably spent in games, music etc., at the conclusion of which dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. Couch, whose hospitality was thoroughly appreciated by the young people.

C.P.R. LOCAL DELAYED ON ACCOUNT OF ACCIDENT

The C.P.R. train from Toronto, due at Peterborough at eight o'clock last evening, encountered a wreck at Claremont and was delayed. It is understood that a previous train had run into a pile driver at this place and several cars were derailed. It was not until after eleven o'clock that the line could be cleared sufficiently to allow the local to resume its journey. When reaching Peterborough it was in the neighbourhood of one o'clock. The train was, therefore, some five hours late. As far as could be ascertained no one was hurt.

The passengers on the local were all provided with supper at Claremont, and those on the Montreal express which was also detained, were supplied with refreshments at Myrtle.

The C. P. R's credit seemed to be in bad repute in Claremont, as the tickets issued for supper would not be accepted by the local option hotelkeepers there. The C.P.R. conductor supplied the cash and took up the tickets after the passengers had paid for their own meal.

The train reached Peterborough at 12.40 a.m., with the passengers none the worse for the delay.

BLACKLISTER IS MULCTED $12.60 IN COURT TO-DAY

Floyd McMaster who appeared in the police court yesterday morning on a charge ofattempting to break into the residence of P. C. Meagher, was arraigned in court this morning on a charge of violating the Blacklist laws. He was fined $12.60 which he paid. He was put in the box by the License Inspector and forced to tell where he got his liquor. He said that on the night that he and Alex. Yorkston were at Meagher's house, they had two quart bottles with them, and Yorkston had purchased them. He intimated that he had told Yorkston previously that he was on the Blacklist, and unable to purchase liquor, Yorkston may be charged with supplying liquor to a Blacklister, which, in the eyes of the law, is a very serious offence.

A local young man who was blacklisted on Wednesday morning, was arraigned in court again this morning for being drunk. Fortunately for him, the papers had not been served prohibiting him from purchasing and he got off with the usual fine of $2.00 and costs, $4.60.

A farmer who was drunk last evening and was fined $5.85, which he was unable to pay, will stay behind the bars until the necessary williams are procured, or until he serves 15 days.

James McGrother the old ship's fireman, who was arrested yesterday afternoon, was fined $2.60, which he paid and then beat it.

Fred Barlow, a farm labourer was charged with vagrancy. He pleaded not guilty, as he had a job with a farmer just outside of the city. He was allowed to go.

One man told the police when he was arrested, that he had lost $90, but this was incorrect, as he admitted afterwards.

E. L. Payne, Druggist Has Novel Advertising Method

If you will read E. L. Payne's advertisement, you can see the wonderful savings you can make by the payment of only one cent. Take, for instance, one of the articles advertised for to-day, that of castile soap. You pay 5c. for one bar, but if you take two you get them both for an extra cent, or 6 cents.

The one-cent sale has never been introduced in Peterborough before, and will no doubt be popular with Saturday shoppers.

Mr. Hall's East City Committee Rooms, Swantson's House, corner of Driscoll Terrace and Hunter Streets, will be open each evening until election day, commencing Monday evening, November 6th. All friends and supporters are invited to attend.

WAS HE THE SAME?

Man Who Jumped from the G. T. R. Train Thought to Have Been in Peterborough Last Week

ANSWERS DESCRIPTION

To-day's Globe contains the following paragraph:

Belleville, Nov. 3.—While the 5.20 p.m. westbound Grand Trunk train was about to cross Moira River bridge within half a mile of the station a man was seen to leave a car, throw off a valise, and jump from the steps, although the train was in rapid motion. The police were notified, but no trace of the man could be discovered other than his hat. From papers in the valise it was learned that the man was P. H. O'Donnell of Brooklyn, N.Y., a boilermaker. He had come here to seek work, and, finding that he was being carried beyond his destination, had jumped from the car. No trace of him has yet been discovered.

A man by the name of O'Donnell was in the city last week enquiring for a position at a local foundry. Not being fortunate enough to secure the same, he left the city, stating that he was going to Kingston, where he hoped to secure a position in the Kingston Locomotive Works. This man was of average stature and wore a black three-quarter-length overcoat. He also carried a valise. It is just possible that it may be the same man.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

FIRST OF ITS KIND IN THE CITY

An electrically operated and illuminated cash register has made its debut in the city. This machine, which was made by the National Cash Register Company, is the last word in cash register construction. By making a slight pressure on one of the keys, it will display the amount of purchase, open the cash draw, illuminate the register and throw out a check, giving amount of sale—all in the twinkling of an eye. This machine, which is the only one in the city, is to be found in Warne's drug store.

RIDPATH NO BETTER

Mr. William Allen won the bean guessing contest at Brock street rink last night. As a result he becomes the possessor of a set of dishes. There were 16,013 beans in the bottle and the winning guess was 16,012.

NEW FOREMAN APPOINTED FOR SOUTH END SEWER

Board of Works Select Albert Craig at Busy Session Last Night—Work Will be Carried on This Year on the Recommendation of City Engineer May—Other Matters Taken Up.

Ald. Morgan was present at a meeting of the Board of Works last night re Engineer Jamieson and his connection with the South End pumping station. Mr. Jamieson wanted some sort of a contract made, so that he would get extra compensation for his work, or that some other man be given the position. Mr. Jamieson asked $200.00 per year more than his salary at the Fire Hall for the extra work.

The City Engineer pointed out the duties of a man in this position. He said that he would have to examine the machinery and see that all was right, at least twice a day; keep things spotlessly clean, keep the machinery in repair, must proceed to Fire Station with all speed in case of an alarm night or day, and test auxiliary air compressors once a week. The Engineer stated that the machinery might not need repairing more than once a year, but there must be a practical man in charge, who knows when it does need repairing, and be able to do the job.

Ald. Buller: "This is a serious proposition, gentlemen, and if the fire underwriters get on to it, that we have an engine, and our engineer engaged in this manner, there may be trouble. They made us believe at first that the machinery would run itself, and that it would only be necessary for some person to look at it now and again, but now it turns out more serious."

Ald. Metheral: "He thinks it is worth $200.00 per year extra."

Engineer: "His work there may not detain him more than ten minutes every day".

Ald. Buller: "The simple thing that at first only needed looking at once now and then, now requires a practical man."

Ald. Brown: "Well, he is liable to be called night or day out to a fire, or to the pumping station, both at once, and then what?"

This was possible, but not considered likely.

Ald. Buller: "Mr. Hunt, down there, might drop in and see that everything is right. I might look at it myself".

Ald. Duncan: "Leave it to the Chairman to report on it at the next meeting.

It was finally agreed that the matter would be left to the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light, and the Chairman of the Board of Works."

The next important matter to be dealt with, was the appointing of a foreman for the South End sewage construction. Mr. Wade, who is now in charge of the work, is going to take charge of the construction of the new wharf, and some person will have to take his place at once. Mr. Craig has been acting as assistant foreman, and has had charge of the work in the absence of Mr. Wade.

Engineer: "Mr. Chipman was speaking of the matter. He is in favour of closing down the work for this year, but I am in favour of going on with it. They laid forty feet of pipe to-day—the cold weather is only an advantage to the work. I am very much in favor of pressing the thing to its completion, which I believe may be effected this fall, if the work is proceeded with."

Ald. Metheral: "There must be a foreman all the time."

Ald. Duncan moved that Albert Craig be appointed foreman at $3.00 per day. Ald. Graham seconded the motion.

Ald. Buller moved in amendment, that Mr. Bartlett be appointed foreman. "He is an old hand," said Ald. Buller, "and I think he has a better right to it. I think it is not fair to appoint a man from among these workmen. He would not have the same authority with them, nor the same show. I am of the opinion that Mr. Bartlett is the best man and that he should receive good wages. He would be more capable, having more experience than Mr. Craig."

Ald. Duncan: "I think that Mr. Bartlett has had his show."

Ald. Anderson: "I am in favour of Mr. Craig. He has had a good training, under the direction of Wade."

Ald. Brown: "I feel the same as Ald. Buller about the matter."

The matter was brought to an abrupt close at this point, as Ald. Buller could not get a seconder, and Ald. Duncan's motion carried.

The next matter to come in for discussion was the C. P. R. and its proposition re Romaine street. Ald. Metheral and the City Engineer, in company with Mr. Overend, of the C.P.R., and one of their other officials, drove out to the boundary on Romaine street, recently, and an agreement was reached, to the effect that the Company widen the road three feet, and set the fences out that much farther. Ald. Duncan suggested that the bank might wash down if it was not cribbed up three or four feet, and that there would scarcely be the desired space. The Engineer stated, however, that there would be about 30 feet clear. The Company wants to put a siding in on the north side of the road.

Ald. Duncan thought that the Company should be made to crib it.

Ald. Buller thought that the Company would crib up the bank, if the city would stick for it.

Ald. Duncan stated that the bank was washing out at the present time, and moved that the Company be requested to fill in three feet on the South side of the road, and put in a four-foot crib, before the diversion of Romaine street is granted, and also that the Company agree to sustain that culvert at the crossing.

The deeds from the Auburn Power Co., re the piping through the new dam and water main, were read and approved.

A communication was read from the City Engineer re the extension of the drain on Rink street. The place on the lake will be filled in for about two hundred feet, and the Engineer thought that some action should be taken to put the matter of leaving the drain open, before the Government. The Board decided to speak to Mr. Burnham about the matter.

A communication from Mr. A. Lowe was received, asking that some gravel be put on Benuine street. The matter will be attended to at once.

The Engineer reported that sewers were still being constructed in the north end of the city, and they hoped to have them all complete this fall.

A few loads of gravel will be put on John street, and a catch basin on Dalhousie street will also be attended to.

There were present at the meeting, Ald. Metheral, chairmans and Ald. Anderson, Brown, Duncan, Buller, Graham, Brown, the Engineer, and City Solicitor, also Ald. Morgan.

GRAVEL TRAIN COLLIDED WITH A LIGHT ENGINE

(Lindsay Warder.)

A train of fourteen cars of gravel and a caboose which was in transport from Bobcaygeon, with gravel to be used as ballast on the new line of the C.P.R., was struck by a light engine at the C. P. R. station about four o'clock Thursday evening. Both trains were endeavouring to make the same track when the accident occurred. Whether it was a case of disobeying orders or running on time no one appears to know. One man occupied the caboose in the rear of the gravel train which was struck and which was driven backwards by engine No. 746.

It appears that Engineer Kenny and Fireman Frigett on the light engine were endeavouring to clear the main track for the Bobcaygeon passenger train en route to Burketon and in an attempt to make the siding, the gravel train drawn by engine 746 was bent on the same mission, but unfortunately, and as it has always been and probably always will, the caboose was entering on the siding as the light engine was about to do, causing a collision that hurled the caboose backwards and the light engine careened over on its side, tearing up ties and gravel in its foaming speed.

The crew of engine No. 746 evidently did not notice the accident as the train backed up over 300 feet before stopping, upsetting the caboose in an unrecognizable mass of wheels, splinters and springs, in the deep trench at the north end of the C.P.R. station.

A telephone pole was struck and cut off about two feet above the ground, but was still doing duty as if nothing had happened.

George Pleasant was in the caboose when the ponderous engine stove a hole in her side. He was badly bruised, but to what extent it is impossible to state. His miraculous escape was the theme of discourse by the hundreds of citizens who rushed in a turmoil way to gaze on the great smash-up.

AFTERMATH OF THE FIRE

New Buildings Will Probably Replace Those Destroyed by Thursday Night's Bethany Conflagration.

REMOVING DEBRIS

The Examiner's special correspondent at Bethany, the scene of Thursday night's disastrous fire, writes the following concerning the aftermath of that fateful night:

Bethany, once prosperous, and filled with hope and ambition for the future, an ambition which was given impetus by the fact that a station was about to be built in connection with the new Victoria Harbour and Seaboard line, is, for the most part, swept bare. A few hours after the fire was first discovered, the business section of the town presented a scene of desolation and ruin. The light from the burning ruins threw a weird glare over the scene that represented the crushed hopes, the loss of homes, and so forth. The large town hall, which has sheltered many a public gathering, fell an easy prey to the fire fiend, and in less than an hour after the flames were first seen bursting from the roof, the walls fell in with a sickening crash, throwing high into the air sparks and cinders, and illuminating the country for some distance.

Business in the village will be somewhat interrupted, but it is expected that a modern group of stores will be erected at Bethany in the near future, to replace those destroyed. Those interested have already set resolutely to work to remove the debris preparatory to erecting new buildings.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

SATURDAY, NOV. 4, 1911

GENEROUS APPRECIATION.

In speaking at the big banquet given in his honour, in Halifax, Hon. Mr. Borden evidently had not Mr. Bourassa's permission to deal with the Canadian navy question, for he did not refer to it. But he took occasion to talk a good deal of nonsense, in respect of his appreciation of the help of the Liberals gave him in gaining power. He said:

"The Conservative party would not be worthy of its record, or its traditions, and it would not be worthy of the name it bears, if it were not willing to recognize, as we have sought to recognize, the aid which these men brought and the influence which they exerted in that contest."

These are very fine sentiments; and all very fine for talk; but Mr. Borden's appreciation of Liberal aid in winning his election, but it is action that counts; and Hon. Mr. Borden will find full scope for his appreciation in matters where the spoils of office are concerned, and when it comes to practical appreciation some Liberals will be as much disappointed as those who voted on the grounds of principles that have been utterly ignored by Mr. Borden, in selecting the members of his Cabinet.

CALLING OUT THE RESERVES.

The Conservative party is beginning to see that their contemptuous attitude towards the Liberal party as a negligible quantity in the coming elections, will not pay. They are recognizing that it is not to be despised. In Ottawa, Mr. Fripp, former representative of that city at the Conservative nomination meeting, paid a tribute to the retiring Liberal leader, Hon. Mr. McKay, and warned the Conservative party that with the new Liberal platform, and with a man of Mr. Rowell's ability as leader ,the contest "would demand the most energetic work of every supporter of the Whitney government." Hon. I. B. Lucas, at his nomination meeting, gave a similar warning. These facts should show Liberals that even our official opponents are not so sure of a walk over; and, independently of the cause of provincial interests, Liberals should unitedly set upon the conclusion that there is excellent hope of the Liberals of Ontario making a mighty dangerous fight against the Whitney government. There is no reason for discouragement; but every encouragement, for entering into the contest with undaunted energy. When our Conservative enemy begins to call out the reserves, and to whip every supporter into the firing line, it is a sign that the Liberal party in Ontario is regarded as a dangerous opponent.

THE STAND OF THE CZAR.

Sir James Whitney, with his big majority, easily falls into the attitude of despising the people, and sniffing contemptuously at the importance of popular rights. He not only stands in the way of assessment reform, but he even refuses to allow the people to judge for themselves, and to permit them to say whether or not they think it wise to exempt improvements from taxation and place the assessment upon land values. This form of dealing with assessment and taxation — lightening the burden of taxation on improvements and increasing it upon land values—has been adopted with satisfactory results in the Canadian West. Sir James Whitney fails to see that this is a matter in which the people are deeply concerned; or that the people have any right to say how they will manage their local affairs. With his big majority behind him in the House, he can bring his foot down upon and crush legislation looking to the simple matter of allowing the people to decide as to what they prefer Over three hundred municipalities in Ontario petitioned Sir James Whitney ,for a change in the law, simply to permit them to say what form of assessment they would prefer. There are two evident reasons for Ontario's autocrat, the Queen's Park Czar, assuming this attitude. Such legislation would be a progressive movement, and that he is unalterably opposed to on principle. Another reason of Sir James' opposition is that such legislation would be a recognition of the right of the poor man to be considered in a way that would lighten his burden of taxation and place him on an equality, in this respect, with his richer neighbour. Unfortunately for Sir James, he will find that the people—even if they are common people—have a way, sometimes, of voting for themselves.

GOOD FIGHTING GROUNDS.

Some Conservative journals and politicians, and even some faint-hearted Liberals, seems to think that Whitneyism, and the petty tyranny of Queen's park, are invincible; that the Liberals have not the "ghost of a show," in the coming elections. They say this, but they don't altogether believe it. If Sir James Whitney is so strong as he claims, with his big majority at his back, why does he seek unfair advantages in order to hold his own? Why has he brought on the elections in order to get the benefit of the "Borden sweep of victory" in Ontario? If he is as brave as he claims, and as his friends claim him to be, why not take a fair chance in a fair fight, and bring on the elections when they should be brought on—at the end of the present legislative term in 1912?

If Sir James and his friends count on the weakness of the Liberals in this province, he and they may easily be undeceived. There is nothing to daunt Liberals. In human history, there are many instances of the right cause meeting a temporary check and returning in triumph. Principles are not killed by temporary reverse; and if the Liberals in the coming election take their stand on the people's side, they will not only have their cause to fight for, but the record of the Whitney government will be negatively in their favour.

Liberalism is perhaps to blame for the extent to which the big claims of the Whitney government for credit for its administration have been so far accepted as justifiable.

When has any government made a bigger muddle of administration? The license department has been made a political engine and subservient to the pro motion of party interests. The department of justice has made Ontario a "city of refuge" for rogues and criminals, undetected and unfurnished crime and crookedness. Our public institutions are, for inefficiency and extravagance of administration, a by-word and a reproach. Our educational system is a monumental muddle. There is boast of cheap school books, but what is the use of such books, if the Whitney government's mismanagement has left a very large section of the province without qualified teachers? This has been permitted to the extent that in the matter of teachers, in especially the Eastern part of the province, more than half of the teachers in the schools are not properly qualified.

The abolition of the Model schools has operated to keep the boys and girls of the poorer of our citizens from qualifying for teachers. The neglect of technical education also deprives the sons of mechanics from getting the supplementary instruction that would fit them for higher positions in the trades they are compelled to enter upon without proper technical equipment.

The rights of labour have been ignored, not only in this regard, but in regard to protection from injury in their work leaving them maimed and injured, without any adequate and easily available legal redress.

If we examine all the departments of provincial administration, we shall find similar weak spots. The administrative record of the Whitney government only stands good without examination.

All that the government has failed in, the Liberal party stands to uphold and advocate; and it seems an absurd thing to say that there is no good fighting grounds for Liberals in this province. There is room for a fight, and a fight will be put up that will at least wake up the Whiteny government, and wake up the people of the province—open their eyes to see the "feet of clay" of the idol of "perfect" government they have been called upon to blindly worship.

No Liberal, or sympathiser, with the rights and claims of the people, should fail to put his greatest energy into the fight. The defeat, or at least the great reduction of the dangerously large and unwieldly majority of the Whitney government, is no impossibility. With energetic and united action of the friends of provincial progress, either of them, is a welcome possibility.

A man in San Francisco has died from excessive smoking at the age of 100 years. Another solemn warning.

Hon. Mr. Monk, "Nationalist," says that Hon. Mr. Borden gave him a free hand. The presence of three Nationalists elevated over the heads of loyal French Canadians, shows the truth of his statement.

Hon. George P. Graham described the recent meeting of the Ontario Opposition as "composed of men who were licked, well licked, and who did not know when they were licked. That's the spirit that wins victory in the long run.

Two defeated Conservative candidates have been made senators, and two Conservative members-elect have been made postmasters to provide seats for cabinet ministers. This, remarks the London Advertiser, is Mr. Borden's first instalment of senate reform and civil service reform.

Hon. Mr. Borden, in his first public utterance, and Sir James Whitney in his manifesto, both fought shy of the two big and burning questions in Dominion and Ontario politics, respectively. Mr. Borden made no reference to the navy and Mr. Whitney was equally delicate on the bilingual school question.

Mr. George Taylor, of Leeds, who got out of his seat to give a place to Mr. Borden's Grit Finance Minister, is not now restrained by diplomatic consideration from speaking his mind At Mr. White's nomination he frankly stated that his resignation was a matter of bargain with Mr. Borden. He was promised a seat in the Senate as the price of his retirement.

In the past four years, according to statistics, there have been killed, or injured, in Canada, on railways, and in industrial accidents, 45,428 persons. This is at the rate of 11,357 per annum. That goes a long way to explain why Canada's census fell short of the anticipated increase of population. With the automobile in increased use, we shall, according to recent events, have a much bigger death and accident roll.

A Call To Provincial Liberals To Get In Line For Coming Elections

Through its President, Hon. W. L. M. King, the Reform Association of Ontario calls upon Liberal organizations throughout the Province to place their candidates in nomination at once. It is but a little over a month to nomination day, and in an educational campaign such as this must be the candidates of the Liberal party cannot too specially set out upon the platform.

It is a call for volunteers that is made on behalf of the new leader, and it should receive a hearty response. Mr. Rowell comes to his task at a time when the party has scarcely found itself after a very serious reverse. Sir James Whitney and his Ministers, despite their protestations of a desire to play fair, have deliberately brought on the election out of due season, forcing the people of Ontario to endure the hardships of a winter election that the Government might snatch a pary advantage.

The Liberals of this Province are not the sort of men to submit passively to such treatment. There is evidence that Sir James' cheap tactics have had the result of stirring up the fighting spirit of Liberalism to an uncommon degree, while thousands of electors who are not attached to either party feel that on this occasion the Premier of Ontario has not pursued his policy of the square deal. The Government is extremely vulnerable on its administrative side. In regard to the administraion of justice and the detection of crime things go from bad to worse. A list of the recent murders in this Province, for which no one has been arrested and tried would be a startling document. There is scarcely a section of the Province in which some mysterious crime does not remain unsolved. In the Education Department muddle follows muddle. Large areas in every county are without qualified teachers because of the obstinate action of the department in refusing to retain the Model schools till the machinery for the better education of teachers could be put into proper working order. In the northland there is strong feeling against the failure of the Government to promote colonization. The policy of the Hon. Rip Van Winkle Cochrane, as the Tory Toronto Telegram calls him, would cost the Government every seat in Northern Ontario were it not for the terrorism exercised over settlers, lumbermen, and miners, by the officials.

The strength of the Whitney Government is more apparent than real. With an advanced platform such as Liberals expect from the recent gathering, with the strong leadership of Mr. Rowell, and with the enthusiastic support that his acceptance of the post of leader will bring to the party, there is every reason to believe that in the coming contest the party will give a good account of itself.—The Globe.

MR. R. R. HALL'S PRACTICAL INTEREST IN WORKINGMEN ENDORSED

Mr .R. R. Hall, the Liberal candidate for West Peterborough, has circulated among the "mechanics and workmen" of the city of Peterborough an invitation not merely for them, but to the general public, to attend a meeting to be held this evening to discuss the "Workmen's Compensation Act." Liberals generally will be found in this campaign taking very advanced ground on this subject, because they regard it as one that ought to receive immediate and continuous attention until there has been devised a system which will amply protect the workman without being too burdensome on his employer.

Mr .Hall says "the money spent in law suits by employers and employees and the premiums paid to employers' liability insurance companies would provide a fund large enough, if added to by a reasonable grant from the Government, to provide a Provincial accident insurance system that would put an end to all law suits." In a recently published paper on this subject Mr. John Mitchell, the well known labour organizer, says that during the eleven years from 1894 to 1905, the employers' liability companies of the United States took in almost a hundred million dollars in premiums from American employers. During this period these companies paid out in the settlement of claims of injured workmen about forty-three and a half millions. Of this latter amount probably more than one-third was expended by the injured workmen in the payment of attorneys' fees and court expenses, so that in the final analysis the injured workmen received less than thirty million dollars out of the hundred million paid by the employers in premiums to liability companies. Allowing fifteen million dollars for the cost of administration, this means that fifty-five millions were wasted, when the money should have been used for the immediate relief of the men and their families. Such a statement of facts amply justifies the special interest shown by Mr. Hall in the question as an issue in this election.

This is a subject in which there is no party politics, and nothing but good can come from a reasonable, and dispassionate, consideration of it. Mr. R. R. Hall, the Liberal candidate, who has devoted much consideration to this subject, and who has ideas of practical value on the subject, will discuss the Workmen's Compensation Act at a public meeting in his committee rooms over Toronto Loan and Savings Companys office TO-NIGHT, at 8 o'clock. This subject has an especial present local interest, and the public are invited.

FALLING BY ITS OWN WEIGHT.

(Brantford Expositor)

There are signs of the times which indicate conclusively that the overwhelming majority at present enjoyed by the Whitney Government is in reality the danger point in what should otherwise be a strong and progressive government. When it is considered that almost the entire revenue of the province in 1910, six years since Conservative accession to power, was derived as a direct result of legislation passed by former Liberal governments, the truth that the Whitney Government is likely to fall by the great weight of its own inactivity begins to reveal itself.

If Ontario is to have progressive legislation, a strong, vigorous opposition is essential. A government that is closely watched and scrutinized at every turn cannot jeopardize its existence by being slothful, autocratic and subservient to party interests. If Ontario is to come into its own in the march of progress, it cannot afford to have an unprogressive government. In this connection the Hamilton Herald (Independent) wisely points out as follows:

It would be better for the province if the Opposition in the Legislature were numerically thrice as strong as it is. More than that it would be better for the Whitney Government to have an opposition strong enough to make it "sit up and take notice." Sir James Whitney, with his enormous and subservient majority behind him, has been quite too much of an autocrat. So strongly entrenched in power has he been that he has felt secure enough to ignore public opinion and "gang his ain gait." Our neighbour, the Spectator, admitted yesterday that the Premier and his colleagues need the stimulus of a strong opposition to save them from political stagnation. It professed to rejoice in the prospect of there being an aggressive and progressive leader of the Opposition with an enthusiastic following, for such a combination would be likely to "keep Sir James and his administration 'bumping' in the direction of advanced legislation.

ALL RIGHT, SIR

Some good luck had come to him in business that day, and he felt as if he wanted to share it with others. So ,when he reached his house and dismissed the station hack with his two sorry horses, he joyously handed the driver half a sovereign. The driver looked at the money, then at the man and then at his horses, and finally said: "All right, sir; which horse do you want?"

AN IDEAL TAX RATE—A RATE OF 10 MILLS IN SANDUSKY, O.

The Taxing of Railroads in this City Reduces the Tax in a Few Years from 26 Mills to 10 Mills.

Mr. Thos. McGeachie, manager of the Mann Lumber Co., handed the Examiner a copy of a Sandusky, Ohio, paper, giving a report of the Budget Commission of the City Council striking a tax rate of ten mills on the dollar. When Mr. McGeachie was living in Sandusky, the rate of taxes was 26 mills. Since that time the railroads have been taxed to the extent of about 10 million dollars, with a consequent reduction in taxes to the residents of the city.

The levy by decree of the Commission, will be distributed as follows:

School—Two and eight-tenths mills.

City.—Four and eight-tenths mills.

The levy as made will produce for the Sandusky City School Fund a total of $79,653 and for the City, independent of the Schools, $150,538.

The state's share of the taxes collected in Erie County upon the duplicate now in the hands of the auditing department, will amount to $26,483.35. The county's total for all purposes is $114,448.

The total value of the property listed for taxation in the county, is $58,721,400. The classificaion is as follows:

Personal property	$ 5,610,845
Banks	1,122,240
Corporations	2,656,470
Real estate	38,056,850
Railroads and Public Utilities	10,475,985

The County Commissioners, meeting in the near future, will fix the rate of taxation in the various taxing districts outside of the city. This rate promises to fall below the one per cent. limit in all but one or two places. An effort is to be made, however, to hold it to the very lowest figure everywhere, and in no place, it is said, will it be permitted to go above one per cent. unless there is no way of getting out of it.

The members of the Budget Commission seemed to be well pleased with the results of their labours the other evening. Their meeting was unmarked by friction of any kind, and every proposition coming up was sanctioned by a unanimous vote. The prevailing sentiment was that the revenue produced by a one per cent. levy will meet demands.

The Commission was in session about two hours. During this time the "skeleton work" of a huge task confronting the county auditing department was construced.

Under the levy as made, persons whose property has been listed at a valuation of $1,000 will pay $10 taxes. The rate will be $1 per hundred, and consequently so easy to figure that taxpayers knowing the value of their property as written on the county's records will know just how much they will have to hand over the counters when they call on Treasurer Nuhn.

THE HERPICIDE GIRL IS THANKFUL

I am always grateful for real blessings, and I know of nothing that I need to be more thankful for than Newbro's Herpicide. Thousands of ladies, not only in the United States, but all over the world, feel the same way about it. To this wonderful scalp and hair remedy they owe their soft, long, beautiful hair.

Mary M. Terry, of Lovejoy, Ill., writes: "My hair came out until there was just a scanty cover for the scalp. I tried everything I ever heard of or read about until I finally used Herpicide. There is nothing like it. My head is now covered with new hair. I shall forever praise Herpicide."

Most hair troubles come from dandruff. Newbro's Herpicide removes this dandruff by killing the germ which causes it. It also stimulates a flow of blood which nourishes the follicles. The scalp being healthy, the hair does not come out and the new hair is allowed to grow.

There are other preparations which they say are "just as good" as Herpicide. It is not advisable to try them. Instead of doing any good they may do positive harm.

No one is ever disappointed in Newbro's Herpicide. The results are always the same, always satisfactory as is indicated by the fact that Herpicide has been sold for years and has thousands of satisfied friends. It is the only genuine, original dandruff germ destroyer. There is nothing "just as good."

Applications at good barber shops.

Returned To Vancouver

Mr. A. O. Wheeler, F.R.G.S., Director of the Alpine Club of Canada, has just returned to Vancouver from a summer spent in the Canadian Rockies in the vicinity of the Yellowhead Pass, and is greatly impressed with his trip.

In an interview with Mr. Wheeler, he stated: "It has been the general impression that the Rocky Mountains of Canada attain their greatest average height not very far north of the boundary line. True, of late years much has been heard of Mount Robson, which dominates the region of the Yellowhead Pass, but the popular notion was that there was nothing else in the neighbourhood worth seeing, and that the Grand Trunk Pacific would pass through a region of little interest from the point of view of the tourist or mountaineer.

"There was no mistake about Mount Robson. It is without doubt, as was stated by one of the most travelled and skilled mountaineers of the day, Dr. Norman Collie, one of the most magnificent mountains in the world, whether seen from the south, the view that is most familiar., or from beautiful Berg Lake, it still stands supreme. In the hundred-mile circuit of the great massif on all sides were found mighty snow-clad peaks, wide-spread snowfields, huge ice-falls, rushing torrents, waterfalls, flower-clad meadows and vast stretches of dark pine forest. Many of the peaks were named by the surveyors, but they are legion, and it will be many years before they are familiarly known as individul mountains."

In speaking of the Robson Glacier, which lies on the east side of this monstrous mountain, Mr. Wheeler said: "It struck us dumb with amasement that anything so stupendous, so superb, so undreamed of, should exist. At our feet flowed the great river of ice, every crevasse, every moraine, every icefall, clearly portrayed. Directly opposite rose the massif, its outline clear from base to summit for fully 8,000 feet. From the beautiful meadows at the head of Resplendent Valley twenty-five peaks were counted, all unknown and unnamed. And lakes, which perhaps lend the most characteristic charm to Canadian mountain scenery, were everywhere."

At the summit of the Yellowhead Pass Mr. Wheeler's party erected a monument defining the boundary between Alberta and British Columbia at the intersection of the Great Divide. On the huge post set up, which is surrounded with a big stone mound are carved the words: "British Columbia on the west face; Alberta on the east face; and on the south 3,727.98 feet, being the altitude of the summit at the point where the post is set."

Watson, the newly-appointed Assistant General Freight Agent at Montreal, entered the Grand Trunk service at Toronto, March 1st, 1884, and served in various capacities there and at Hamilton until May 1st, 1892, when he was appointed Travelling Freight Agent at Montreal. Interesting Services

There will be interesting services in St. Andrew's Presbyterian church to-morrow. In the morning Rev. Jas. S. Potter, the seamen's missionary, and father of Rev. J. C. Potter, former pastor of St. Andrew's, will address the congregation, and his message will undoubtedly be full of interest and profit.

In the evening the Orangemen of Peterborough and district will attend St. Andrew's church in a body, it being Guy Fawkes' Day and will be addressed by Rev. Jas. Rollins, pastor of the church.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Examiner:

Sir,—I believe every one applying for positions of importance in our country, especially those where the education of the people is concerned, such applicants should be compelled to declare—like the Jews of old—their pedigree, before they are accepted. And if such applicants have monkey blood in their veins, as the higher critics believe they have, they should be rejected, and such educators should be admonished, to go to their own people in monkeydom and try their hand on lifting their own kin and kin from the depths of degradation and ignorance, that monkeydom has lain in for the last six thousand years. Then, when these higher critics have proved their love for their own people—for charity and love begins at home—and succeeded in lifting them, then they might try their hand on a superior race.

JOHN CARLISLE.

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Dear Sir,—In your issue of October 28, there is a letter written by one, "Bible Student," and headed The Kingdom of God.

I would like to add a few words to that which the writer has to say.

Bible Student calls attention to the prophecy by Daniel. The vision was one which came to Nebuchadnezzar, and the reason as given by Daniel in the 2nd chapter, 29th verse, As for thee, O King, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter:

Bible Student thinks that the stone cut out of the mountain, without hands, was the Gospel of Christ.

I would ask the writer to first consider the 7th chapter of Daniel. Here we have a description of a vision of Daniel's, in which he beheld four beasts come up from the sea. The vision was a repetition of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, only that different symbols were used, in the representations of the kingdoms of men.

The fourth beast represented the fourth kingdom, that is the Roman, and its ten horns represented the same phases of that power, as was represented by the ten toes of the image. But to the prophet was given a more detailed explanation than was given to the king. Daniel was told the ten horns were ten kings, see verse 24. The little horn which arose was to make war with the saints and prevailed against them. Verse 21. Then came the time when the ancient of days did sit and judgment was given to the saints of the most high: and the time came when the saints possessed the kingdom.

Now, I would ask Bible Student, how could the gospel of Christ be the stone which was to smite the image and grind it to powder? The smiting of the image and grinding it to powder would require considerable power, and would signify a violent destruction.

The Gospel of Christ did not allow violence. Did not Christ say—If a man smite thee on the one cheek, turn to him the other also?

Let us turn to the history of the time. Gibbon in his history, The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, does not tell us that it was ground to powder but he does tell us of great persecutions which befell those who professed the name of Christ. Dan. 7:21.

I would entreat Bible Student to consider and study the Book of Revelations. There he will find it is:—The Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto Him, to show unto His servants things (or events) which must shortly come to pass. Rev. 1:1.

The disciples of Jesus expected a restoration of Israel, and after the resurrection of Jesus, asked Him: Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? Acts 1: 6. What is the answer? Did Jesus say, You have misunderstood me? Read His words in the 7th verse. It is not for you to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power.

In Luke 22: 29 and 30, Jesus said to His disciples, And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto Me; that ye may eat and drink at My table in My kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel? Does such plain language signify a literal kingdom? Does it not promise a restoration of the kingdom of Israel? When that promise is fulfilled, will not the words of the angel to Mary also be fulfilled, as recorded in Luke 1:32 and 33. The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. This was the burden of the apostles' teaching. Acts 2:30. Peter says: David being a prophet knew that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, He would raise up Christ to sit on his throne. See also the Prophet Isaiah 9:7. Jer. 23:15. Zech. 6.12, 13. Matt. 19:28.

Jesus says: Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Matt. 5:5; also Ps. 37:11.

This was the theme of the apostles and prophets as shown in the following places: Rev. 3:21, II Tim. 2:12, Rev. 5:10, Rev. 2:26, 27, Dan. 7:18, 27, Ps. 149: 7-9, I Cor. 6: 2, 3, Luke 12:32, II Tim. 3:16.

Paul says in Gal. 3:16: Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made, He saith not, and to seeds as of many, but as one, and to thy seed, which is Christ.

In the 29th verse he says: "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promises.

In Rom. 15:8, we read, Now I, Paul, say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, TO CONFIRM the promises made unto the fathers.

Micah 7:20, says: Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old.

In conclusion, let me ask Bible Student to study these things which I humbly put before him, that he may become a true follower of the lowly Jesus. Remember the Apostle Paul's words to Timothy. II Tim. 2:15, Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

The times of the Gentiles have nearly closed. The seven times of Daniel's prophecy are nearly ended, which will close the Gentiles' times. Then we may expect the return of Christ, who said, Watch! for, in an hour that ye know not the Son of Man cometh. Blessed is he that is found watching.

SAVE YOUR HAIR; SAGE TEA WILL DO IT

Dandruff, Itching Scalp and Falling Hair Quickly, Stopped.

There is one place where baldheaded men shine, and that is in the front row seats of the theatre. If these baldheaded people had used Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy in their earlier days they would not be so conspicuous now. This preparation does not plant new hair, but it does strengthen weak, dying hair, and not only brightens dull, parched hair, but gradually restores the color to faded or gray hair. It is a clean, wholesome hair dressing, which can be used daily with perfect safety.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is sold under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists. Special Agents, Warne Drug Co.

Interesting Figures

In Regard to First Mortgage Bonds of Canadian Locomotive Co'y

The First Mortgage Bonds of the Canadian Locomotive Company, which are being offered to the Canadian investing public, are exceedingly well secured. According to the examination of the Company's books by Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Company, Real Estate, Buildings, Plant and Good Will, have a value of $3,867,911. Net Current Assets in excess of Current Liabilities amount of $1,162,088. Of this latter amount $734,900 represents an investment in municipal and other high grade bonds which are readily marketable and can be turned into cash on short notice. The balance of the Current Assets are represented by Cash in Bank, Inventories, Work in hand and Accounts Receivable. The average earnings for the last four years have been in excess of $280,000, or three times the amount required to meet the interest on the Company's First Mortgage Bonds.

PROJECT ABANDONED

The project to establish a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at Lakefield, has been abandoned for the time being. This was the statement made to the Examiner this morning by Mr. Gilchrist of the local Y. M. C. A. The Association will go to Lakefield on November 17th, where they will put on an exhibition.

CARE OF THE NAILS

Sharp instruments of any kind must not be used on the finger nails.

A bit of wood will answer the same purpose, and that without harm to the skin.

One end should be slightly sharpened, though not pointed.

When the nail is stained beneath the surface the merest thread of absorbent cotton should be wrapped over the thin end of the stick, which is then wet, and rubbed across a piece of moist soap.

If the cotton is then worked to and fro under the nail, that also being wet, the stain will rapidly disappear.

Should it be an obstinate discoloration, a drop of peroxide may be necessary to apply at the same time.

When old skin is removed from the surface at the base of the nails they must be soaked for at least ten minutes to soften the particles adhering.

This is highly important and to omit it is to break the nail enamel. It does not grow over, but remains a dull, boney appearing spot until it is high enough to file off from the top.

The ideal condition for beauty is thinness and transparency.

In polishing, powdered pumice should not be used oftener than once a week, and only once every two weeks if the nails are in good condition.

The friction rubs down surface roughness, but at the same time it slightly thins the enamel.

WEDDING BELLS

HUNTER—MAHOOD.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. Edward Mahood, sr., of Smith, when his niece, Lillie (who lived with him from infancy) became the bride of Mr. Arthur Hunter, of Smith. The bride was given away by her uncle and wore a pretty gown of white marquisette, beaded with pearls over silk and carried white chrysanthemums, while Miss Pearl Ruth, cousin of the bride, acted as bridesmaid. She wore white, trimmed with pink satin and carried pink chrysanthemums. Mr. James Hunter, brother of the groom, was best man.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold locket and chain.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Curry, of Omemee, after which a sumptuous dinner was served.

The bride and groom left on the 4.39 for a short trip. The bride travelled in a black tailored suit with hat to match. On their return they will reside in Smith.

ANOTHER MARVELLOUS CURE BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Ludger Cote's Backache had developed into Bright's Disease, and pains and aches were his portion —Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him.

St. Yvon, Gaspe Co., Que., Nov. 3.—(Special).— Once more a wonderful cure has sent the name of the old Canadian Kidney Remedy ringing through the Province of Quebec. Mr. Ludger Cote, a well known resident of this place, is the man cured and the story of his cure in his own words, is as follows:

"For four years I suffered from Backache, stiffness of the joints and finally Bright's Disease. I could not bend my right leg on account of the pain in my hip and knee. I had terrible pains in the region of the bladder. My eyes were swollen. I was always tired and nervous and took no pleasure in life.

"Finally, I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills and the effect was marvellous. Six boxes cured me completely."

Backache neglected, develops into Bright's Disease. The one sure way to escape its tortures is to cure the Backache when it first starts with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Two Men Killed In The Woods

Special Wire to the Examiner.

MAYS LANDING, N.J., NOV. 1.—Mistaken for deer in the gloom of the early dawn, Constant Steelman and John Yost, business men of Pleasantville, were killed and William Jarvis, of the same place, was injured to-day when a hunter fired at them at Weymouth, six miles from here. The man alleged to have made the fatal mistake is said to be Charles Norcross, a stranger in the neighborhood.

Steelman, who was in the oil business, Yost, a furniture dealer, and Jarvis left Pleasantville at midnight with two friends to hunt deer. Under the New Jersey law the deer season opened to-day, and each hunter is allowed to kill but one a year. Hunting is permitted only on Wednesdays in November, consequently the woods were filled with sportsmen.

The party spent the night in the woods near Weymouth and about daybreak the hunters were walking down a road to take their stands. Without warning a shot was fired from the heavy underbush on the roadside and Steelman, Yost and Jarvis fell. A moment later the man who fired the buckshot stepped into the road and was horrified when he discovered his fatal mistake.

The other two men in the hunting party who escaped the shot secured a vehicle from a nearby farmhouse and the wounded men were started for Pleasantville. Before reaching there Steelman and Yost had died. Both had been shot in the back and Jarvis had received some of the shot in the leg.

The authorities of Atlantic county are making a thorough investigation of the case, but had made no arrest early in the day. The hunter who fired the fatal shot is under surveillance and can be taken into custody at a moment's notice in case the police want him.

THE PETTICOAT

The original "petticoat" appears to have been a man's garment. Early in the fifteenth century Lydgate used the term in his "Chronicl of Troy" for a short coat of armour, and it seemed commonly to have meant an under-tunic. Even when the other sex annexed the word there was for long enough great variety of meaning. Mr. Pepsi, who was an authority on such things, uses the word "petticoat" to mean an ordinary skirt, an underskirt, and a riding-skirt. Men have kept the word in some country parts even to our own time. A "petticoat" meant a waistcoat for "vest" (as the tailor will call it) in Kent in the seventeenth century, and in a modern glossary of Kentish expressions the same meaning still appears.

THE FORD CAR SCORES MORE TRIUMPHS

Great Record at the Automobile Races in Toronto on Thanksgiving Day

Mr. J. J. Duffus has received the following letter from the manager of the Ford Motor Company of Canada:

Dear Sir,—We beg to give you an account of the automobile races held at Exhibition Park on Thanksgiving afternoon.

The first race was a 5-mile race for 20 H.P. cars, 1st, Ford; 2nd, Flanders; 3rd, Flanders. Time, 6 minutes and 14 seconds.

Second event—One mile for track record—Ford, 1 minute, 13 2-6 seconds.

Third exent—one mile, for track record, Ohio car, time 1 minute, 19 4-5 seconds.

Fourth event—one mile for track record—Warren car, time 1 minute, 16 3-5 seconds.

Fifth event—ten mile race for 30 H.P. cars—1st, Warren; 2nd, Ohio; 3, Abbott-Detroit, time, 12 minutes, 56 1-5 seconds. In this race the Ford was leading at the end of the third mile by over a quarter of a lap when our car dropped out, owing to dirt getting in the carburetor.

Sixth event—ten mile free-for-all—1st, Ford; 2nd, Flanders; 3rd, Warren; 4th, Ohio; 5th, Flanders. Time, 12 minutes, 37 2-5 seconds.

You can see by the Free-for-all that our time was some 19 seconds under the winner of the first ten-mile race, and had it not been for the carburetor trouble we would certainly have won this race very easily.

The Dunlop Trophy race, which was to have been for 25 miles, was not run on account of darkness, but this will come off this following Saturday, and no doubt the Ford car will make a fair showing in the 25-mile race.

We trust the foregoing information will be of value to you. The Ford car was certainly the appreciated car of the afternoon, everyone being very much surprised at the speed made.

We might say we now hold the one mile track record on the half-mile track at the Exhibtion, beating Barney Oldfield's time by 1 1-2 seconds.

Yours very truly,
The Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited.

The old friends had had three days together. "You have a pretty place here," remarked the guest on the morning of his departure. "But it looks a bit bare yet." "Oh that's because the trees are so young," answered the host comfortably. "I hope they'll have grown to a good size before you come again."

HIS ANSWER

Once upon a time a very cool man called on his doctor and asked him for medical advice. "Take a tonic and dismiss from your mind all that tends to worry you," said the doctor. Several months afterwards the patient received a bill from the doctor, asking him to remit three guineas, and answered it thus: "Dear Doctor—I have taken a tonic and your advice. Your bill tends to worry me, so I dismiss it from my mind."

A UNIQUE INSURANCE POLICY

Probably one of the most unique insurance policies ever made was recently issued to Countess Thamara de Swirsky, the celebrated Russian dancer. Mlle. de Swirsky is making a tour of the larger American cities. In order to get her signature to a contract for the season, her managers were obliged to guarantee the dancer a large sum of money and, to protect themselves against any accident that might occur, the managers hit upon a plan of insuring the Countess' feet to the extent of $100,000.00. For any pedal disability which, in the opinion of physicians, prevents her from appearing in her dances, the company is obliged to pay $500.00 a week. For the loss of one foot the company must pay the sum of $50,000, and for the loss of both feet the full amount of the policy. If the injury be sustained in an accident in a railway carriage, a motor car, or other conveyance, the policy doubles in value. The premium is $1,000.00 yearly. The Countess, accompanied by her own orchestra ,appears at "The Grand" next Tuesday evening.

OBITUARY

MRS. JAS. LEACH.

Further to the notice appearing in yesterday's issue of the Examiner of the arrival of the remains of Mrs. Jas. Leach by the noon train from Midland, and interment in the Little Lake cemetery, it might be said that Mrs. Leach is the daughter of Mrs. Jane Mongraw, wife of the late James Mongraw, of 183 Hazlett street, East City.

The deceased lady was born in Port Hope in 1881 and later in life came with her parents to reside in Peterborough. On her marriage to Mr. Jas. Leach on June 1st, 1910, she left Peterborough to reside in Midland. Her illness was only of short duration and her demise came as a great shock to her relatives and friends, of whom she was greatly beloved.

In addition to a sorrowing husband Mrs. Leach is survived by four brothers, George, James, Clarence and Harold, all living at home, and four sisters, Mrs. Wood of Saskatoon, Mrs. Walter Bailey East City, Mrs. Smith of Midland and Leva at home.

The Baseball Championship

CHICAGO, NOV. 3.—A plan which will make a radical change in the present system of deciding the worlds baseball championship, it was said here, will be laid before the National Commission, which meets in Cincinnati November 14. The session of the Commission has been called for the purpose of investigating ticket scalping in connection with the recent contest between the Giants and Athletics nd suggesting remedies for the evils which have attended every contest for the diamond supremacy.

Herrmann's Plan.

August Herrmann, chairman of the committee, it is said, has a plan to do away with the present world's championship struggle of seven games and substitute a schedule of sixty contests with the sixteen teams of the two major leagues as the contestants, and cut the regular schedules of the two major organizations to 112 games. In other words each team would be called upon to play 172 games, eighteen more than the present season schedules call for. By eliminating the many open dates the increased number of combats could be decided by the middle of October.

See 'Em All Play.

Herrmann believes it will do away with practically all of the scalping, inasmuch as the games will be regarded much the same as those of the present league schedules. The sixty-game inter-league series would give Detroit, Washington and Cleveland an opportunity of seeing all of the National League which they do not have a chance of viewing now. Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Brooklyn, likewise, will be afforded an opportunity to see the teams play all the American League clubs. Each club would have to meet all the rivals in the opposing organization and the world's championship would be determined on a percentage basis. The team finishing with the best record at the end of the sixty contests would be given the big pennant.

In addition all the major league players would be given a part of the receipts accruing from the post-season games.

CLEVER YOUNGSTER

A superintendent of a city Sunday school endeavoured to give the summer meetings added attractivness. Upon a certain warm Sunday in August lemonade was served. At the close of the service the superintendent announced that slips of paper would be passed round and the pupils allowed to make suggestions as to methods of making the meetings still more attractive. One youngster wrote: "Put more sugar in the lemonade."

THAT'S NAETHING

A Cockney angler, thinking that his Highland boatman was not treating him with the respect due to his station, expostulated thus: "Look here, my good man, you don't seem to grasp quite who I am. Do you know that my family have been entitled to bear arms for the last two hundred years?" "Hoots, that's naething," was the reply, "My ancestors have been entitled to bare legs for the last two thousand years."

FINE RECORD MADE

(Free Press.)

MONTREAL, NOV. 3.—Railway shippers, and especially shippers of live stock, will be interested in the record made by the Soo Line and the Canadian Pacific Railway in transporting a shipment of horses from St. Paul to Vancouver last month. The shipment, which consisted of one hundred and fifty thoroughbred horses, was made from Lexington Ky by Irving H. Wheatcroft, a retired United States railroad man, and the owner of several big stock farms. In shipping his stock via the Soo Line and the C.P.R., the only stipulation of importance made by Mr. Wheatcroft was that the horses should be delivered in good condition at Vancouver in not more than six days after they had left St. Paul.

In forwarding the shipment the C.P.R. not only made delivery at Vancouver within the six days, but cut the time down to under four days. Three days and twenty-one hours to be exact. The special train containing the horses left Minneapolis at 10.15 a.m. on October 13; on Oct. 14, at 6.20 p.m., it reached Portal, and it left Portal the same night at 8.5 o'clock. The trip over the C.P.R. lines from Portal was made in sixty-two hours, Vancouver being reached at 8.50 a.m., October 17. This is remarkable good time, and on the arrival of the horses at Vancouver, Mr. Wheatcroft complimented the C.P.R. officials on the high standard of their freight service. The horses were eventually shipped to Australia on the steamship Kishi, which sailed from Vancouver at 4.30 p.m., October 30th.

Following the announcement of the opening of the new Regina Colonsay Line of the Canadian Pacific Railway on November 5, it is stated that a second new service will be inaugurated on the Alderayde, Alberta subdivision. At present on this line there is a service being operated between Lethbridge and Carmangay, but after November 5th this service will be extended to Aldersyde as since the first service was put on the part of the line from Carmanguay to Aldersyde has been constructed. This line is through a country which is already fairly well settled, and as such will give the farmers along the right-of-way good transportation facilities. The new stations between Carmanguay and Alderayde are: Champion, Kircaldy, Vulcan, Ensign, Brant, Blackie, and Gladys. From Lethbridge to Aldersyde it is 84.9 miles; from Carmanguay to Alderayde, which is the part of the line on which the new service will be inaugurated, it is 57 miles.

This is one of the longest of the new branches which has been finished by the C.P.R. this year, and it is an important one, as at Aldersyde it makes connection with the Macleod Calgary branch. The service which will be inaugurated is a daily, except Sunday, one.

WHERE HE SHONE

The "widow" stroked Ty's paw and Ty stroked back in real campus lover fashion and with two strikes and three balls on him ran he rapped a home run into the bleachers by printing a chaste salute upon the alabaster brow of the "widow." It was nifty stuff and compelled the actor-ball player to respond with a speech, which tickled the fancy of the audience.

The production was well put on by Vaughan Glaser, who is handling the tour of the baseball star, and the venture should be a profitable one for manager and star.

FOOTBALL

All of the regulars, with the exception of Frank Heffernan, answered the roll on Thursday. Heff is still taking the rest cure for his injured thigh. Although he will be a big loss to the team, it is possible that Heffernan will not play to-day. He is wanted for the game in Toronto, and for that reason Father Stanton will try to have him in the very best possible condition. Heffernan is one of the heaviest and fastest travellers on the team. This will mean that Dick Sheehy will be in the game from the start to-day. Whether Heffernan is able to play or not, Dick will play in the game as he is a most strenuous worker and in good trim. There are one or two other men who were badly used up in the game against Queens and would appreciate a good rest before the 'Varsity game.—Ottawa Free Press.

Ty Cobb as an Actor

TRENTON, N.J., NOV. 2.—Not content with grabbing the twig of laurel in the baseball world and scoring on a sacrifice in the reportorial game, Ty Cobb broke into the theatrical world, and though he swung at some wild ones, managed to connect for a "Baker" before the game ended, and chopped another niche in the hall of fame. True, it wasn't such a big niche this time, but the dent was perceptible.

The "Georgia Peach" isn't attempting to elevate the stage. He is out for the money, but, be it said to his credit, he is no lemon when it comes to the histrionic. No one expected Tyrus to shade the efforts of Sothern, Forbes Robertson, Gawge Cohan, Dave Warfield, et al., but he accepted all chances, ran on everything, and scored more times than any one of the team.

The Detroit star is playing the leading role, "Billie Bolton," the dashing half-back, in the George Ade play, "The College Widow." To say that he surprised the wiseacres is putting it mildly.

In the straight scenes Ty took things easy, and made no attempt to hit the wild ones, his lines "going over" every time. When Tyrus en-

TOLD HIS SISTER

Once at a dinner Henry Ward Beecher told his sister, Mrs. Harriet Beecher-Stowe, that her "Uncle Tom's Cabin" had been translated into Italian by a monk; and that a letter full of adulation had been received by him, in which he stated that if he could kiss the woman who wrote the book he would die happy. Mr. Beecher then added, "Well, I sent him a portrait of you, Harriet, and nothing has been heard of him since."

GOOD REPLY

On board one of the Scottish steamers, which have been built with exceedingly light draft to get over the frequent shallows of one of the rivers in Scotland, a Yankee tourist remarked to the captain, a shrewd old Scotsman, "I guess, skipper, that you think nothing of steaming across a meadow when there has been a heavy fall of dew." "That's so," replied the captain, "though occasionally we hae tae send a man ahead wi a watering-can."

WONDERS WHY

To earn money and pay bills seem to occupy most of a man's time, and he wonders why he isn't happy. When he learns to earn love, and pay attention to his wife, happiess will ooze into his home through every crack and keyhole.

WAIT A MINUTE

The man in bed had never been sick before. The doctor, wishing to ascertain his temperature, pointed the thermometer at him, and commanded, "Open your mouth, James." "Wait a minute, doctor," objected the patient, "I don't believe I can swallow that."

CLEVER AMATEUR

Brown tried to quarrel with his mother-in-law the other night. He had married the eldest of seven girls. She said: "Brown, my lad, I'm no gauntae ruin my reputation by quarrelling wi' ye. Wait till a' the lassies are married. At present as a mother-in-law I'm only an amateur."

NA, NA

In a country town in the south of Scotland there was a proposal to start a Pleasant Sunday Afternoon meeting, but objections were raised, and it was resolved to hold a meeting to discuss the situation. When the debate was at its height one of the clergy arose and, banging his fist on the table, exclaimed: "Na, na, we'll hae nane o' that here; my congregation never had a pleasant Sunday afternoo, and with my will ad the help of the Lord they never will have one!"

A ONE-MAN SHOW

The manager of a well-known touring compan ywired to the proprietor of a theatre in a small town where his company was to appear: "Would like to hold a rehearsal at your theatre at three o'clock to-morrow afternoon. Have your stage manager, stage carpenter, assistant stage carpenter, property man, chief electrician and all stage hands present promptly at that hour." Three hours later he received the following reply: "All right. He will be there."

THE ICEBERG AT SEA

A lady passenger on a steamer, who was very nervous and the cause of great irritation to the captain, said to him one day, "Captain, I'm so terribly afraid of icebergs! What would happen if there should be a collision between us and an iceberg? Please tell me frankly; I can bear the truth." "Why, madam," said the captain, without a moment's hesitation, "the iceberg would move along just as if nothing had happened!" "It would!" exclaimed the nervous passenger. "Oh, thank you, captain."

SINT BY THE WORKERS

In a certain factory it was the custom to pay the hands every fortnight, but the men, finding his incoveniet, decided to send a representative to the head of the firm, to be asked to b paid weekly. An Irishman was selected for the task, and duly waited on the "guv'nor," who said: "Well, Michael, what can I do for you?" "If ye plase, sor," said Mike, "I've been aint by the workers to ask a favour of ye regardin' the paymint of our wages." "What do they want?" "Sor, it is the desire of mesilf an' of ivery man in the establishment that we reseyve all our fortnightly pay every week."

HAPPY THOUGHTS

An Irish doctor, while enjoying a holiday in the country, took the opportunity along with a friend to go fishing. During operations the doctor's sinker came off and was lost. He was ni a dilemma—no sinker, no more fishing that day. Happy thought; he had a bottle in his pocket. The bottle was filled with water, carefully corked and set down on its mission. After a few minutes' interval the doctor had a bite and pulled up his line at racing speed, finding a fine pair of fish, one on each hook. "Ha, doctor, twins this time," exclaimed his companion. "Yes," quoth the doctor, "and brought up on the bottle, too."

QUAINTLY PUT

A letter from a sailor to his sweetheart closes: "May heaven cherish and keep you from yours truly Patrick M'Swiggen." Jenkins wrote to thank his aunt for a large goose sent him for his Christmas dinner: "You could not have sent me a more acceptable present, or one that could have reminded m of you mor pleasantly." A young lady's letter from Venice was as follows: "Last night I lay in a gondola on the Grand Canal drinking it all in, and life never seemed so full before." A bride's letter of thanks stated: "Your beautiful clock was received and is now in the drawing-room on the mantelpiece, where we hope to see you often."

SOUND ADVICE

"Never permit yourself to say of any boy that he will never amount to anything," sourly remarked the old codger. "The power of suggestion is great, and an echo of your derogatory estimate may find lodgment in his heart and develop into a habit of self-underestimation until in the course of time your depreciatory opinion becomes an appropriate appraisement. It is also possible that later on he may become your son-in-law. I was once unwise enough to express such an opinion about a certain boy, and he grew up ad became a justice of the peace; last week I was sued before him, and he remembered my remark and gave the verdict to the other fellow."

"Get-Hitched-Quick" Chester.

New York, Nov. 4.—"Get-Hitched-Quick" Chester is what all his friends are now calling George Randolph Chester, the creator of "Get-Rich-Quick" Wallingford. Although the interlocutory decree obtained by his first wife on Oct. 11 was not to take effect until three months, the author on Ot. 12 in Paris, wedded Lillian Deremo, who was named as co-respondent in the divorce case. Chester did not realise that he had committed bigamy until his arrival in New York Thursday with his new bride, and he was met by the ship reporters, who informed him he had committed bigamy. After a consultation with his attorney he decided to land in New York, and later, learning that his first wife did not intend to take any action against him, he became somewhat reassured.

Mrs. Chester, No. 2, a little woman with drooping eyes, was recognised by several persons on the Hoboken pier as a former friend of the first Mrs. Chester, who lived with the Chesters in this city for some time before Mrs. Chester's suspicions were aroused and her suit decided upon.

Missing Man at Barrie.

Barrie, Nov. 4.—James A. Clark, the blind young man who left his home in Toronto three weeks ago and whose whereabouts has caused considerable anxiety to his mother, has been working in Barrie for the past two weeks.

Clark thinks there was no need for any anxiety. He stated that as his father and mother had separated, he had taken care of his mother, who was of a very nervous temperament. His eyesight being affected, his mother was anxious for him to get employment in a piano factory near home, but this he found it difficult to do, and finally decided to seek employment elsewhere.

Berlin, Nov. 4.—George Dahmer, aged 56, a yardman of the G.T.R., was struck by the Toronto train here yesterday and instantly killed. Dahmer was working alone cleaning the switches and the manner in which he met his death is not known. The body was hurled to one side, the head being considerably crushed and the legs and hips broken.

Dahmer is survived by a wife and five children.

SHANGHAI IS TAKEN

Chinese Rebels Capture the City Without a Fight

GOV'R'S RESIDENCE BURNED

Shanghai, Nov. 4.—Except for the foreign concessions Shanghai to-day is entirely in the hands of the revolutionists, who captured the city late yesterday afternoon. There was practically no resistance, only a few shots being fired. All the Chinese soldiers have joined the rebels, and the police and firemen apparently are sympathizing with them for they are wearing white badges on their arms.

The Associated Press correspondent yesterday afternoon covered the entire outlying section of Shanghai, but did not discover a single instance of disorder. Even in the native city where the Taotai's yamen, was burned to the ground, complete order prevailed. Every courtesy is being shown foreigners.

The soldiers, police and firemen are continuing on duty. The shops are closed. The natives are evincing almost childish delight over the fact that the new Government has taken over the affairs of the city. Their pleasure, however, is not of a demonstrative nature.

While the action of the rebels was expected the movement was made quickly. About 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon a slight disturbance occurred in the northern section of the city, and shortly afterward throughout the native city notices were posted announcing that "the military government of China" had taken over Shanghai. It warned the populace against disorder.

Quickly following the demands for the surrender of the arsenal came an attempt to cut the wires of the Nanking-Shanghai Railway, which was frustrated personally by A. W. U. Pope, general manager of the company. Mr. Pope found an armed revolutionary inside the station, and disarmed him. Then he telephoned the British consul that the railway property was threatened, and the British volunteers of Shanghai were called out and mounted guard over the station and outlying properties. This action has caused much comment, because this section of the railway is entirely outside the connection.

The apparent breach of neutrality is defended because the British bondholders claim a prior right in the railway property. The revolutionaries say they were prepared to maintain order, and while they intended to seize the railway they did not intend to destroy it. Therefore the British consul's action in calling out the British volunteers is regarded by the revolutionists as the first breach of neutrality, and its effect may be far-reaching. Throughout the night 70 armed Britishers stood guard over the railway property, while on the other side of the road an equal number of uniformed Chinese police, wearing the white badge, were drawn up and claiming the right on behalf of the Chinese revolutionary government to maintain order. It is said that the British guard is only a temporary one, and that the volunteers will soon be withdrawn into the concession.

During the night there was desultory firing in the city, and two or three persons were killed and several wounded.

The revolutionists have opened the warehouses and distributed rifles and revolvers. It is estimated that over two thousand volunteers were included in the Government forces that went over to the revolutionaries when they took the city. The rebels will ship machine guns and ammunition from here to Hankow.

China's Magna Charta.

Pekin, Nov. 4.—The draft of the tentative constitution proposed by the National Assembly contains the following clauses:

A person of the Taching dynasty (the great pure dynasty, the same being the name adopted by the ruling family) shall be Emperor inviolable.

The power of the Emperor shall be limited by the constitution.

The order of succession to the throne shall be prescribed by the constitution.

The power of amending the constitution shall belong to Parliament.

Parliament shall elect and the Emperor shall appoint the Premier, who will recommend the other members of the Cabinet, who shall also be appointed by the Emperor. The Imperial princes will be ineligible to the office of Premier or as members of the Cabinet or administrative heads of the province.

If the Premier when impeached by Parliament does not dissolve Parliament he must resign.

Imperial decrees cannot be issued to replace the law except in the event of urgent necessity in which case they may be issued in accordance with special conditions.

In case the financial budget fails to receive the approval of Parliament, the Government may not act upon the budget of the previous year nor may items of expenditure not provided for in the budget, be appended thereto. The Government shall not adopt extraordinary financial measures outside the budget.

Her parents named her Marguerite,
And friends and kinsfolk said, "How sweet!"
But here I will relate to you
What happened as she upward grew.

Her older sister called her Meg.
Her teasing brother called her Peg.
Her girlish chums to Daisy took,
Plain Maggie satisfied the cook,

And Madge she was to her papa,
And Margie to her fond mamma,
And Peggie in her grandma's voice,
And Magpie as her grandpa's choice.

While Rita she herself preferred.
Now, in this list with names replete,
Pray, what became of Marguerite?

More Details About the Disastrous Fire in London

GUNPOWDER TAKEN OUT

London, Nov. 4.—Six of the largest business houses were destroyed by a fire, the most costly one to visit London in a quarter of a century, early yesterday morning.

The total losses are $870,000, with a total insurance of $535,000. The losses in detail were as follows:

Total value of buildings $240,000, insurance $180,000; loss $190,000.

Stock, value $650,000, insurance $555,000; loss $680,000.

Total loss, $870,000.

The fire broke out at 3.57 a.m., and was first noticed by Sergt. Macdonald and P. C. Fowler.

At 6 o'clock all the six places were burned out: Purdom Hardware Co., J. H. Chapman & Co., Kingsmills, Brewster and Roome, Corbett & Co.

Shortly after the time the firemen got control of the blaze. That the fire was not more far-reaching in its destination is due altogether to the splendid efforts of the firemen and the great pressure furnished by the new water system.

Fire was first seen issuing from Chapman's store, and, in an instant, so it seemed, the building was a mass of flames.

Flames were shooting clear across the street when the firemen arrived. Fifteen streams were turned into the blaze in very quick order and the fight for the mastery commenced. In a few minutes the fire got into Kingsmill's dry goods' store and in an incredibly short time that place of business was in flames.

Fire Chief Aiken remembered that in the basement of the Purdom Hardware Co. at the rear on Cartage street, was a lot of gun powder and oils stored, and he sent some of his men down to bring the stuff out.

This was done and that source of danger got over.

Shortly after that the wind, which had been strong, died down and the flames began to show signs of lessening in intensity.

The walls crashed down and then the firemen had a momentarily advantage. Quick to seize the opportunity, they poured the big streams into the midst of the blaze and their work began to tell.

Fire at North Bay.

North Bay, Ont., Nov. 4.—Fire which broke out at midnight destroyed the refrigerator factory of E. M. Bogart, and the frame buildings belonging to Thomas Lafrance and John Connolly, used for warehouse purposes.

Two firemen were hurt when the hose wagon collided with a pole while being driven to avoid some excavations in the street. The horses then ran away.

Fire at Bethany.

Bethany, Nov. 4.—Fire broke out about 11.30 Thursday night in the Sisson Block, burning Jackson's grocery and butcher shops, Sisson's barber shop, also the Town Hall, Chas. Reynold's undertaking and hardware shops, and T. G. Brereton's drug store. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Children Caused Fatal Fire.

Becker, Minn., Nov. 4.—Ruth and Eddie Cox, small children, were burned to death Thursday night in their home, and the fire destroyed the business portion of the town. It is thought the children overturned a lamp.

I wonder, as my mind with counsel teems
For every class of man the world has known,
Just why another's business always seems
Much easier to master than my own!

GETS THE LION'S SHARE

France Comes Out Best in the Moroccan Treaty

Berlin, Nov. 4.—Simultaneous with the news of the conclusion of the Morocco controversy comes the announcement that Emperor William has accepted the resignation of Dr. Von Linderquist, Secretary of State for the Colonies. This resignation is a significant symptom of the unpopularity of the bargain within as well as outside the Government, and the debate in the Reichstag next Wednesday promises to be as severe an ordeal for Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollwegg as that in November, 1908, was for Chancellor Von Buelow.

The definition of France's predominant position in Morocco occupies three of the fourteen articles of the treaty. The next nine contain a long series of guarantees and precautions to secure citizens of all countries equal commercial and economic opportunities in the country under French domination and close up all imaginable openings for favoritism. France obligated itself to see that the various directors of the Moroccan National Bank, which is an international institution, represent the bank on the permanent customs commission, changing yearly, so that other powers may get an insight into Moroccan customs affairs. The directors of the bank will interchange similarly in the holding of membership on the board of public contracts.

France undertakes to have the Moroccan Government permit foreign owners of mining and farming lands and of manufacturing establishments, without respect to their nationality, to build railways connecting their concerns with state roads or seaports.

A yearly report of the state railways must be issued after examination by the censors of the National Bank, who also will have the right to demand additional information from the managers. Troubles between foreign citizens are to be adjudicated by a board of arbitration consisting of the consuls of the countries involved. When they are unable to agree they shall appeal to the French consul, who will co-operate with them in naming a board of arbitration. This process will also apply to grievances against the Government and the French.

The Congo changes are more limited than were first expected. Germany will get only from four to seven miles of the Congo River, sufficient to establish a steamer trading station, and cedes a small triangle between the Logone and Shari Rivers, south of Lake Tchad. Togoland is not mentioned in the treaty.

England Must Keep Out.

Berlin, Nov. 4.—In making public last night a complete summary of the treaty concerning Morocco arranged by Foreign Secretary Herr Von Kiderlin-Waechter, and the French Ambassador, M. Cambon, the Foreign Office issued the following statement:

"The German Government believes that both parties can be in accord over the contents of the new treaty. It will have a calming effect not only upon conditions between Germany and France, but also upon the general political situation.

Germany stands at the conclusion of this treaty in the same position as to French undertakings in Morocco as does England. It is especially emphasized that England has not interfered in the negotiations."

Arthur Belleghem Won Tne Belmont Pool Tourney

One of the most interesting pool tournaments ever held under the auspices of the Belmont club was concluded last night, and resulted in a win for Mr. Arthur Belleghem. His opponent in the finals was Mr. Fred Heaslip of the Quaker Oats staff, who shot excellent pool. The score in the finals was 32-50.

At the opening of the tournament several weeks ago there were about twenty-five contestants, and as a result, the competition for a place in the finals was keen. It might be mentioned, however, that the contest was purely a club affair and simply introduced for the purpose of arousing enthusiasm among the members.

Mr. J. T. C. Lang, an excellent pool player, and a hard man to beat, fell down before Mr. Fred Heaslip's strong right arm in the semi-finals. Mr. William Martin also did some spectacular playing, but sad to relate, he met with a similar fate.

The prize to the winner was a handsome mother of pearl and mahogany inlaid cue, and was donated by Mr. C. G. Graham, that popular promoter of all kinds of sport.

Hockey Executive

There will be a meeting of the Executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club to-night at 8 o'clock in the Examiner office. A full attendance of members is requested as business of importance is to come up for discussion. The date of the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association is only a short distance away, and there are matters that must receive the attention of the local executive before that time. The annual meeting of the Club will not be called until the return to the city of President Sam. Ray.

TOMMIE McAULIFFE,

The little Ennismore boy who was second in the Examiner junior road race on Monday. McAuliffe ran a remarkable race, considering that it was the first contest of the kind he had been in. He was only beaten by a few feet after a great struggle.

FOR HOT SPRINGS PHILLIES

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.—President Horace Fogel of the Philadelphia Nationals has decided to have his club get in shape at Hot Springs next season. The team will leave for camp on Feb. 29th. The Phillies will use the new baseball park of the Hot Springs Park Company.

The Phillies will remain at Hot Springs for nearly a month and may not risk getting out of condition by the weather booking any exhibition games en route back, but come straight home, leaving on March 27th, so as to be here in time to play the first game of the next spring series with the Athletics on Saturday, March 30th.

BASEBALL BREVITIES

At a recent meeting of the Cotton States League the salary limit was reduced to $1,250 for twelve players, including the manager. A. Lewis, of Jackson, Miss., was elected president of the organization.

Now it is Honus Wagner of the Pirates that is mentioned as the next manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

Jimmy McAleer is confident that Jake Stahl will consent to play again and to join the Boston Red Sox.

The Cardinals' defeat at the hands of the Browns and the White Sox killing the Cubs were the real surprises of the post-season games.

By playing in every position on the Denver team, W. J. Kenworthy equalled the record made by "Runt" Walsh of the Philadelphia Nationals.

Jack Dalton, the speedy outfielder, who was with Newark last season, will be retained by the Toronto club, who purchased him from Brooklyn.

J. E. LEAN,

Of Camberne, Ont., who was second in the Examiner road race on Monday. He beat Willis, Smith and other men, who were fancied to have a good chance.

(October Rod and Gun)

Don't grasp a gun by the barrel and drag it after you out of a boat.

Don't carry more than a small quantity of whiskey with you on your hunt.

Don't under any circumstances allow your gun muzzle to point for one single instant at any living thing you do not mean to kill.

Don't allow yourself to carry a cocked gun in your hands, not even if you are alone. A sudden stumble may fire it and you can never tell where the contents may go.

Don't carry a loaded gun into your camp or stopping place. And be absolutely sure that every cartridge is taken out of it before you go near the door.

Don't go away from your camp before you have familiarized yourself with the lay of the land and the land marks within at least a radius of half a mile.

O. TAYLOR, OF THE Y.M.C.A.

OUR MISERIES

If all the misery which many people suffer in this world could be traced to the source from which it springs, it would be found that the greater portion of it emanates from their own errors and mistakes in life, but unfortunately for the good of mankind, this is never known, for each one—whose misery is made apparent to the world—conceals the real cause of it within his own breast.

IN GENERAL

To be interesting you must tell the truth audaciously.

No man did evil to another without doing a greater evil to himself.

The reason your rival can afford to advertise is because he advertises.

I am an old man and have had many troubles, but most of them never happened.

One man can be parted from another, but there is no dividing us from ourselves.

It signifies as little to wish well without well doing as to do good without willing it.

If it is not keeping time, or stops occasionally, bring it to our repair department.

MORE BECOMING

A Glasgow minister tells the following incident: Having observed that one of his congregation was in the habit of gazing about the church during the prayers, he told him one day that he considered it would be more becoming in a worshipper to keep his eyes decently closed. "Doesn't the Scripture bid us watch as well as pray?" replied the man. "And hoo can a body watch wi' their een steekit? Na, na; I'll just stan' and glower aboot as I hae aye dune!"

WOMEN WERE BUTCHERED

Londo, Nov. 6.—"Ananias in his palmiest days never wrote half so many falsehoods and misrepresentations as have appeared in the Italian press in the official statements issued by the Italian Government," telegraphs the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co., Limited, at Tripoli, who arrived at Malta Saturday.

From Malta he was able to send an uncensored message which contains a pessimistic description of the condition of the Italian army around what he terms the besieged City of Tripoli. He says: "To sum up the results of the campaign, the Italians hold with nearly twice as many men, half the ground that they held three weeks ago. They have lost in killed and wounded, not counting the sick, well over 1,000 men. Many Arabs have been killed and vast numbers were shot in cold blood. Now 25,000 soldiers find themselves with their backs to the sea, cramped and confined, with an active enemy within a few yards of them and with cholera raging among them, for despite official efforts to conceal the truth, there have been many cases among the troops, and the civil population is suffering so much that whole streets in Tripoli have been closed by armed sentries.

"There has been no disgrace. On the contrary, the Italian troops fought with great courage, and their officers set a noble example.

"For four days after the engagement of Oct. 23, the Italian soldiers engaged in indiscriminate slaughter of the Arab population under Gen. Caneva's sanction," continues the correspondent. "Caneva first issued a general order to shoot all Arabs found with arms, but only when caught by troops in charge of officers. The troops complained that numbers of Arabs had hidden their arms and resumed work as innocent husbandmen. Thereupon Gen. Caneva issued another order, to shoot all Arabs who could reasonably be suspected of having borne arms."

The correspondent gives instances witnessed by himself and his colleagues, and follows with signed statements by the latter, made at the request of the British consul, and affidavits of three German residents in refutation of the Italian Premier's denial that women and children were shot. These statements, which are likely to stimulate the agitation against Italian methods, are beginning to excite Europe.

Grain Vessels Stalled.

Ogdensburg, N.Y., Nov. 6.—Six steamers and nine barges, all laden to full capacity with grain for Montreal, are held up by low water in the lifting lock of the St. Lawrence Canal. Work in lightering the half-million bushels of grain to vessels of less draught has begun, as there is no prospect of normal water, and the navigation season is drawing to a close.

Toronto Railway Loses Its Appeal.

Toronto, Nov. 6.—Judgment was given in the Court of Appeal on Saturday, dismissing the appeal of the Toronto Railway Co. against the order of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board of Aug. 10, directing the company to repair, renew and restore the tracks and substructure on a portion of Dundas street. Costs are against the railway.

SHANGHAI IS QUIET.

Rebels Are Preserving Excellent Order In Captured City.

Shanghai, Nov. 6.—The first night after the capitulation of the city to the revolutionists passed uneventfully. Perfect order was maintained in Shanghai and the outlying districts, which constitutes a remarkable feature of the movement. Liping Shu is the responsible head of the new administration in the native city and suburbs, and is now engaged in completing his organization. He informed the correspondent that he recognized only the Republic of Han, and would guarantee order. The only disorderly elements, he said, now in China are the former officials, their supporters and the Manchu troops, who would never again be permitted to control.

There is reason to believe that the revolutionary sentiment throughout the south strongly favors the unconditional abdication of the Emperor and the establishment of an entirely new regime. Yuan Shi Kai will be repudiated if he adheres to the Manchus. He might become the head of the Government and receive universal support if he separated himself from his former alliance. There is, however, a growing suspicion and distrust of Yuan Shi Kai.

Money Chaos In Pekin.

Pekin, Nov. 6.—Yuan Shi Kai still declines to accept the Premiership, although assured of the support of the National Assembly and Gen. Chang, in command of the Lanchau troops. Both the Assembly and Gen. Chang, however, insist that when the Parliament is elected the Premier shall be chosen by that body.

In the meantime affairs here are in a state of chaos. No tangible head of the Government is visible. The Government urgently needs funds and hopes that the Franco-Belgian loan will be forthcoming, to enable the military operations and the administration to be carried on. The international group refuses to supply war funds. The Government is urging the group to advance money in order to allay the threatened financial and public deadlock in Pekin, as it is feared that the non-circulation of money will cause serious hardships to the coolies and the lower classes, which possibly might lead to local disturbances.

Furniture Ablaze.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 6.—Fire broke out in a load of furniture which Richard Simmons of Blenheim was moving to Chatham Saturday afternoon and completely destroyed the whole load before it could be extinguished. Simmons had to leap hurriedly from the top of the load and unhitch his horses. In a few moments furniture and wagon were reduced to ashes. Simmons does not know what caused the fire, as there were no matches anywhere in the load. He was severely burned about the face and hands.

Father Sherman Ill.

Boston, Nov. 6.—Suffering from a mental ailment, due to overwork, in his missionary labors, Rev. Thomas Sherman, S.J., son of the famous civil war general, William T. Sherman, has entered a sanitarium in Brookline. Eeight weeks ago Father Sherman was taken ill while conducting a mission in Missouri. He was taken to New York, but within a few days at the request of relatives, was sent to the Brookline sanitarium.

To Stay Execution.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 6.—Lawyers for Henry C. Beattie, jr., under death sentence for the murder of his young wife, filed with the Supreme Court of Appeals yesterday a petition for a writ of error.

This constitutes an appeal from the judgement of the court at Chesterfield, which sentenced Beattie to be electrocuted on Nov. 24. Unless the court gives a decision before the day set for Beattie's execution, this move will act as a stay.

THREE ARE INJURED

Toronto Auto Victim May be Fatally Hurt

COLLIDED WITH TROLLEY

Toronto, Nov. 6.—Still another motor car accident was added to the year's long list yesterday, when a machine collided with a street car at Harbord and Grace street, at 2.30 o'clock, and three of the passengers in the motor were injured, one very seriously. As well, a dozen people in the street car was considerably shaken up. The injured are:

Mrs. Jane A. Holstead, 71 Madison avenue, fractured skull, may die.

George J. Reid, Mount Forest, badly shaken up and cut about the face; not serious.

Mrs. G. J. Reid, badly shaken up and suffering from shock, cut about face; not serious.

Mrs. Jane A. Holstead, wife of the owner of the car, was thrown out, falling on her head. She sustained a fractured skull along with other injuries, and at the Western Hospital early this morning it was announced that she had not yet regained consciousness. The other four occupants of the car fared better, though all were shaken up, and two were cut by glass from the street car and from the front of the motor.

The accident is the first that has happened on Harbord street in connection with a street car since the service was inaugurated recently.

The motor was traveling east back of an eastbound street car. At Grace street the car stopped and the chauffeur of the motor turned northward, running behind it, with the intention of going up Grace street. But a westbound street car was approaching on the other tracks and before the motor could clear it the car struck the back end. The force of the collision was so great that a half-inch iron rod in the fender of the car was broken in two, the fender and the front of the car were smashed up and the rear of the motor car was wrecked.

When they came together the motor car was pushed along for a distance before it became disengaged. Then it swerved around so that the rear wheels banged against the curb.

The street car was going at considerable speed when the collision took place, but the motor car had slowed down to turn. In the street car were about a dozen people, who were jolted around by the shock of the collision.

The three injured persons were taken to the Western Hospital. Mr. and Mrs. Reid were able to be taken to the residence of their host, Mr. Holstead, several hours later. Neither Holstead nor the chauffeur, William Lowe, were injured.

The injured were rushed to the hospital in other motor cars that came along.

Mr. Reid is manager of the Mount Forest branch of the Traders' Bank.

Revenue Grows.

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—The Dominion financial statement for October shows a revenue during the month of $12,221,-653.27, as against $9,666,192.96 in October last year. The ordinary expenditure for the month was $4,384,903.11, as compared with $4,089,436.69 in the same month of 1910.

The revenue for the seven months is $76,291,178.04, as compared with $65,814,386.28 in the same period of last year, while the expenditure for the months has been $40,296,359.13, against $41,208,109.65.

The capital expenditure for the month was $2,561,812.30, against $3,-546,270.93, and it is worthy of note that there were no payments on account of bounties. For the seven months the capital expenditure has been $14,689,839.43, as against $15,-979,416.24. The public debt decreased by $5,344,844.50 during the month.

Couple Commit Suicide.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—A suicide agreement is believed to have wiped out the family of Henry Letch Saturday, Letch, his wife and their 12-year-old son, Leroy, were found dead in their home in Irving Park, a residence suburb, Saturday. There were no signs of violence, nor escaping gas, and the first examination indicated they had died from mushroom poisoning.

That the deaths were the result of both father and mother becoming lifeweary after at least three years of struggling to get up courage for suicide was indicated by a note written in German found in one of the rooms.

The letter contained statements that Letch and his wife were dissatisfied with their church affairs, and had planned suicide for the last three years.

Fruit Grower Hurt.

Hamilton, Nov. 6.—Fred. Bell, a wealthy Burlington fruit grower, was perhaps fatally injured near Burlington Junction early yesterday morning, when the G.T.R. newspaper train from Toronto crashed into the rig which Bell was driving.

The injured man was brought to this city on the newspaper train and taken immediately to the City Hospital, where he now lies in a critical condition. Compound fractures of both legs, severe scalp injuries and internal injuries were suffered by Bell.

Both horses attached to the wagon which he was driving were killed.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

The shunting engine at the G.T.R. station shunted a box car off the track at Woodstock on Saturday, and a considerable amount of wreckage was strewn about.

The Reid Newfoundland Co.'s steamer Clyde has been ashore for the past twenty-four hours on a shoal at the entrance of Little Bay, on the north coast of the colony.

For the first time this season ice spanned St. John River Saturday. At Upper Maugerville the river is frozen over sufficiently to prevent wooden steamers getting through.

Benjamin Smith, a wool buyer of Binghampton, N.Y., was found murdered on the street Saturday. There was a leather strap around his neck and his skull was crushed.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier, the new Postmaster-General, will be entertained at a banquet on Dec. 2 next by his friends of Quebec City. It promises to be a most imposing affair.

Thieves on Saturday forced an entrance to the general store of Herman Mackenzie, Chippawa, Ont., while the proprietor was absent. They rifled the till and obtained nearly $50.

London mothers need no longer remain away from church because of crying babies. Rev. H. H. Bingham of Talbot street Baptist Church is to have a nursery where the children will be cared for.

The committee appointed to solicit subscriptions for the erection of a monument over the grave of General Wolfe has met with gratifying success, over $4,000 having been already subscribed in Winnipeg alone.

Crazed by drink, Antonio Teoli, a Montreal Italian, last evening drew a revolver in his room and fired at four-year-old Roch Stephano, the son of his boarding-house keeper. The shot did not penetrate the skull, and the youngster will recover.

Hon. Sydney Fisher's Views.

Montreal, Nov. 6.—The inability of the Conservatives to produce a single argument against reciprocity; the triumph of brains over money in constituencies lost by that party; and the victory of sentimentalism and anti-American feeling in those which the Conservatives won, was the view of the recent election adopted by the Hon. S. A. Fisher in a speech at a banquet tendered him by the Reform Club Saturday night.

The speaker also foresaw a new election shortly and prophesied trouble for the present administration, owing to the different elements composing it. The speaker's sentiments were enthusiastically applauded by his followers.

WHI Hold Conference.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 6.—There will be no strike by shopmen on the Rock Island Railroad until a conference with a committee of three from each of the five federated unions is refused by the Rock Island officials, according to the statement made by J. H. Franklin, international president of the Boilermakers' Union.

Demands for a wage increase for shop employes have been made on the Wabash Railroad and refused, according to Mr. Franklin. Although negotiations have not been broken off, it was declared probable that the Wabash would be drawn into the strike involving the Illinois Central and the Harriman lines and threatening the Rock Island.

Will Fight Government.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 6.—Demurrers were filed by the officers of the United Shoe Machinery Co. in the U. S. Circuit Court Saturday to the indictments recently returned against them for alleged violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The defendants deny that their business comes within the scope of the Sherman Act, inasmuch as the machinery sold and leased by the United Company was entirely covered by letters patent.

Head Was Blown Off.

Kingston, Nov. 6.—Robert W. Curragh, aged 18, son of James Curragh, Stuart street, was accidentally killed while out shooting at Collins' Lake yesterday morning.

Meagre particulars have been received, but it is believed that his rifle exploded. He had gone on a hunting trip with a companion.

U. S. EXPERTS GIVE PRIZE

New York, Nov. 6.—The announcement of Canada's victory over the U. S. in the contest for the prize offered by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the best wheat, spring or summer, grown on either continent of America, was made Saturday afternoon at the Land Show in Madison Square Garden. The committee of award, composed of C. G. Williams, agronomist at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station; Prof. Alfred Atkinson of the Montana Agricultural College, and Prof. William F. Jardine of the Kansas State College, concurred in the official statement that Canada raises the best wheat in the world.

The winner of the world-beating wheat was Seager Wheeler of Bosthern, Sask., Canada. He received a prize of $1,000 in gold. Another Canadian, W. L. Glass, of McLeod, Alta., was the alternate.

The $1,000 silver cup given by James J. Hill of the Great Northern Railway, for the best 100 pounds of wheat grown in the United States in 1911, was won by James Todd of Geyser, Mont. William H. Dorin of Glover, Va., won a $1,000 silver cup for 30 ears of Indian corn. The $1,000 silver cup for oats was awarded to Patton & Hartmann of Boseman, Mont.

R. Esinger of Manhattan, Mont., won a $1,500 silver cup and the honor of having raised the best bushel of barley in the country. This cup was given by Col. Gustav Pabst. California came to the fore in the start staple cotton contest, and the $1,000 silver prize cup went to the American Nile Co. of El Centro, that state. W. X. Sudduth of Montana, and Asabel Smith of British Columbia, respectively, won the $1,000 silver cup and the $1,000 silver trophy for the best alfalfa and potatoes.

Board Is Regular.

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—The Department of Labor has written to Rev. Dr. Sparling, chairman of the conciliation board, in connection with the dispute between the Grand Trunk Pacific and its men replying to the statement of the company that the board was not legally constituted.

The Department takes the stand that the board was properly formed, according to the Industrial Disputes Act. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., was first appointed by the company as its representative on the board. After considerable delay Mr. Nesbitt notified the Labor Department he was unable to act, as business prevented him going to Winnipeg. The company did not name a successor, and in such a case the law calls for the Minister of Labor to name a representative. Rev. J. L. Gordon was nominated to represent the G.T.P.

The Department claims that under the circumstances it is not fair to call the board "self-constituted."

H.M.S. Cornwall Out Again.

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—H.M.S. Cornwall, which was badly damaged while going to the rescue of the disabled Niobe, of the Canadian navy, off Cape Sable, is out of dry dock at Halifax, and has left for England. The Niobe, which has been anchored in the harbor, will go into the dock for permanent repairs.

The fourth cruiser squadron, which will provide the officers for the court-martial in connection with the Niobe mishap will reach Halifax this week.

The repairs made to the Cornwall under the direction of Marine Department officials were inspected by an officer sent out by the British Admiralty. The work done by the Canadians was pronounced so satisfactory that further repairs when the Cornwall reaches England may not be necessary.

Shot by Burglars.

New York, Nov. 6.—Burglars, frustrated in their attempt to rob the country home of Isaac Guggenheim, the millionaire copper magnate, at Port Washington early yesterday, shot down and killed the night watchman, Alfred Crooker. The burglars escaped in a boat.

After the sound of shots members of the Guggenheim family and their servants ran out of the house and found Crooker lying dead on the lawn in a pool of blood. A revolver was clutched in his hand, but none of the chambers had been discharged, showing that his assailants had dropped him before he could fire a shot. There are no clues beyond footprints on the grass.

LITTLE LEGISLATION.

Most of Coming Session to Be Taken Up With Detail

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—Hon. R. L. Borden returned to Ottawa on Saturday night from Halifax, accompanied by Hon. J. D. Hazen, Hon. W. B. Nantel, Hon. George E. Foster and Hon. Dr. Sproule. Other Ministers are coming in to-day, and arrangements will be made for a series of Cabinet councils, in preparation of the work of the session The House will be called upon to pass estimates, but little important legislation is in sight

Hon. Frank Cochrane, who accompanied the Prime Minister to Halifax, has made use of the opportunity to get in touch with officials and affairs of the Intercolonial. The Minister heard a number of deputations in respect to the proposed taking over of branch lines as feeders.

Major R. W. Leonard, the new chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway, has begun his inspection of the line. A conference between Mr. Leonard and Mr. Cochrane took place at Quebec. Mr. Leonard's inspection will be a thorough one and will be made the subject of an exhaustive report.

While in Quebec Hon. Mr. Cochrane and Hon. F. D. Monk, Minister of Public Works, paid a visit to the harbor and its proposed improvements. They were accompanied by Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, and included in the party were also Messrs. R. W. Leonard, chairman of the Transcontinental Commission; Chief Engineer Grant, St. George Boswell, harbor engineer; A. E. Doucet, district engineer, and a number of prominent citizens. The harbor sites for terminals, the graving dock, the dock extensions and other points were fully inspected.

Washington, Nov. 6.—White House policies for the session will be outlined in the message to be sent to Congress when it convenes next month. Discussion has started here as to legislative matters the President will treat. It is accepted as certain he will deal with:

Revision of some schedules of the tariff, beginning with wool and probably including cotton and steel.

Defence of the Sherman Act and resistance to its proposed amendment.

Government supervision of issues of stocks and bonds of interstate carriers and corporations.

Creation of a permanent tariff board.

Conservation, with a special chapter on Alaska.

More adequate compensation for the federal judges, with some comment upon the importance of the judiciary.

Reform in the regulation of second-class mail matter, a defence of the arbitration treaties and a recommendation of legislation for currency reform, will be other subjects.

"I guess we'll shut the foundry down and cool the blazing forge."
"All right," said George. "That pleases me. We'll let the fires go out."
"I wonder," said my lady Flossie, "what they're so thick about."

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

barracks He could see the gathering street crowds, the men in linen and duck, the bareheaded women in mantillas, the Princeton's midshipmen in tight-fitting tunics, pretending to ignore the heat, the marching lines of bare-footed men in grotesquely soiled and ragged uniforms.

He knew that De Brigard's movement had been crushed, that the revolution was already a thing of the past. There was a smouldering province or two on the lower Pacific slope, but a week or two of gun-seizing by Arturo Boynton's mounted police would stifle all that was left of Ganley's coup d'etat. And Ganley himself? He knew that Ulloa was still patrolling the coast to cut off Ganley's escape. He wondered with a strange sense of detachment, just where between the blue peaks of the Cordilleras and the Caribbean's pulsing surf line that man of destiny was skulking and hiding. He wondered where under that unpitying and high arching tropical sky the lonely fugitive was still scheming and plotting and battling for his ultimate prerogative, for his mortal right to live.

Yes, it was all over and done, McKinnon told himself, wearily, as a comprehension of the solitudes that enlisted him began to creep like a slowly rising tide through every fibre of his being. They meant nothing to him, these outlandish soldiers in ragged uniform, this sun-baked city among its lonely hills, these denim-clad peons with long bladed matchetes, these red-tiled homes of a people who were foreign to him, this over-gaudy Latin palace with its second rate statuary and its gilding and mirrors that would be an afront to a Hudson River steamboat's cabin. It was a land of strangers to him. He suddenly knew that he was home-sick for the North.

He was possessed with a longing for the older and more austere ways of life ,for more tranquil and muffled and orderly days, for the crowded and companionable cities of his own kind. There seemed something barbaric to him in the very music of the band that brayed and shrilled from the streets below. In the men who followed that band he could make out the narrow shoulders and the protruding cheek bones of Carib-Indian blood. They seemed more than outlanders to him; they were scarcely white men. And he was tired of them and their foolish little wars; he was home-sick.

He heard a movement at his side, and he looked up from the embrasure over which he leaned to see Alicia Boynton standing almost within reach of his hand. She seemed nearly ghostlike ,to his first startled glance, for she was dressed in white linen, and the things through which she had passed and many days and nights of anxiety had left her face still colourless . The strong sunlight too, accentuated the wistful little hollow that had crept into her cheek. The touch of tragedy which his shadow in some way gave to her face was contradicted, though, by the deep and happy look in her eyes.

Yet as she stood there at McKinnon's side the strangeness and the loneliness of Guariqui seemed almost to fade away. She humanised it and brought it nearer to him. Then his eyes fell on the figure of an officer in full uniform, passing in through the Palace gates, with his scabbard in his gauntleted hand. He was as gilded and as ornamental as a character from a Broadway musical comedy. But he served to bring a wayward surge of misery over the soul of the Amercian.

McKinnon sighed, openly and audibly. He could recall, only too easily, the beginning of that vague unhappiness. It had first come to birth in the Hospital ,when General Alcantara, as Alicia had called him, accompanied her to the bed in the little blue-walled ward. He was a dapper and dashing officer, and in explaining that he had once studied in West Point ,Alicia suggested that the two of them might have much in common. But McKinnon had resented that youthful officer's presence at her side, from the first. From the first, too, he had despised the over-ready, and white-toothed smile, the padded and punctilious little figure, the fawn-like eyes of Latin brown, as soft as a woman's. He had even more resented the panther-like grace of the scrupulously uniformed little figure, and the tropic-born cadences of the light-noted and carefully modulated voice as the two of them chatted and laughed together. It made McKinnon think of himself as awkward and ungainly ,as raw and raucous in his address to women. He had maintained the pretence ,to himself, that it did not matter, that it never could or would matter. But he knew, at last, that this was not true, that it mattered more than he dared admit.

"You mustn't do this," the girl was saying, reprovingly, as she drew closer beside him, so that her tinted parasol threw its shadow over his head.

"But it's so good to be out again," he said. "And they're giving Ulloa's Irregulars an ovation down there."

"But you're not strong yet," she warned him, looking up into his face with anxious eyes.

"Strong!" he laughed. "Why, I feel like a shorthorn in from the range!"

"But that is a tropical sun you are standing in."

"It isn't the sun that makes me feel so bad," he confessed. "It's being so far away from—from home, from—oh, everything!"

There was a minute or two of silence as they stood gazing down over Guariqui.

"I know," she said at last, comprehendingly. He looked down at her, a little surprised at the humility in her voice. She had seemed a little aloof from him during the last few adys; he had not been able to guess at the source of that aloofness. Guariqui and its official life ,he felt, had flung a bar between them. It seemed to have drawn and shut her in as one of its own. He had grown almost afraid of her, since the morning he had seen her from his window, sitting up so slender and fragile in Duran's flashing official landau as it swept out through the Palace gates surrounded by galloping and gorgeous cuirassiers with brazen breastplates and horsetail helmets. And the consciousness of this alienation brought a touch of bitterness into his voice as he went on.

"No; I don't believe you do know. This is the life you were born to. This is your home. It means everything to you!"

"Not everything," she corrected him, very quietly. He could not see her face, for she was gazing out over Paraiso Hill.

"But I know you would never be happy away from it, from everything here that has been making me feel so lost and miserable, any more than I would be happy away from the things that would make you feel lost and miserable."

"I'm not a Locombian," she said, laughing a little.

It was his turn to laugh, though there was little mirth in it.

"No; but you are the sister of Dr. Arturo Boynton, Minister of War for the Republic of Locombia ,Member of the Federal——"

She looked up at him again, and met his gaze without hesitation.

"And you are the man who saved the Republic of Locombia from—well ,you know what from!"

He threw up his hand with a gesture of protest.

"I was thinking hanged little about the Republic of Locombia," he retorted ,with his cheery and companionable laugh. "I wanted to get you out of that Ganley mess."

"Then you saved me," she protested.

"When I happened as a primary consideration to be fighting to save my own precious neck!" he deprecated.

He noticed the silent reproof in her eyes, and as he saw it a new courage began to grope upward out of the darkness of his heart. He thought, a little enviously, of the days when she had been so close to him, when the arm of no intervening convention had stretched out between them. Then he thought of the blood and dust and grime of his battle, of use blood and dust and grime that lay over so many of his years. And all his life suddenly seemed an empty and aimless and wasted life to him. It seemed an affront to her, even to tell her how unworthy he was, yet the growing hunger and ache in his heart forbade him to keep silent. He watched a condor wheeling above the gray-green hilltops until it became a drifting black speck in the turquoise sky.

The glare of open light made his eyes ache. He remembered a certain sentence of Ganley's: "It's not what you'd call a white man's country." The thought of that brought his troubled gaze back to the woman at his side.

"Have you always been happy here" he demanded, audaciously.

"Are we ever always happy?" she asked, after a silence.

"Not now," she answered.

Again a mocking flame of hope shot through him. But he did not speak. Her hand lay on the embrasure beside him. He reached out his arm and quietly covered the white fingers with his own. His mournful glance met hers, and for the first ime the full significance of her nearness came home to him. She drew back a little, frightened, and slowly raised her head. The touch of her hand on his had turned his very blood to fire.

"I love you," he said ,without moving. She swayed a little beside the embrasure; but she did not speak. He reached out his unbandaged arm, as she still stood gazing at him, and made a movement, a hungry and pleading movement, as though to draw her closer to him. "I love you," he repeated, inadequately.

A soft and luminous beauty crept into her face with its tragic little hollow under either cheekbone; it seemed to suffuse and renew and transform it as spring itself transforms the world. She raised her hands slowly, almost mournfully, as though it cost her a great effort, until they rested on his shoulders.

"I am not worthy of it," she said, with a break in her voice that was almost a sob. She would have said more, but her speech was silenced by his movement, a movement which brought her trembling into his arms.

"I have always loved you," she whispered weakly.

"And you would go back with me?" he pleaded.

Some wordless langour of surrender left the suddenly saddened lips still parted, and caused her heavy eyelids to droop over unquestioning and capitulating eyes. It was an elemental and absolute relinquishment, as quiet and yet as complete as the surrender to Death itself, touched with sorrow only as all things that fringe on the Infinite are so touched. It was love, the deep love that lives only in deep souls.

They were alone under the high-arching tropical sun. The condor wheeled back over Paraiso Hill unnoticed; barefooted soldiers in ragged denim marched by under the Palace unseen; Ulloa's mounted band brayed itself into the distance unheard.

CHAPTER XXXIV.
THE LAST DEBT.

It was Aikens, the wireless operator, who brought McKinnon and Alicia back to the world of reality.

"I've got 'em!" 'he called excitedly, from his little station door shadowed by its awning of faded striped canvas. "I've poked something up!"

Then the youth reappeared under the faded striped awning . He held a much worn Panama hat in his hand, and he approached the older man with some hesitation.

"Could you help me out for a few minutes?" he asked, with a handwave towards his "station."

"What's wrong?"

"I've got to get somebody from the War Office. I ought to have the President here now."

"What is it?" asked Alicia, as they crossed to the "station" door.

"It's Boracao calling the Princeton. It's going to be the last rocket-fizz of his fireworks exhibition."

He flung on a coat and turned to McKinnon.

"But please watch that responder until I get back!"

But as the newcomer pressed the receiver against his ear, he could hear a sound, faint and small, like the tick of a wood-beetle. This sound translated itself into a coherent sequence of dots and dashes, spelling out the call for "Cruiser Princeton" and repeating it, impatiently, with a strangely human note of complaint in the petulance of the wood-beetle tickings.

"Princeton—Princeton," the call was repeated, almost frantically it seemed to McKinnon, as he caught up the operator's pencil and began to write on the paper before him. Then came the break and the answer of the far-off cruiser. Something in the crisply stiff "send" of the navy operator reminded the listener of the tightly jacketed midshipmen in the Plaza below him. j(i t- flk(.y Plaza below him. Then came the hurrying dots and dashes of the Boracao operator:

Crippled With Sore Back

Kidneys Were Badly Diseased and She Didn't Know It

Was Completely Cured by Less Than Three Boxes of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Women are very often deceived and mistaken in regard ot kidney disease. The pains in the back are attributed to other derangements, and kidney disease is allowed to run on and on until beyond the reach of medical science.

There is needless suffering, and life itself is risked, because backache is not recognized as the most marked symptom of kidney disease.

There is no treatment which so quickly relieves and cures kidney pains in the back as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. As proof of this read Mrs. Patterson's letter:

Mrs. Richard Patterson, Haldimand, Gaspe Co., Que., writes: "I will gladly say that I was cured of kidney trouble by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. When I began using this medicine I was crippled with sore back and did not know what was the trouble. In looking over Dr. Chase's Almanac I saw Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills advertised and decided to try them.

"I had not used two boxes before my back was all right, and before I had completed the third box was entirely cured. There has been no return of the old kidney trouble, and I therefore believe the cure to be permanent."

One pill a dose, 25c a box, at all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

COWAN'S PERFECTION COCOA

Is rich in food value and easy to digest. It is just Cocoa, pure Cocoa, ground from the choicest Cocoa beans.

Nurses and Doctors recommend its use in sickness or in health.

Say "Tillson's" when you buy Rolled Oats

DON'T simply ask for "rolled oats." That is only a term indicating the process of rolling oat grains flat.

In ordinary rolled oats some of the flakes are thicker than others. They can't cook evenly.

Look at a handful of Tillson's Rolled Oats. Every flake is as thin as it can be rolled without breaking, and all the flakes are the same in size and thinness. That means not only quick cooking, but also even cooking.

Tillson's Rolled Oats make porridge that looks good and tastes good. And they are perfectly digestible after cooking but 15 minutes—no more.

SANER VIEWS ABOUT BAPTISM

Superstitions of the Past—Theories of Our Fathers No Longer Accepted.

London Tabernacle, Nov. 5.—Pastor Russell spoke to-day to large audiences. We report one of his discourses, which treated on the subject of Baptism.

Church History shows that the damnation theories grew gradually. First came the theory that every child of Adam was born damned to eternal torture at the hands of fire-proof devils, and that the only escape was through baptism. But it was claimed that baptism cancelled only previous sins and not subsequent ones; hence it was the custom in Constantine's time to put off baptism until as near the hour of death as possible. Tertullian is credited with supporting this view.

Later came St. Augustine, advancing the theory that only the Church would be saved and that baptism was for the purpose of induction into the Church. Naturally it followed that if infants died without being admitted into the Church they would go to eternal torture. As a result of this teaching infant baptism sprang into great popularity, which is still maintained. At first the infants were immersed in water, but later, under the belief that all bishops were successors of the Apostles and equal in authority, Church Councils took the place of the Word of God. They not only sanctioned infant baptism, which is not even mentioned in the Bible, but additionally claimed that immersion was unnecessary and that a few drops of water would induct the aged or the babe into the Church and constitute an insurance against a hell of eternal torture. This theory still persists to perhaps a greater degree than many would imagine. Luther and his coadjutors protested against some of the doctrines of the Church of Rome, but accepted without protest infant baptism, sprinkling, etc., as necessary to preservation from everlasting torment.

Someone suggests, "Ah! we practice infant sprinkling, but it is merely a 'christening.' We have no thought whatever that the gracious Heavenly Father or His adorable Son, our Redeemer, would consign an infant to torture, even if it died without being christened." Do not be too sure, my brother. Superstitions die hard. I know of a white-haired bishop in the Episcopal Church who was appalled at the very suggestion that his infant grandchild might be safe in the arms of Jesus without having been "christened."

Not only so, but these superstitions of a darker day are forcefully impressed upon the "common people" by some of the clergy. Let me tell you of two cases:

(1) A Lutheran couple in Pennsylvania had some unpleasantness with their pastor respecting Church dues. This caused them to absent themselves from Church service for several months. Meantime their babe became sick. The father humbled himself to go to his pastor to tell him of his distress and his fear that the child might die and of his desire to have it baptized. Imagine the anguish of the deluded parent when the pastor refused and told him that the child would go to hell and that this was his desert as a parent because of failure to keep in touch with the Church.

(2) The other case was that of a Catholic couple in Wisconsin. Their two little girls died of diphtheria within a few hours of each other. When the parish priest was sent for he declined to come and refused permission to have the children buried in "holy ground." The explanation given to the astonished parents was that they had neglected their duty toward the children, that they had not been baptized into the Church and consequently were lost.

To a friend the bereaved father declared that he wanted to have nothing whatever to do with so unjust a God who would consign his little innocent children to eternal torture merely because of his sin, his neglect, in not having a few drops of water sprinkled in their faces by the priest! The friend had been reading my "Studies in the Scriptures" and explained to the bereaved father that Church creeds and decrees are very different from the plain and simple teachings of the Bible. He showed him that his little ones were merely "asleep in Jesus" waiting for the glorious resurrection blessings of restitution, to be brought to mankind at the second coming of Jesus, after the completion of the elect Church and their change to heavenly glory. Could you wonder that that Catholic, a saloon-keeper, received a new ray of hope and that it had a transforming influence upon his life?

Pastor Russell examined the doctrine of immersion as set forth by the Christian or Disciple denomination. He had not an unkind word to say respecting the people of this denomination, but he did dissect their doctrines, laying bare what he considered to be their inconsistencies, falsities.

Criticising the immersion theory of the Christian-Disciples he declared that the texts used by this denomination as proofs that baptism is for the remission of sins were never applied to any except Jews. The Jews were in Covenant-relationship with God through the Mosaic Law. If they got into sin it was proper for them to repent, return to God and use water symbolically, indicating return from sin. All Jews in full harmony with the Law Covenant in Jesus' day were transferred from Moses to Christ. Only those who had committed special sins were called upon to wash away those sins symbolically in water.

Others living consistent lives as "Israelites indeed" were never instructed to be baptised or to wash away their sins. Amongst the Apostles, Pastor Russell said, there is no record of any of them having been immersed in water for the remission of sins, except St. Paul, and he only because he had persecuted the Church of Christ. The baptism into Christ announced for Gentile converts is wholly different, he declared, from the Jewish baptism for the remission of sins. An illustration of this, he said, is found in Acts xviii. 24, 25, where Apollos had baptized certain Gentiles of Ephesus with John's baptism for the remission of sins. St. Paul afterward declared this incorrect and directed them to be immersed again—not for the remission of sins, but for induction into the Body of Christ, which is the Church (Acts xix, 1-6).

But the chief point which Pastor Russell made against the Christian-Disciple theory that Baptism is for the remission of sins, was that it naturally dis-fellowships all Christians who have not been immersed. The logic of this theory, he declared, would find few supporters in the Christian-Disciple denomination. The logic of it is this: If immersion is necessary for an adult in order that his sins may be remitted or washed away, it would logically follow that all adults not immersed are yet in their sins—unforgiven. And this signifies, according to this theory, that, if they die thus they must suffer the penalty of their sins, which penalty, they say, is eternal torture.

Next the Baptist theory of Baptism was dealt with. It was complimented as being more nearly in line with the Scriptures than any theory of Baptism held in the world. And yet, said the speaker, remarkably few Baptists to-day could or do stand by their theory, if put to the test. Nevertheless, in theory and practice, the great mass of Baptists declare that immersion is a necessary incidental to admission to the "Church of the Living God, whose names are written in heaven!"

In full keeping with this, in nine out of every ten Baptist Churches the world over, only immersed Christians are ever invited to the communion table to participate in the Lord's Supper. Why? Because they claim that only immersed persons belong to the true Church and that the communion service is exclusively for the Church.

If we ask them what are the advantages claimed for membership in the Church, they reply—Salvation! What is the antithesis or opposite of salvation? we ask. They answer—Lost! What do you mean by lost? we inquire. The reply is, To be banished from God and suffer everlasting torture.

So then, theoretically, our Baptist friends deliver to the unimmersed the same blood-curdling theory handed out by Christian-Disciples—hat Catholics, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, etc., are en route for eternal torture. The difference between the two theories is that the Disciples say that this awful fate impends upon the masses of Christendom, as well as upon heathendom, because their sins have not been forgiven, while the Baptists say, No, not for that cause, for Jesus died for all, but because they have not taken the necessary steps to get into the Church.

St. Paul tells us of certain times of ignorance which "God winked at" or disregarded. We believe that the Almighty graciously overlooked such inconsistencies in the theories of some of His children and charged them not with the responsibility of so terribly maligning the Divine Character and misrepresenting the Divine Word. But now our God is opening the eyes of our understanding and there is no longer excuse for any to believe such monstrous theories, nor excuse to still profess to believe them after they have been repudiated by the heart.

The true view of Baptism is one which cannot be controverted. It is consistent with itself and with every Bible statement. It recognizes every consecrated child of God of every denomination, or outside of all denominations. It inducts the saintly Baptist, saintly Disciple, saintly Catholic, Episcopalian, Lutheran, Congregationalist, Methodist, etc., into membership in the "one Church of the Living God, whose names are written in heaven."

What Baptism can this be? We reply that it is the one mentioned by St. Paul, in a text which we have all read and quoted time and again: "So many of you as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptised into his death" (Romans vi, 3). The mistake we have all made in the past is in applying the Apostle's words to water baptism. The Apostle said not a word about water baptism, but mentioned specifically the Baptism into Christ, into "the Body of Christ, which is the Church."

The thought is that God has ordained the gathering of the elect Church during the Gospel Age. The Head of this Church was received up into glory eighteen centuries ago, and since Pentecost one and another of the true footstep followers of Jesus have been accepted of God through His merit and counted as "members of the Body of Christ, which is the Church." First, Jewish believers were transferred from Moses to Christ.

Next the Message was extended to the Gentiles. But these could not pass from Moses into Christ because they were not in Moses, never having come under the Law Covenant arrangement. Hence, these could come into Christ only by direct baptism. All baptised into Jesus Christ occupy a specially preferred relationship to God and, if faithful to the end, will be received to glory, honor and immortality on the spirit or heavenly plane. But there is not a word of Scripture to say that the world, which misses this glorious exaltation, will on this account suffer eternal torture. They will lose the great prize, however.

Our Baptist friends will agree to the above statement. They will say, Yes, that is what we mean, only, in order to be in Christ, we Baptists claim, water immersion is necessary.

We are glad to have their plain, candid statement and to meet the issue squarely. That is the Baptist mistake—supposing that water baptism inducts anybody into membership in the true Church. They may indeed make water immersion the door into the Baptist Church, but does not make it the door into "the Church of the Living God." St. Paul defines the Baptism by which any Gentile may come into membership in the Body of Christ. Note his words again: "So many of you as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death." Our Baptist friends think of this as though it read "were baptised in water." This is their mistake as before stated.

But the question arises, Just what is meant by these words, "Baptized into His death?" Was His death in any way different from the death of others? Most decidedly it was! Our race die as sinners, children of wrath, under Divine sentence of death. But Jesus was not a sinner and hence was not under Divine sentence of death. He was "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners" and free from Adamic death. His death was a sacrificial one—a surrender of an unimpaired life. Those, therefore, who would become His footstep followers and be baptized into His death, must participate with Him in a sacrificial death. The Scriptures explain that this would be impossible except as those footstep followers should be cleansed and made acceptable sacrifices through the merit of Jesus, because "by nature we were all children of wrath, even as others."

Death was the real meaning of our Lord's baptism. John the Immerser knew that Jesus was not a sinner, knew that He had no sins to wash away, and at first he declined to immerse Him. And he did so only after Jesus had assured him that it was right and that the matter had a deeper significance. "Suffer it to be so."

Our Lord for three and a half years was carrying out the consecration vow which in Jordan He symbolized—baptism into death. Day by day He became more deeply immersed into death. That real immersion into death was finished on Calvary. In harmony with this the day before His death Jesus said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." The next day it was accomplished, when He cried, "It is finished!" His baptism into death was finished.

The same thought the Master gave to His followers, saying to two who desired places on His right and His left in the Kingdom: "Ye know not what ye ask!" You do not know what it requires to secure exaltation to the Kingdom. Are you able, are you willing to drink of my cup of sorrow, self-denial, etc.? Are you willing "to be baptised with the baptism that I am baptised with"—the baptism into death? When the disciples replied that they were willing, the Master assured them that He would attend to the rest. The terms of discipleship have not changed.

Just a word further respecting water baptism. It has its place, not in keeping any out of eternal torment, nor in getting them into eternal glory; but it is a symbol, a beautiful picture in one act. It is a testimoney to all believers that the consecrated one has vowed loyalty to the Redeemer—even unto death. As such a confession of such a consecration, we commend water baptism to you all as being the Lord's own provision of a pictorial confession for those who have accepted His terms, surrendered their all, and are seeking to walk in newness of life and to attain the eternal glory by and by.

As for the unconsecrated world, it is fitting that they should not be baptized. Baptism was never intended except for the fully consecrated, the sanctified in Christ Jesus. When God's due time shall come the world of mankind will receive the blessings provided for them through the Redeemer's merit, under the gracious arrangement of that Redeemer's heavenly Kingdom, which will be established under the whole heavens for the purpose of uplifting mankind from sin and death—whosoever wills.

CHESS PLAYERS OF THE SECRET SERVICE

MODERN Criminals and Detectives Play Their World Old Game as Experts Over the Checkered Board and the Victory Is to the "Brainiest"—Crime Keeps Abreast of the Times

CRIME keeps abreast of the times.

The strong arm and the low brow are as out of date as the horse car and the derringer. It is the day of the "brainy" crook, particularly the day of the "brainy" Secret Service detective.

In the complexity and refinement of modern civilization the criminal has changed in character and method, working his will by subtler and more sophisticated means as the necessary price of survival.

And always the forces of the law must be a step in advance of the forces of lawlessness, maintaining a lead by just a bit more cleverness than crime is capable of.

In its present aspect the world old struggle between the wrongdoer and his pursuer is best exemplified by a game of chess, according to Mr. John E. Wilkie, Chief of the United States Secret Service. But even in this view it is more complicated, keener, deeper than any contest that could be represented by bits of ivory upon a checkered board.

Mr. Wilkie sees the problems of his bureau upon a field where the white pieces of the government are played by masters against the black pieces of crime manipulated by experts, the victory to the cleverer side. He sees it so—with a difference. For even this striking illustration is incomplete. The science of crime detection, as it is now studied and practised, has to do with men, not chessmen, and is not adequately paralleled by the most scientific of games.

Mr. Frank J. Marshall, chess champion of the United States, was recently introduced to Chief Wilkie in Washington. The chief intimated that he was proud to make the acquaintance of a man who had wrought such mathematical and deductive marvels in the tilts of the miniature foemen, and that he himself was a humble student of gambits and checkmates.

"How do you think I would do as a Secret Service agent?" asked Mr. Marshall, smilingly.

Mr. Wilkie considered the question a moment and hedged after this fashion:—

"Well, you have the equipment all right enough, Mr. Marshall, but, to be frank, I would have to say 'not at all.' You are an expert among experts at the game of chess, and Secret Service work is more like chess than anything else, but if you should join the Secret Service you would have no more chance against the players you would meet than a novice has against you at your own specialty.

"You would find yourself fighting players who have given the same careful study to crime that you have given to your board, and you would be nowhere until you had learned to know all that they know about their calling.

"You see, secret service is chess, plus the human element, the criminal element at that, which is still more puzzling. Without belittling your achievements, Mr. Marshall, you would be checked and mated before you had begun."

Mr. Wilkie's comparison serves to illuminate the great changes that recent years have brought in what might be called the higher departments of crime. Formerly such a distinction would have been made on a general basis of the amounts involved, if it had been made at all. A criminal was a criminal and fitted into a more or less definable type. Nowadays the criminal tends to identify himself with any respectable and intelligent member of society and to develop mentality and culture equalling the equipment of his pursuer.

The criminal no longer undertakes his operations on a haphazard scheme. He no longer seizes his prize as it offers and trusts to good fortune or his trigger finger to keep it for him. He proceeds with the knowledge that he has an opponent drilled to a scientific understanding of the criminal's business, methods, personality and probable manoeuvres. And he gets to work to beat that opponent by cunning and foresight.

And right there is where the resemblance between the game of crime and the game of chess comes in. The great chess player is the one who can look ahead four or five or eight or a dozen moves and outguess his antagonist. The most formidable criminal or the the greatest detective is the one who can look ahead the most moves and outguess the man he is playing against.

Nowadays, according to the officials themselves, the expert criminal endeavors to keep just as close a watch upon the government as the agents try to keep upon him. He is not content to elude pursuit. He seeks to discover the plans of the bureau, to know what the agents have learned that may be of value to him, to keep a finger upon the pulse of official activity and to forestall a hostile move before it is made. And he proceeds by espionage, by a secret system of intelligence and by precautions and deductions that closely resemble the manoeuvring of a master chess player.

Professional crime of certain kinds—notably the expert get-rich-quick, bucket shop and counterfeit promoting departments of crime—has used the government itself for a model.

Crime has a secret service of its own.

When plans were being laid recently in Washington for simultaneous descent upon bucket shops that, operating as units in a vast system, had built up a tremendous business in many cities the steps projected by the Secret Service chiefs were veiled in the most elaborate secrecy. Months ahead of the arrests agents were ready, their cases perfected, but by a masterly campaign of indirection and false investigation the men under observation were lulled into a sense of security. Dissimulation worthy of the best efforts of conspirators in an Oriental court was practised on both sides, and it was at the precise moment when trouble seemed least likely that the government struck.

Even then mysterious warning had been issued in time to keep some of the fish out of the net. Several of the men wanted had been able to outtrick or outguess the Secret Service.

Shadowing the Shadow.

The classic combination of a young man, a hotel [illegible] and a glass of milk might have been observed by [illegible] curiously and leisurely minded in a New York [illegible] a few nights ago.

Outside, crowds of pallid, overdressed pleasure [illegible] were swarming in the glare of the unresting [illegible]. Inside, the young man leaned by

Suddenly a small thing happened. A clove, coming apparently from nowhere, dropped into the glass. The young man made no move, evidently accepted the visitation as quite the normal thing, and continued to sip his milk. But after some minutes he shifted his position to the other elbow.

At the end of the bar, some few feet away, a big, whiskered man was getting the benefit from under the froth on a goblet. His eyes met those of the young man through the glass.

Ten minutes later they were together in a corner of the barber shop.

"You're trailing that guy with the sandy hair and the skinny cheeks, aren't you?" inquired the big man. "I thought I'd put you wise. Know me, don't you? I used to be in Washington myself."

"I know you," nodded the other. "Maston—went into private practice in Baltimore. You turned that Fremont affair, the banker that skipped. Well?"

The big man acknowledged the precise identification of himself with some surprise and lost a part of his patronizing confidence.

"Well, I thought I'd tip you—as an old Secret Service man—that you're being followed yourself."

Which Wins?

"Yes," continued the big man, "there's a chunky lad in a brown suit been hanging on your rear, and I'm not sure but he's got a pal with him."

"Very likely he has," said the other.

The big man flushed. "Look here, you don't think I don't know, do you? I tell you I saw you were shadowing the sandy lad, and I saw the chunky lad shadowing you."

"I don't doubt you," returned the other. "But—you didn't happen to notice, did you, that while I was following the sandy lad and the chunky lad was following me, somebody else from the bureau was following the chunky lad?"

That incident was typical of the chessplaying methods of the modern crime detectors. Shadows upon shadows upon shadows, and finesse overreaching finesse.

For the most part the game is played with both sides blindfolded, so to speak. The Secret Service man does not rely upon the Bertillon measurements of the criminal, in the absence of any, and he is himself chary of revealing his own features. But occasionally some of the players are forced into the open, and that is the time when some sharp observing is done.

Whenever a federal case involving the Secret Service is on trial one or two or more Secret Service agents are pretty likely to be witnesses for the prosecution. There is a chance right away for certain clever criminals who make a specialty of information regarding agents. They are overlooking no chance to obtain exact knowledge of the physical appearance and the movements of as many of their enemies as possible, and they are fairly sure to have some one on hand who can add Agent X. or Agent Z. to the gallery. At the same time other agents are on hand watching for friends or connections of the accused, and so the merry game goes on in and about the federal court room, each side seeking some hold upon the other.

Frequently an agent who is known to be a specialist in running down counterfeiters or other criminals has been brought under the surveillance of the criminal secret service at one of these trials and has been dogged and shadowed thenceforward for months. It is sometimes necessary for an agent to take a long rest from professional pursuits or to embark upon a series of elaborate twists and quick changes to throw the watchers off his trail before he can undertake any further work for the bureau.

A Secret Service agent is seldom a mere pawn. The detectives chosen by the government are men of resource, capable of setting out upon a mission and following it independently. It is a common thing for a member of the service to draw a sum adequate to his needs, to leave Washington under certain general orders and to be absent one, two or three months without even communicating with his chief. This is when the exigencies of the case require that he conceal his connection with the bureau with the utmost care. His clews may lead him to Europe or to Siberia before he returns.

It is always precaution, subtlety and foresight in this chess game of crime, and again precaution.

A member of the Secret Service obtained a place as clerk in a law office in a Western city for the purpose of watching his employer, who was connected with the government's case against land thieves. One of the slightest of his precautions was to make a journey into an adjoining State every time he had to send information to Washington. He would go aboard a train in the evening, reach a station over the line about midnight, send his cipher despatches and mail his letters and be back in time for work the next morning.

The land thieves had an extensive hold upon the political machinery of the State in which he was living, and he was trusting neither his mail to local post offices nor his telegrams to local telegraphers.

But there is precaution on the side of the criminals, too, and it is the task of the Secret Service detectives to break down the clever barriers by which wrongdoers seek to protect themselves before a crime is even attempted.

Several years ago a very remarkable counterfeit hundred dollar certificate began to slip into circulation. It was an exceedingly dangerous bit of paper, one of the best pieces of work that had come to the attention of the department in a long time. After careful investigation it was discovered that the "queer" was being "pushed" at the race tracks exclusively.

Dozens of agents were placed on this case, and they swarmed upon the tracks in the guise of touts, sheet writers and partners of the bookmakers.

At the Delaware race track, in St. Louis, a Secret Service man who was looking over a "bookie's" cash as it came in spotted one of the bad bills. He made the discovery in time to identify the prosperously garbed middle aged gentleman who had paid it in while laying a bet.

The bettor was followed, watched, and at a convenient moment taken quietly into custody. He went through the process that is technically known as "making an awful holler." Indignation was never more righteous, and the agents recognized the symptoms, indicating either that they had made a serious mistake or that they had their hands upon a criminal who was prepared with a gilt edged defence.

The prisoner gave his name as Mr. G——, proprietor of a large photo-engraving establishment of Providence, R. I. He produced unquestionable proof that he was Mr. G—— and that his financial and social standing was above reproach. All this was highly impressive, and, as will be observed, quite at variance with fictional traditions concerning hardened criminals. But the most engaging part of Mr. G——'s story had to do with the counterfeit bill.

He was deeply shocked to learn that it was a counterfeit. He had certainly not suspected the fact. And he promptly handed over an envelope in which were twenty-eight more bills of the same kind.

He explained that on the previous afternoon he had gone to the Union Station to have the return half of his railroad ticket validated. As he was leaving the office of the ticket agent, he said, the electric lights of the waiting room were just being turned on, and in the sudden glare he noticed a white envelope under a bench. Picking it up with idle curiosity, he had been startled at discovering $3,000 in new $100 bills. Whereupon, being an honest man, he had hastened to the office of a local newspaper and had inserted an advertisement, offering to return the money if identified by its proper owner.

Investigation apparently verified this plausible explanation at every point. The advertisement had been handed in at the time Mr. G—— mentioned, five o'clock the preceding afternoon, and had duly appeared, as follows:—

"Found—In the Union Station late yesterday afternoon, a sum of money in bank notes which owner may have by identifying same. Apply X., 33, this office."

Meantime telegrams and letters began to pour in from Providence protesting against the detention of Mr. G——. Dozens of reputable business men came forward to support the prisoner's reputation, and the political powers were invoked through Washington to protect an honorable citizen from the officiousness of the Secret Service.

It began to look as if the agents had treed the wrong coon. In the emergency Chief Wilkie himself took up the consideration of Mr. G——'s defence.

Considered as a chess problem, he found it too nearly perfect, and he embarked upon what might be called, without too much violence, the major right oblique. Mr. G——'s point about the starting of the lights, for one thing, struck him as entirely too particular and precise, and he turned his attack toward that. He finally established beyond all question that the engineer in charge of the station's electric light plant had not turned on the lights the day of Mr. G——'s fortunate discovery until twenty minutes to six. Meanwhile the advertisement had been recorded at the newspaper office at five o'clock exactly. Which left the virtuous Mr. G—— in the position of advertising his discovery before he made it.

Chief Wilkie hammered home his advantage when he found among the effects of Mr. G—— a number of programmes of the Eastern race tracks. This led him to suspect that Mr. G—— had prepared himself with the same defence on former occasions, and a patient search of newspaper files in Eastern cities revealed this advertisement in a newspaper of a date some months before under the head of "Found":—

"At the Grand Central Station, late yesterday afternoon, a sum of money in bank notes, which the owner may have after proving property. Address B., 344."

Which very effectively placed Mr. G—— in check and induced him to surrender the game with a confession. He also surrendered his plant and plates and took the consequences. He believed that he had covered his tracks so well that even discovery of the notes could not convict him. But he was outplayed by superior brain work. His defence probably would have succeeded against less able opponents.

Methods by which criminals endeavor to tap the government's supply of information are illustrated by a recent attempt which failed, as almost all such attempts do.

A Secret Service agent was hurriedly despatched to New York a few weeks ago. He made for the Hotel Astor and asked for "Mr. Everett Larned." The page had no more than started to call the name through the lobby when a fashionably garbed young man approached the agent with a suave smile, introducing himself as Mr. Larned.

Mr. Larned proved to be highly gifted in the recondite arts of entertainment in a great city. He alluded only casually to the complaint he had sent in to the Treasury Department and which had brought the agent to interview him. But he proved himself a prince of entertainers and he drew his interviewer into the maze of Broadway gayety like one to the manner born.

He finally met the agent's persistent inquiries by describing how he had been "stung" with bad half dollars, dated 1851, at a certain cigar store.

"I wouldn't have minded so much," explained this public spirited young man, "if it hadn't happened twice in the same place. I kept the first, but when I got that second phony half I decided to let the government have the tip for what it was worth. We'll let it go over until to-morrow. Come on in here a moment and let's visit a friend of mine who has a genius for clover cocktails."

Mr. Larned's Little Ruse.

The lights and delights of the Great White Way added a distinctive charm to the rest of Mr. Larned's conversation, and the agent showed himself amiably inclined. He even allowed the hospitable Larned to "date him up" for further frivolities for the next day. But when they drifted into the Astor again in the growing hours of the morning the agent found a telegram which called him to business in another city. Regretfully he motioned Mr. Larned to a deserted end of the lobby.

"I'm awfully sorry, old man," he said. "You're a smooth article and I'd like to string you along a while longer, if only for the brand of amusement you hand out. But I've got to hurry off. Now, tell me all about it and save me the trouble of making it unpleasant for you."

Mr. Larned was properly astonished, but a little demonstration convinced him that the agent was "wise."

"You never got your bad half from any cigar store," said the Secret Service man. "I suspected that when we first got your letter, and when you said you'd pocketed a first phony coin I knew the yarn was fishy."

"Why, there isn't a civilian living who would do what you said you did when you got that 'queer' half unless he was up to some game. That's what I would have done, but that is different. So produce. You've been paid by somebody to try to pump a man from the bureau. If you don't want me to be disagreeable you'd better 'fess up."

So Mr. Larned, after feeble protest, finally "fessed up." He admitted that he had been promised a big reward if he could find out whether the government was on the track of a certain photograph ten dollar note on one of the New York banks.

"The job was given me by a promoter who is trying to float some mining stocks as his ostensible business," owned Mr. Larned. "But I'm not going to tell you who he is," he added defiantly.

"You mean Mr. K——, who has his office down in the Blank Building," remarked the agent. "Well, tell him we're not watching that note at all. The workmanship on it is so rotten that only one tried to find its way into circulation, and that got nowhere. Besides, we're going to collect Mr. K——'s plant in a day or two. Tell him that, too, if you want to. Good night."

Frequent and devious are the attempts to influence agents, to gain their confidence or to "reach" them. The Secret Service is armed against all such manoeuvres, and the undermining of an agent is a thing unknown in the recent records of the bureau.

Occasionally important discoveries come to the government without any effort at all. Not so very long ago two small boys were shooting birds in the Coney Island meadows one afternoon when they happened to peer through the open window of what they believed to be an abandoned shanty. They saw a red haired man standing at a table on which were piled more half dollars, nickels and cents than they had ever seen in their lives.

The man sprang to the window when he saw the boys and frightened them away. They ran home and told their father about their adventure. He was a police sergeant, and the result was that a counterfeiters' den on Coney Island Creek was closed in a raid early the next morning.

In the den they found thirteen blocks of copper, twenty-four blocks of lead, one half-dollar die bearing the date 1903, another half-dollar die bearing the date 1904, one nickel die, date 1902; one cent die, date 1901, and moulds for half dollars, quarters, nickels and cents.

This raid was one of the lucky strokes that come through the service of the public. But most of the important work is the result of a carefuly played game, the game of chess in crime.

The Result of Getting Telepathy on the Wrong Track

JUDSON was a hack-writer, a hacker, so to speak. That is to say, he hacked words out of the dictionary which he constructed into literary language and sold to the publishing trade at market rates, less the discount of an unknown name. It wasn't half bad stuff, either, and Judson might have maintained a living equilibrium, only he was compelled to eat; and he couldn't squeeze enough money out of the literary agent who sold his products to pay his landlord for the necessary food and shelter which are essential elements in the composition of current literature.

In this stress Judson ran across an operating professor of telepathy who looked like material for his purpose and he began to work him for a story. The professor, knowing the value of judicious advertising in the reading columns, yielded readily to treatment and in the course of his remarks he intimated, persuasively, that all Judson needed was to know how to exercise this strange power and he could influence anybody to do almost anything in reason. Judson, being highly imaginative and temperamental, as all real artists are, succumbed to the blandishments of the professor and agreed to submit to the regulation course of training to become an expert.

The price to be paid for this valuable service was $10—only $10—in advance, of course, and Judson dug it out of a pawnbroker by leaving his only watch in the hole. He calculated that he could sell the professor's story for fifteen plunks and get the money before the pawnbroker's interest ate up the difference.

For quiet to prosecute his literary labors more successfully Judson, without consulting his landlord, slipped out, via the fire escape, to a small suburban settlement, also without confiding his new address to any one save his literary agent. His landlord would have loved to know it for about thirty-seven dollars' worth.

Though Judson's agent knew the location of his principal it made small odds to him where he was—he wasn't annihilating time and distance getting to him with what the landlord wanted. Thus was Judson torn by contending spirits within; he was as anxious to get at his agent as he was anxious that his landlord should not get at him. The literary life is frequently what General Sherman said war was.

In his sacred suburban seclusion Judson got busy, not only with his literary labors, but more so with his telepathic acquisition and began to hurl the mysterious power of mind over matter in the direction of his literary agent to bring him to a realizing sense of the obligation of agent to principal and actuate him to come across with the funds. Night and day for an entire week Judson put in every spare moment telepathizing and retelepathizing the obdurate agent. But he seemed to be immune, for he did not respond to the mental messages, and Judson began to entertain dour thoughts of the professor and his so-called science. Frequently during his most intense moments Judson saw visions of his outraged landlord weeping silently on the fire escape, but he set these aside as unworthy and fiercely drove his thought at the unresponsive agent.

Finally when Judson's faith was tottering on its last legs he was informed one afternoon that a gentleman was in the parlor to see him. He responded two jumps at a step and lit in front of—the literary agent? Not so. It was his landlord with a bill and a determined manner.

Here let us draw the veil.

Later Judson saw the professor about it, and what he said to him was a-plenty, all right, good and hard and so forth.

"Well," explained the professor when he could force a word in edgeways, "there's nothing the matter with the telepathy. It's you. You shunted it onto the wrong track, that's all."

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP

A Short Story

Hartland College playground was full of boys—all but a few studiously-inclined youths were taking advantage of half an hour's freedom. A group of Lower Fourth boys seemed very excited, as they stood talking, instead of, as usual, indulging in a noisy game.

"here'll be a fight this afternoon, as sure a sa gun," exclaimed one youth.

"I'm not sure, Bell," remarked another. "You see, they've been such chums till to-day."

"What's the row?" asked a newcomer.

"Why, haven't you heard? Neil Roy has had a quarrel with Seton," volunteered Bell.

"But I always thought they were pals?"

"So they were until this morning, when they broke out at each other like furies. My word, haven't they got tempers, just!"

"They'll have difficulty in getting seconds if they do fight," said Ryan; "the class nearly all like them both."

"Except Brown, who hates them both," struck in Pryce with a laugh; "but perhaps he hates Roy most."

Just then Seton came along arm-in-arm with Brown. "He's going to back me," remarked the former; "that sneak, Roy, can't get a second."

"Well, Seton," said Ryan, "I would jolly well rather have no second than the one you've got."

"I'm going to second Roy," suddenly struck in Pryce. "What time, Seton, and where?"

Seton looked surprised, and perhaps a little envious, as he replied: "Immediately before second prop., and behind the pav."

"That means whenever tea is over, I suppose?"

"Yes," Seton murmured, as he strode off.

* * * * * * *

As soon as afternoon school was over Neil Roy hurried down the corridor to take refuge during the playhour in Wilson, his fagmaster's study. It was not like him to stay indoors on a lovely summer afternoon, but he wanted peace to think. A few hours before he had insulted and been insulted by the boy who had been his chum since the day he had come to Hartland—and immediately after tea he was engaged to fight him.

These were his thoughts as he blindly rushed down the passage, but they were rudely interrupted as he collided suddenly with somebody. The somebody, much to his annoyance, proved to be Dr. Braid, the headmaster.

"Well, Roy," he smiled, as the boy stammered out an apology, "I'm quite glad to see you, although such sudden collisions are hardly good for one's nerves, but accidents will happen. You are not doing anything particular?"

"No, sir."

"Well, you might cycle into town with this letter. Be as quick as you can, as it is important. If you are a little late for first preparation you will be excused. Thanks very much, Roy," and Neil hurried to the shed for his bicycle.

To get to the main road he had to pass through the playground, where he saw Seton surorunded by his friends. Pryce left the group and came up to him.

"Neil," he said, shortly, "I'll be your second. I won't say I stick up for either of you; you both were fools, but I'll stand by you."

"Thanks, awfully, Pryce," said Roy, gratefully; "I know I've been a fool, but I can't back out now, though I'd give my head not to have to fight Seton."

"Funk!" taunted Brown, who had overheard the last sentence.

Roy flushed, but cycled off.

* * * * * * * *

First preparation came, but there was no sign of Roy. Then the tea-bell rang, and still no Roy. The boys began to get puzzled.

Just then Dr. Braid called down the table: "Roy, did you post my letter?"

No reply ,so the question was repeated.

"Please, sir, he hasn't come back," ventured someone.

"What!" said the Doctor, anxiously.

"I don't think you need worry, sir," said Mr. Russell, one of the masters, in an undertone. Roy won't take liberties. Probably a puncture has kept him later."

The Doctor nodded, and tea proceeded as merrily as usual.

After the command to go had been given the Lower Fourth in a body hastened to the pavilion to await the arrival of Roy.

Seton looked extremely unhappy, although he knew perfectly well, as did the all the boys present, that he was much stronger than his old chum.

They waited in silence for a short time. Then Brown, unaware that he was expressing what was in the minds of nearly every boy present, exclaimed: "I do believe the cad has stayed away to get out of fighting. I heard him tell Pryce that he would give his head not to have to fight Seton—funk!"

"That's not what he meant," cried Pryce angrily.

"Then he shouldn't say what he doesn't mean," retorted Brown.

"Roy's no coward, and you know that," said Pryce.

They continued the argument till the second preparation bell rang, so they turned towards the college angry and felt disappointed.

The Head, believing Roy had been delayed by a puncture, thought no more of the matter. The masters and boys, on the other hand, thought he had returned and been detained by the Doctor, so it was not until next morning at breakfast that his absence was noticed, when the Doctor again inquired about his letter.

Finding Roy still missing he looked anxiously down the table. "How did you not notice his absence last night or this morning?" he said, addressing Duncan, the head of Roy's dormitory.

"I thought he must have come up after we were asleep last night, and that he'd gone for a bathe this morning. I didn't account for his bed not having been slept in, though, sir," replied Duncan, looking rather taken aback.

"This is getting serious, boys!" said the Doctor, gravely; then in quiet tones he gave orders for searching parties to be formed.

As they were starting out Mr. Russell suddenly asked, "Boys, do any of you know any reason why Roy should stay away? Speak up, if you know anything! Seton, can you throw no light on the subject?"

Seton flushed painfully.

"Sir," cried Pryce eagerly, "all the boys think he has stayed away because of a quarrel he had, and that he's funking a fight. But it isn't true, sir!"

"Nonsense, Pryce!" said Mr. Russell: "Roy is no coward, whatever may be his faults. Come, boys, we'd better start."

Dr. Braid heard Pryce's suggestion, and told Mr .Russell to telegraph to Colonel Roy if Neil wasn't found by dinner-time.

* * * * * * *

Some of the boys complained at being sent to look for a funker. Seton went with one of the parties, and searched eagerly for his chum, although he was half-sick with fear. He knew Roy too well to think anything but that an accident could have kept him, and his conscience troubled him for his share of the quarrel.

They searched all morning ,but by dinner-time no trace had been found of the missing boy, so all the search parties, except one led by Mr. Russell, returned to school.

The boys — except Seton — took quite a hearty meal, for most of them thought Roy had gone home and spent the night—his father's house was only about sixteen miles away.

Just as they were finishing their last course, the other party appeared at the gate carrying a figure, to all appearance lifeless, on a roughly-made stretcher.

"Keep your seats, boys," cried the Head in a strangely strained voice, as he rose to go to meet Pryce, who was running on to tell the news, "and be as quiet as you can," he added.

* * * * * * *

The evening they heard the details, which had been gathered—for Roy was still unconscious—by inference from the way in which he had been found lying and from a stone on the road.

When cycling down a steep hill on his return from town his bicycle wheel had fouled a stone, and he had been jerked over the low wall in amongst long grass. Evidently a tramp had stolen the bicycle, as it was nowhere to be found.

The feelings of the boys during the days in which Roy hung between life and death may be imagined, and when news came from the sick-room that he had taken a turn for the better there was great rejoicing.

Seton was his first visitor, and Roy greeted him cheerily with, "I hope you haven't decided to put off our fight, old chap?"

Seton looked at his chum, who was swathed in bandages, and said penitently, "Rather not, Neil."

Then those two began to talk.

* * * * * * *

"Well, Roy, we're jolly glad to see you on your legs again!" was what greeted Neil when he made his first appearance in the playground.

"And," said Bell, acting as spokesman for the rest, "we're beastly sorry we thought you'd stayed away to avoid the fight." Bell's eyes rested for a minute on Roy's bandaged arm, and he thought of what the doctor had said, "Roy's the pluckiest young rascal I've ever come across. There's never a sound when I dress his wounds—and they're pretty bad ones, too."

"Oh! that's all right," chuckled Roy; "but next time you should 'look before you leap' to conclusions, eh?"

"I suppose you looked before you leaped over that wall?" suggested Pryce, mildly.

They continued their merry chatter till the tea bell rang, and then hastened off in pairs. That Roy and Seton were arm-in-arm goes without saying.—Kathleen M. Macleod.

DAIRY BUTTER

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. Chas. Cocklin, Simcoe Co., Ont.

We have established a reputation and a demand for our home dairy butter by making good butter and then putting it up in attractive prints. We at one time lived near Toronto and when on the market we occasionally saw printed butter. The idea struck us as being a good one: something that would ensure to the customer a pound of good butter, as the name of the maker was on the wrapper, and a maker would not have his name on butter unless it was good and of full weight.

When we moved to Simcoe county we found that practically all the butter in our neighborhood was sold in the store for trade. This trade system is now almost a thing of the past. The butter was not graded and everyone got the same price. We put ours up in prints, on the wrappers, of which was our name and address, and our butter was soon in demand at three to four cents a pound more than the butter put up in tubs. We have enquiries for butter from people a long distance off, who had gotten some of our butter that was shipped, and, seeing the name and address on the wrapper knew where to come for more of the same kind.

We strongly advise all home-butter makers to print their butter, using the rectangular butter printers, have their name and address on the wrapper, and thereby build up a profitable cash trade in first class home dairy butter.

VALUABLE INFORMATION

From Farm and Dairy.

The common red clover makes one of the best roughage crops for our dairy farms.

It can be grown in all parts of Ontario, but not to the best advantage on all soils.

It is desirable because it contains a fairly high percentage of protein which will help to balance the ration and it also collects nitrogen from the air.

Red clover is not quite as sure as some other crops but a failure is evident early enough in the spring to permit the sowing of a substitute crop, such as peas and oats.

Clover is always relished by cows if it is cut early enough and properly cured. For the best results clover should be cut before too ripe, or when in full bloom. It contains a high percentage of crude fiber which is the least digestible part and which increases very rapidly as the clover ripens.

Clover yields well and is not very difficult to cure. The second crop, if clean and well cured, is as good as the first.

Clover can be made into silage but is difficult to handle in the field and generally it is better to use as hay with corn silage.

Alsike clover contains a higher percentage of protein and for this reason is of more value a ton for feed, but, as a rule, it does not yield as well as the medium and mammoth red clovers.

ALFALFA

Where alfalfa can be successfully grown, it is probably the best roughage or hay crop.

It yields well, even rivaling corn in the amount of digestible nutrients produced per acre. Besides this fact, it contains a high percentage of protein, for which reason it is especially adapted to feeding with corn, which is lacking in protein.

With good well-cured alfalfa hay it is possible to supply the protein needed for fairly heavy production of milk.

For the past six years, alfalfa at the Illinois Experimental Station has yielded an average of four tons of hay per acre. Out of seven sowings on the dairy farm, only once has there been a complete failure to get a stand and only on a part of the piece sown.

For two years the Illinois Station has been feeding a small herd of dairy cows on corn silage and alfalfa hay with a very little corn meal to the heaviest milkers. These cows produced an average of 8,500 lbs. of milk per year. These, however, were large cows capable of handling a large amount of roughage.

The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of those experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP

A Short Story

Hartland College playground was full of boys—all but a few studiously-inclined youths were taking advantage of half an hour's freedom. A group of Lower Fourth boys seemed very excited, as they stood talking, instead of, as usual, indulging in a noisy game.

"here'll be a fight this afternoon, as sure a sa gun," exclaimed one youth.

"I'm not sure, Bell," remarked another. "You see, they've been such chums till to-day."

"What's the row?" asked a newcomer.

"Why, haven't you heard? Neil Roy has had a quarrel with Seton," volunteered Bell.

"But I always thought they were pals?"

"So they were until this morning, when they broke out at each other like furies. My word, haven't they got tempers, just!"

"They'll have difficulty in getting seconds if they do fight," said Ryan; "the class nearly all like them both."

"Except Brown, who hates them both," struck in Pryce with a laugh; "but perhaps he hates Roy most."

Just then Seton came along arm-in-arm with Brown. "He's going to back me," remarked the former; "that sneak, Roy, can't get a second."

"Well, Seton," said Ryan, "I would jolly well rather have no second than the one you've got."

"I'm going to second Roy," suddenly struck in Pryce. "What time, Seton, and where?"

Seton looked surprised, and perhaps a little envious, as he replied: "Immediately before second prop.. and behind the pav."

"That means whenever tea is over, I suppose?"

"Yes," Seton murmured, as he strode off.

* * * * * * * *

As soon as afternoon school was over Neil Roy hurried down the corridor to take refuge during the playhour in Wilson, his fagmaster's study. It was not like him to stay indoors on a lovely summer afternoon, but he wanted peace to think. A few hours before he had insulted and been insulted by the boy who had been his chum since the day he had come to Hartland—and immediately after tea he was engaged to fight him.

These were his thoughts as he blindly rushed down the passage, but they were rudely interrupted as he collided suddenly with somebody. The somebody, much to his annoyance, proved to be Dr. Braid, the headmaster.

"Well, Roy," he smiled, as the boy stammered out an apology, "I'm quite glad to see you, although such sudden collisions are hardly good for one's nerves, but accidents will happen. You are not doing anything particular?"

"No, sir."

"Well, you might cycle into town with this letter. Be as quick as you can, as it is important. If you are a little late for first preparation you will be excused. Thanks very much, Roy," and Neil hurried to the shed for his bicycle.

To get to the main road he had to pass through the playground, where he saw Seton surorunded by his friends. Pryce left the group and came up to him.

"Neil," he said, shortly, "I'll be your second. I won't say I stick up for either of you; you both were fools, but I'll stand by you."

"Thanks, awfully, Pryce," said Roy, gratefully; "I know I've been a fool, but I can't back out now, though I'd give my head not to have to fight Seton."

"Funk!" taunted Brown, who had overheard the last sentence.

Roy flushed, but cycled off.

* * * * * * * *

First preparation came, but there was no sign of Roy. Then the tea-bell rang, and still no Roy. The boys began to get puzzled.

Just then Dr. Braid called down the table: "Roy, did you post my letter?"

No reply ,so the question was repeated.

"Please, sir, he hasn't come back," ventured someone.

"What!" said the Doctor, anxiously.

"I don't think you need worry, sir," said Mr. Russell, one of the masters, in an undertone. Roy won't take liberties. Probably a puncture has kept him later."

The Doctor nodded, and tea proceeded as merrily as usual.

After the command to go had been given the Lower Fourth in a body hastened to the pavilion to await the arrival of Roy.

Seton looked extremely unhappy, although he knew perfectly well, as did the all the boys present, that he was much stronger than his old chum.

They waited in silence for a short time. Then Brown, unaware that he was expressing what was in the minds of nearly every boy present, exclaimed: "I do believe the cad has stayed away to get out of fighting. I heard him tell Pryce that he would give his head not to have to fight Seton—funk!"

"That's not what he meant," cried Pryce angrily.

"Then he shouldn't say what he doesn't mean," retorted Brown.

"Roy's no coward, and you know that," said Pryce.

They continued the argument till the second preparation bell rang, so they turned towards the college angry and felt disappointed.

The Head, believing Roy had been delayed by a puncture, thought no more of the matter. The masters and boys, on the other hand, thought he had returned and been detained by the Doctor, so it was not until next morning at breakfast that his absence was noticed, when the Doctor again inquired about his letter.

Finding Roy still missing he looked anxiously down the table. "How did you not notice his absence last night or this morning?" he said, addressing Duncan, the head of Roy's dormitory.

"I thought he must have come up after we were asleep last night, and that he'd gone for a bathe this morning. I didn't account for his bed not having been slept in, though, sir," replied Duncan, looking rather taken aback.

"This is getting serious, boys!" said the Doctor, gravely; then in quiet tones he gave orders for searching parties to be formed.

As they were starting out Mr. Russell suddenly asked, "Boys, do any of you know any reason why Roy should stay away? Speak up, if you know anything! Seton, can you throw no light on the subject?"

Seton flushed painfully.

"Sir," cried Pryce eagerly, "all the boys think he has stayed away because of a quarrel he had, and that he's funking a fight. But it isn't true, sir!"

"Nonsense, Pryce!" said Mr. Russell: "Roy is no coward, whatever may be his faults. Come, boys, we'd better start."

Dr. Braid heard Pryce's suggestion, and told Mr .Russell to telegraph to Colonel Roy if Neil wasn't found by dinner-time.

* * * * * * * *

Some of the boys complained at being sent to look for a funker. Seton went with one of the parties, and searched eagerly for his chum, although he was half-sick with fear. He knew Roy too well to think anything but that an accident could have kept him, and his conscience troubled him for his share of the quarrel.

They searched all morning ,but by dinner-time no trace had been found of the missing boy, so all the search parties, except one led by Mr. Russell, returned to school.

The boys—except Seton—took quite a hearty meal, for most of them thought Roy had gone home and spent the night—his father's house was only about sixteen miles away.

Just as they were finishing their last course, the other party appeared at the gate carrying a figure, to all appearance lifeless, on a roughly-made stretcher.

"Keep your seats, boys," cried the Head in a strangely strained voice, as he rose to go to meet Pryce, who was running on to tell the news, "and be as quiet as you can," he added.

* * * * * * * *

The evening they heard the details, which had been gathered—for Roy was still unconscious—by inference from the way in which he had been found lying and from a stone on the road.

When cycling down a steep hill on his return from town his bicycle wheel had fouled a stone, and he had been jerked over the low wall in amongst long grass. Evidently a tramp had stolen the bicycle, as it was nowhere to be found.

The feelings of the boys during the days in which Roy hung between life and death may be imagined, and when news came from the sick-room that he had taken a turn for the better there was great rejoicing.

Seton was his first visitor, and Roy greeted him cheerily with, "I hope you haven't decided to put off our fight, old chap?"

Seton looked at his chum, who was swathed in bandages, and said penitently, "Rather not, Neil."

Then those two began to talk.

* * * * * * * *

"Well, Roy, we're jolly glad to see you on your legs again!" was what greeted Neil when he made his first appearance in the playground.

"And," said Bell, acting as spokesman for the rest, "we're beastly sorry we thought you'd stayed away to avoid the fight." Bell's eyes rested for a minute on Roy's bandaged arm, and he thought of what the doctor had said, "Roy's the pluckiest young rascal I've ever come across. There's never a sound when I dress his wounds—and they're pretty bad ones, too."

"Oh! that's all right," chuckled Roy; "but next time you should 'look before you leap' to conclusions, eh?"

"I suppose you looked before you leaped over that wall?" suggested Pryce, mildly.

They continued their merry chatter till the tea bell rang, and then hastened off in pairs. That Roy and Seton were arm-in-arm goes without saying.—Kathleen M. Macleod.

DAIRY BUTTER

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. Chas. Cocklin, Simcoe Co., Ont.

We have established a reputation and a demand for our home dairy butter by making good butter and then putting it up in attractive prints. We at one time lived near Toronto and when on the market we occasionally saw printed butter. The idea struck us as being a good one: something that would ensure to the customer a pound of good butter, as the name of the maker was on the wrapper, and a maker would not have his name on butter unless it was good and of full weight.

When we moved to Simcoe county we found that practically all the butter in our neighborhood was sold in the store for trade. This trade system is now almost a thing of the past. The butter was not graded and everyone got the same price. We put ours up in prints, on the wrappers, of which was our name and address, and our butter was soon in demand at three to four cents a pound more than the butter put up in tubs. We have enquiries for butter from people a long distance off, who had gotten some of our butter that was shipped, and, seeing the name and address on the wrapper knew where to come for more of the same kind.

We strongly advise all home-butter makers to print their butter, using the rectangular butter printers, have their name and address on the wrapper, and thereby build up a profitable cash trade in first class home dairy butter.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S

VALUABLE INFORMATION

From Farm and Dairy.

The common red clover makes one of the best roughage crops for our dairy farms.

It can be grown in all parts of Ontario, but not to the best advantage on all soils.

It is desirable because it contains a fairly high percentage of protein which will help to balance the ration and it also collects nitrogen from the air.

Red clover is not quite as sure as some other crops but a failure is evident early enough in the spring to permit the sowing of a substitute crop, such as peas and oats.

Clover is always relished by cows if it is cut early enough and properly cured. For the best results clover should be cut before too ripe, or when in full bloom. It contains a high percentage of crude fiber which is the least digestible part and which increases very rapidly as the clover ripens.

Clover yields well and is not very difficult to cure. The second crop, if clean and well cured, is as good as the first.

Clover can be made into silage but is difficult to handle in the field and generally it is better to use as hay with corn silage.

Alsike clover contains a higher percentage of protein and for this reason is of more value a ton for feed, but, as a rule, it does not yield as well as the medium and mammoth red clovers.

ALFALFA

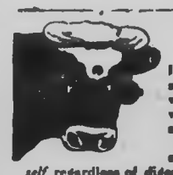
Where alfalfa can be successfully grown, it is probably the best roughage or hay crop.

It yields well, even rivaling corn in the amount of digestible nutrients produced per acre. Besides this fact, it contains a high percentage of protein, for which reason it is especially adapted to feeding with corn, which is lacking in protein.

With good well-cured alfalfa hay it is possible to supply the protein needed for fairly heavy production of milk.

For the past six years, alfalfa at the Illinois Experimental Station has yielded an average of four tons of hay per acre. Out of seven sowings on the dairy farm, only once has there been a complete failure to get a stand and only on a part of the piece sown.

For two years the Illinois Station has been feeding a small herd of dairy cows on corn silage and alfalfa hay with a very little corn meal to the heaviest milkers. These cows produced an average of 8,500 lbs. of milk per year. These, however, were large cows capable of handling a large amount of roughage.



The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. The best part of the day is the evening, when the whole family is gathered together around the lamp.

The old days of the smoky fireplace and flickering candle are gone forever. In their place have come the convenient oil stove and the indispensable Rayo Lamp.

There are to-day, in the United States alone, more than 3,000,000 of these Rayo lamps, giving their clear, white light to more than 3,000,000 homes.

Other lamps cost more, but you cannot get a better light than the low-priced Rayo gives. It has become so popular we may almost call it "the official lamp of the American family."

Appeal Is Granted.

Indianapolis, Nov. 6.—Judge Joseph Markey of the County Criminal Court, Saturday afternoon granted to the International Association of Bridge Workers an appeal to the Indiana Supreme Court from his order giving temporary possession of the evidence in the McNamara dynamiting case to the federal grand jury.

Detectives identified as assistants of William J. Burns and others, said to be agents of the Department of Justice at Washington were in court Saturday watching persons in any way interested in the dispute as to possession of evidence in the McNamara dynamiting case.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 6.—Only five men out of the fourth venire drawn in the McNamara murder trial presented excuses Saturday pleasing to Judge Bordwell in his preliminary examination. One of them, Harry Chandler, son-in-law of General Harrison Gray Otis, proprietor of The Los Angeles' Times, was excused only temporarily.

Fifteen men on the venire of forty were not found, so that twenty venire men remain for service. This is about the usual proportion.

New Year's Day, 1912, will see a full jury box, in the opinion of counsel.

Murder and Suicide.

Boston, Nov. 6.—Drawing a revolver when he met his two young daughters on a street in Winthrop early Saturday afternoon, Ludwig E. Jaeger, a book agent, shot and killed the children, and turning the weapon on himself, inflicted a wound which caused his death two hours later.

Witnesses of the tragedy rushed to the aid of the little ones, who, with their father, were removed to the hospital. The children, Olly, aged 5, and Anita, 4 years old, died within a short time.

The cause of the shooting is thought to be domestic troubles. Mrs. Jaeger divorced her husband in this city last year and she re-married. Jaeger was born in Germany 39 years ago.

Student Is Arrested.

Toronto, Nov. 6.—Ross Courtney, 174 Robert street, a student at the university, fearing that a Canadian Express Co.'s wagon strolling down Yonge street on Saturday evening would probably knock some one down and perhaps do them bodily injury, stepped from the sidewalk and seizing the horse's bridle brought the animal to a stop.

Policeman Wilson stopped at the same moment, and then started ahead, leading the young student towards Court street station. Other young fellows belonging to the university paraded noisily behind the officer. When on Toronto street, Alexander Macdonald, 72 Prince Arthur street, tried to enthuse the followers into an attack on the cop.

An attempt was made, in which Wilson lost his helmet, and as a sequel Macdonald lost his liberty. The lost helmet was recovered in a somewhat dilapidated condition in one of the university residences.

Another Railway Strike?

London, Nov. 6.—The joint executive committee of the railroad trade unions, which has been in session for several days, to decide its attitude towards the findings of the royal commission, Saturday determined to take a ballot of the members of the union on the question of whether they would accept the commission's report or strike on the demand for a complete recognition of their unions.

The ballot papers are returnable on Dec. 5. The enginemen as a rule seem to be opposed to a strike, but the other railroad employes appear determined to force the crisis.

Can Use Aeroplanes.

Washington, Nov. 6.—Italy's use of the aeroplane in dropping grenades into the Turkish camp, it is declared here, is not a violation of the fourteenth agreement of The Hague Conference of 1907 prohibiting the use of air craft in the discharge of projectiles and explosives, "or by any other method of a similar nature," in so far as that country is concerned.

The last official report of countries which have signed the agreements enacted by the 1907 conference, registered at the State Department last June, showed that while Turkey had signed this particular agreement, Italy had not.

No Tips.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—A campaign against tipping has been started by the commercial travelers of the United States.

LAUGHTER.

How It Has Been Defined and Some Folks Who Never Tried It.

What is laughter? An American humorist has called it "an undignified widening of the human mouth, accompanied by a noise resembling a cough in the effort to avoid swallowing a chestnut."

"Laughter," says Professor Sir Charles Bell, "is a convulsive action of the diaphragm. In this state the person draws a full breath and throws it out in interrupted short and audible exclamations. This convulsion of the diaphragm is the principal part of the physical manifestation of laughter.

"But there are several accessories, especially the sharp vocal utterance arising from the violent tension of the larynx and the expression of the features, this being a more intense form of the smile. In extreme cases the eyes are moistened by the effusion from the lachrymal glands."

There are some people who cannot laugh, who are wholly unable to enjoy either the physical or the mental luxury of a laugh. Thus it was said of William III. that he was utterly at a loss to understand what could be got out of laughter except loss of dignity. There are many persons in history who have been, according to common report, incapable of laughter. Queen Mary I., John Knox, Robespierre and Maitre are examples. The Iron Duke himself rarely, if ever, went beyond a grunt.—Strand Magazine.

STRENUOUS MUSIC.

A Story They Tell of Strauss' Ability as a Conductor.

"The late Thomas Wentworth Higginson," said a Harvard instructor, "loved music, but not the extremely technical music of Richard Strauss, Ravel and others of that type.

"He said that Strauss went one summer on a hunting trip in the mountains. It chanced that on a certain afternoon a terrific thunderstorm descended on the hunting party. Amid earsplitting thunder and blinding lightning, amid deluges of rain whipped by a roaring wind, the huntsmen all sought shelter.

"Where, though, was Strauss?

"Three friends set out in alarm to look for him. They feared that in the wild chaos of the storm he had fallen down a precipice. After a long while they found him. They found him doing—what do you suppose?

"Strauss stood bareheaded on the summit of a lofty crag. The lightning played about him in vivid violet flashes; the rain deluged him; the thunder rolled and rumbled around him; the roaring wind flapped his coattails about his head, and the musician, a ramrod in his hand, was busily engaged on his high crag in conducting the thunderstorm!"—Washington Star.

DON'T FORGET SATURDAY NEXT, NOVEMBER 11th, IS TAG DAY!

WHITNEY GOVERNMENT HAS FAILED TO DO ANYTHING FOR THE WORKINGMAN

Speakers at Mr. Hall's Splendid Meeting on Saturday Evening Point Out the Extreme Necessity of Amendments to the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act---Conservative Regime Has Not Developed Any Relief in Regard to this Most Important Matter Which Has Been Neglected by Premier Whitney and His Associates.

A splendid gathering of electors and others, assembled in Mr. Hall's committee rooms on Saturday evening. Shortly after eight o'clock Mr. W. H. Ruse took the chair, and in the course of a few brief remarks, said that during the week Mr. Whitney had made his announcement to the electors of the Province. The announcement in itself fell flat, there being contained therein nothing that was inviting to the youg Canadian. It was merely apologies for what he and his Government had left undone. When Mr. Whitney talked purity, the electors could look for the worst kind of corruption; when he talked economy, you could look for greater extravagance; when he spoke of the excellent management of public institutions the electors could look for and find the greatest mismanagement. And he believed the electors of the Province were getting their eyes thoroughly opened to the bombast and buncombe that was being offered to the electors of the Province by the Whitney Government.

He understood that all those who registered at the last Dominion elections would be required to register over again to enable them to qualify for their vote on December 11th. The date of registration was not yet announced, but no doubt would be in the course of a few days. Each supporter of Mr. Hall's should see that his name was on the list, the basis of registration would be the voters' list of 1910. Mr. Hall would speak to them regarding important legislation for the workingman. If any legislation could be worse than the Whitney Government Compensation Act to prevent compensation from being obtained for injuries sustained it [illegible] were too many "buts," "ifs" and "onlys" in it, which prevented the workingman from obtaining justice. He then called upon Mr. Stratton, who was in the audience, to open the meeting.

Mr. Hall's Address.

Mr. Hall said he was gratified to see such a large number present and to learn that such a widespread interest was being taken in the Workmen's Compensation Act. For this last seven years the Whitney Government have ignored the rights of the workmen, and labour organizations are complaining at their past negligence and insolence to them.

Sir James Whitney, in his manifesto to the electors, has not uttered one word of assurance to the workmen that he will remodel and extend the provisions of this Act, so that full and ample damages may be given to the workman, or his family, on account of any injury he might sustain in the course of his employment. It is necessary, therefore, that the workmen should choose as their representative some one whom they know is opposed to the Whitney Government, and who will champion their cause. Mr. Hall said that an important matter to secure is that the workman or his family should not be called upon to fight an expensive law suit in the court, with a wealthy corporation and be dragged from one court to another with evident advantage in the long run to the longest purse or else be compelled to accept a mere pittance for the injury he has sustained.

It is inconceivable, declared Mr. Hall, why the Whitney Government has done nothing whatever during this last seven years to improve the position of the workmen, when we find that other Provinces in the Dominion have been passing legislation in their interests. We also find that State after State in the American Union, and England, Germany, France, Sweden, and other European countries have placed upon their statute books advanced labour legislation.

The laws of the Province of Ontario at the present time are most unsatisfactory. The working out in practice of the principle of the Employers' Liability Assurance has the effect of driving the employer and employees further and further apart.

The ordinary Accident Insurance policy imposes too heavy a burden upon the workman and the Workman's Collective Policy gives the workman too small a return for the money paid.

English Compensation Law.

The English Workman's Compensation Act of 1906 provides as follows: "If in any employment personal injury, by accident, arising out of, and in the course of, the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject to certain exceptions, "be liable to pay compensation in accordance" with a well-considered schedule. The chief exception is that if it "be proved that the injury to a "workman is attributable to the "serious and wilful misconduct of "that workman, any compensation "claimed in respect to that injury, "shall, unless the injury results in "death, or serious and permanent "disablement be disallowed."

The German law makes the employer a compulsory insurer of all his employees, and awards a reasonable compensation to the workman, according to the injury inflicted.

Provincial Insurance System.

"What I contend," said Mr. Hall, "is that the best principles in all these various ways of compensating the workmen for injury, should be adopted." The money spent in law suits by employers and employees, and the premiums paid to Employers' Liability Assurance Companies would provide a fund large enough, if added to by a reasonable grant from the Government to provide for a Provincial Accident insurance system, that would put an end to all law suits, and amply compensate every injured workman or his family for the loss he or they might sustain on account of any accident that is not attributable to the serious or wilful misconduct of the workman himself." Mr. Hall said "The Toronto Globe" on Saturday, in commenting upon his circular to the Mechanics and workmen of Peterborough, quotes from the statistics compiled by the well-known labour organiser, Mr. John Mitchell, in support of his conclusions. Mr. Mitchell shows that during the eleven years from 1894 to 1905, the employers of the United States paid to Insurance Companies in premiums almost one hundred million dollars. During this period these Insurance Companies paid out in settlement of claims of injured workmen about forty three and one-half million dollars. It is quite safe to say that after payment of law costs, only about thirty million found its way into the pockets of the injured workmen, or their families. It will, therefore, be seen that of the one hundred millions paid by the employers for the protection of their workmen less than one-third of the whole amount is actually used in compensating their workmen. It is, therefore, quite apparent, said Mr. Hall, that it is in the mutual interests of both the employer and employees that a system should be devised whereby the injured employee would receive proper compensation without all the wasteful expense of costly law suits. Moreover, it should be made to the interest of the employer to take every precaution to guard and protect his workmen from injury, and he would be rewarded by having to pay a smaller insurance premium.

Insure the Employees.

For instance, the employer to-day takes every precaution to guard his factory and premises from injury by fire. He installs an automatic sprinkler system, chemical fire extinguishers, large water tanks, keeps up steam to operate pumps, keeps his premises free from combustible material, erects fireproof buildings of slow, burning construction, and adopts every precaution to protect his premises from injury by fire. For these precautions the employer receives his reward. He gets his fire insurance premiums reduced from $2.50 per thousand down as low as 15c per thousand, according to precautions taken.

Why should it not under a well-devised Provincial Accident Insurance System be made to the interests of the employer to protect his workmen against injury and reap his reward, by having to pay a smaller premium.

Many accidents happen to workmen on account of too long hours of labour. It would, therefore, be to the interests of the employer to avoid this increased risk and give shorter hours of labour.

It is of first importance to the community that its mechanics and workmen should never meet with accidents. A live and healthy man is worth more to the community than a one-armed man with $2,500.00 compensation money in his pocket.

Mr. Hall said that he would be glad to receive any information from the Labour organizations in the city that would enable them to have placed upon the Statute books a fair and just Workmen's Compensation law. The weight of public opinion can be so strongly arrayed against the Whitney Government that they must adopt a reasonable measure, or resign.

G. N. GORDON.

On being called upon, Mr. Gordon said the Hon. Mr. Stratton had dealt with the matters under discussion extremely ably and well.

Going into the Workmens' Compensation Act, Mr. Gordon said he had long ago reached the conclusion that some remedy along the lines of the English Act was required. A woman with a family and with her means of living and support cut off by injury, or perhaps death of the provider for

NEWFOUNDLANDERS IN POLICE COURT

John O'Day, Michael Kelly and Randolph Smith were arraigned in the Police Court this morning on a charge of vagrancy. Telephone messages were received from West and North End citizens on Sunday, complaining that there were men begging around their houses, and a couple of omcers were sent after them, but they were not rounded up until last night, when they were found sleeping in a shed.

The men gave their homes as being in Newfoundland, and stated that they were on their way from the Canadian West, where they had spent the summer, but unfortunately had spent their substance in riotous livink, and were looking for work in a lumber camp. They said they were willing to work, but could not secure it.

They were remanded until 2 o'clock this afternoon, and in the meantime the officers will endeauvour to secure work for them.

In A Strange Land

"Where's your ticket?"
"Yah!"
"Have you got a railway ticket?"
"Yah!"

Such was the gist of a conversation which took place between a native of the flowery kingdom and a local express man at the C.P.R. station on Saturday afternoon, following the arrival of the regular 4.28 train from the East.

The express man, with an eye to business, had observed the bewildered-looking celestial alighting from the train and went up to him with a view to having the pleasure of transferring his baggage to his destination. The baggage in question consisted of a deep canvas bag bound with ropes, and a smaller bundle covered with straw packing.

Peterborough citizens gave him a right royal welcome. They surrounded him on all sides, and treated him to a fusilade of stoney stares. "John Chinaman' stood the ordeal bravely, however, and was finally persuaded to produce his ticket, which disclosed the fact that he had come all the way from Vancouver via Montreal, and was bound for Campbellford. The "reception committee" finally decided to take the traveller to some of his native countrymen who resided in the city. This was accordingly acted upon, and he was last seen perched on the hurricane deck of an express waggon, which was speeding its way up George street.

A RUNAWAY

A horse attached to a delivery waggon ran away on Saturday evening during the absence of the driver, who was delivering parcels. The animal, which had been left untied, started off at a leisurely pace and proceeded down George street. When it was nearing Hunter street it slipped and fell, but soon regained an upright position and proceeded on its way. It was captured by a couple of bystanders outside of Stetson's shoe store. No damage was done to the outfit.

Gun Was Discharged While He Was Boarding a Row Boat and Contents Entered His Head, Resulting in Instant Death---Sad Fate of Business College Student.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

Kingston, Ont., Nov. 5.—The parents of Robert W. Curragh, an 18-year-old business college student of this city, were given a great shock Saturday afternoon when a farm waggon drove up to their door with their son's dead body. The young man met an accidental death at Collins' Lake, some miles east of here, while out duck-shooting. He and a chum, Ford McCarthy, a science student, left at 5 o'clock in the morning. About noon, who in the act of getting into a small boat by himself, the gun of the deceased went off and the discharge entered his head, blowing it completely off and upsetting the lad into the water. His chum heard the shot and the splash and rushed to the boat. He secured aid, and had the remains brought to the city about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Dr. Mundell, coroner, was called, but did not deem an inquest necessary.

A WONDERFUL TREAT FOR PETERBOROUGH PLAY-GOERS

Visit of Countess de Swirsky the Famous Russian Dansecuse to the "Grand" To-morrow Evening Promises to be an Unique and Artistic Entertainment---Special Orchestra Will Assist the Artiste.

In the appearance at the Grand Opera House to-morrow night of the Countess Thamara de Swirsky, the famous Russian interpretive dancer, Peterborough theatre patrons will have an opportunity of seeing an unique and artistic performance. Countess de Swirsky was the first of the wonderful Russians to dance with the Metropolitan Opera Company, in its New York abode, and was followed by her countrymen Pavlova and Mordkin, the latter of whom is giving a concert in Massey Hall, Toronto, this week. A noted critic has said of her —"Mlle Thamara de Swirsky, the Russian countess "with the soul of a Greek," has done more to create and revive interest in the art and poetry of early Greece than have many libraries and museums. To see her interpret the creations of the master composers, to behold her visualiastions of the ideals of theHellas, is to renew again one's interest in the pages that tell of art's greatest glory'. It has been said that Countess de Swirsky is appealing to much the same class of art lovers as do the concerts of Caruso, Melba, Eames, and Sembrich. With her exquisite body, subtle, graceful movements she suggests the themes of the great composers, Greig, Dvorak, Chopin. She interprets in her dancing the emotions, fire, the charm and the poetry which these masters have expressed in melody. Her art is unique, combining as it does, dancing that is technically perfect and exquisitely graceful with her splendid musicianship. She is, indeed, a pianist of splendid ability, and a feature of the programme consists of her numbers on the piano. She is supported by her own special orchestra—a body of capable musicians.

The dance programme is in four parts. First Mlle. de Swirsky is seen in Russian dances, in the true national costume, with its glittering stones and beaded cap and string of pearls. During the second part of the programme the Countess interprets, with fine subtlety, the delicate, sentimental ideals of Chopin in three of his compositions. The Peer Gynt Suite of Greig furnishes the themes for Mlle. de Swirsky's dances in part three, and in the last part, the Grecian side of the programme, is the famous "Tanagra."

The Dedication Festival Concluded At St. John's Splendid Musical Services

The concluding service of St. John's annual Dedication Festival last night, was attended by a large congregation. Incorporating the Feast of "All Saints," the beautiful blending of the solemn and joyous was well marked at both services. The Choral Evensong was a beautiful example of what is meant by a sung liturgical service, and the splendid singing of the choir all through was an eloquent tribute to the value of the church's offices. In arranging for the "Hallelujah" chorus from Handel's "Messiah," Mr. R. J. Devey made no mistake, for the choristers sang as an inspired body, from the little fellows of eight years old, to the veteran choristers of over forty years service, of whom more than one was present.

The amount of practicing put in to enable a purely voluntary choir to so ably render the standard musical works put on in St. John's is a puzzle, but to see the expression of earnest interest by the whole of the standing congregation was an inspiration A feature of the production of the chorus was the excellent volume of sound remarkable in a choir of forty members in a composition, that for effective production needs a chorus of three or four hundred. All honour to this noble band of singers, who unhesitatingly follow their leader, and with unflagging energy, do what in them lies to render the worship due to their Maker, the very best it is possible to give.

Avery large number of members of churches in the city were present at the services, to whom the Rev. Canon Davidson extended a hearty welcome.

Celebrated At Lakefield

The Orangemen of Lakefield celebrated Guy Fawkes' night in appropriate fashion on Saturday evening, when there was a procession, followed by the burning of "Guy Fawkes" on the green in front of the town hall. There was a large attendance, including six bus loads from Peterborough, and the event was a great success. The Lakefield Brass Band and several fife and drum bands, including the Armstrong band from Peterborough, were in attendance and the event did not lack for music. There was a large turnout for the procession, which marched through the village. Afterwards the visiting brethren were entertained at supper.

High Wind Caused Trouble

There was a decided drop in headdress to-day, this condition being due to the prevailing high wind. Hats of all kinds were wont to aviate and exchange greetings with one another across the street. Asudden gust of wind lifted the hat from a pedestrian and deposited it under the wheels of an express wagon. It being of the Christy variety, its value depreciated considerably as a result. A few minutes afterward an idol of feminine adornments was lifted from its pedestal and was about to precipitate itself under a street car when it was rescued in the nick of time by a gallant youth and returned to its owner.

REGISTRATION.

It is unfortunate that to the general turmoil of the provincial election is to be added the trouble and great expense of a registration of voters. It is too bad; but it must be done—owing to a defect in the Ontario law, which should be remedied. The Dominion law provides that the same provincial registration may be allowed to serve for Dominion elections; but the Provincial law does not admit of this, and, though there was a Dominion registration in Peterborough in September, there will have to be another for the present general election. Every man who registered for a vote in the Dominion election will have to be registered for the provincial, or he will be deprived of a vote. It is well, therefore, for those concerned to make the necessary preparations for registration.

It may not do any good, but it might be pointed out to those whose vote is dependent upon registration that they themselves have a duty to perform, if they appreciate the dignity and duty of becoming electors, and exercising the franchise. It should be remembered that the right to vote is a privilege and should be so regarded. Any citizen who appreciates the franchise will seek registratin himself and not wait to be urged, or driven, to the registration booths.

MR. HALL AND COMPENSATION.

Mr. R. R. Hall, the Liberal candidate, delivered an important address to the working men at the Liberal committee rooms on Saturday evening, on especially the relations of the present law of compensation for injuries to the interests, welfare and happiness of the workingmen employed in factory occupations, that render them liable to accident. Mr. Hall plainly pointed out the defects of the present law, and the necessity of improvement in the way of simplicity and facility of operation. He, however, did more than that. He went further than the average critic. He found fault; but also pointed out a remedy; he not only showed how the law could be amended so as to be more effective and less costly in application; but he pointed out other ways by which the interests — the lives and families of working men could be protected, without resort to compromise and expensive suits-at-law.

Recent local events in the courts have shown the necessity or someone taking action, if any improvement in the laws and conditions affecting the interests of the working men engaged in dangerous employment, are made. With an election in sight, and in issuing his manifesto to the electors, which is supposed to embody the policy and course of legislation of the Government, Sir James Whitney has not thought the rights, the lives, the safety, and the happiness of the working classes of sufficient importance to be referred to. He has not, for the past seven years, treated the subject with attentive interest; he has shown neither interest nor sympathy with conditions that are daily exposing throughout Canada, and especially Ontario — the great manufacturing province—workingmen to dangerous, if not fatal, accident, without provision in law, or otherwise, that will provide adequate compensation. It should not be a difficult matter to deal with. There does not seem to be any reason why, where human flesh and blood, and human life and saddened homes are concerned, there should not be as easy and prompt settlement of claims for loss as is possible in the case of loss by fire of buildings, or other property. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, losses by fire are settled in a few days, and without a vexatious and expensive law suit. How much better is a man than a house?

A GOVERNMENT THAT LACKS INITIATIVE POWER

The Whitney Government is almost utterly lacking in the faculty of initiating progressive legislation, and lacking in an even greater degree the virility to carry it out. Dr. Pyne's administration of the Department of Education has resulted in a hopeless muddle, and in the introduction of uncertificated teachers into many schools; Col. Matheson has been as putty in the hands of men like those who manipulated the Farmers' Bank deposit; Dr. Reaume is conspicuous for the tardy way in which public works are carried on; the Minister of Agriculture, Hon. James Duff, is a sore disappointment even to his party friends; Hon. J. J. Foy drowses through the commotion caused by the shocking failure of his department to detect and punish crime; while of Hon. Frank Cochrane, who recently went up higher, The Toronto Telegram, a good Tory paper, was forced to say:—

> "The late Hon. Rip Van Winkle slept for twenty years amid the peaks of the Catskill Mountains, and was offered nothing but a cold potato when he woke up.
>
> "The living Hon. Frank Cochrane slept for six and a half years amid the possibilities of the Temiskaming country, and was made first Minister from Ontario when he was translated without ever waking up.
>
> "Ontario is not entitled to indict the Cochrane administration on the complaint that the prospector or miner is not in the North. The prospector was sure to get there, the gold hunter could not be kept away. The deep damnation of Hon. Frank Cochrane's showing after six and a half years of supremacy is that the priceless man, the farmer, Mr. Cochrane has never put there on fertile acres that will be glorious farms when gold is no more and silver is forgotten."

Sir James Whitney has clubbed the progressive members among his following in the Legislature so often and so savagely that most of them are thoroughly cowed and not a few sullenly resentful. The Premier of Ontario does not know this—probably will be the last man in the Province to know it. With a big majority behind him, he holds himself as all-sufficient to himself, and perhaps without knowing it, assumes the air and insolent indolence of an autocrat.

But that is not enough for the people. They want progressive government, more than one-man government. Sir James is giving the one, but he most assuredly is not giving the other, and his recently issued programme holds out no hope that the forward movement is about to begin.

The electors await with expectation the announcement of the Liberal platform by Mr. Rowell. If that platform is one in which progress, not only in material development, but in social and moral reform, is urged, there will be a far more general movement toward Liberalism than Sir James Whitney has an idea of, and that the movement will be the result in no small degree of the failure of Sir James and his colleagues to understand that the world moves while they stand still. In many respects the laws of Ontario today are away behind the times, and all that the would-be reformer—either within the Conservative ranks or outside—gets when he seeks amendment is a curt command, disguised as a request, to withdraw his measure. Ontario is tired of Governmental lethargy, and a large increase of the Liberal membership in the Legislature would force that fact upon the attention of the autocrats of Queen's Park. —The Globe.

TORONTO STAR INVESTIGATES BILINGUAL SCHOOL CONDITIONS

Private Enterprise Supplements the Inaction and Indifference of the Whitney Government—The Government Commissioner's Report Still Witheld—Three Hundred Bilingual Schools; in How Many is English Taught?

(From the Toronto Star.)

For several weeks past two members of The Star staff have been investigating the subject of bilingual schools in Ontario. They are continuing their investigations, and beginning immediately there will appear in The Star a series of articles setting forth the results of their investigations.

To the men who have the work in hand, the subject is not an unfamiliar one. When the subject was brought forcibly to the attention of the public a year ago by Bishop Fallon, the same two members of the staff conducted an investigation which did a great deal to reveal the real situation at that time. In resuming the investigation now, they are, therefore, on familiar ground.

The investigators have special qulifications for the work. Both have a command of the French language, are bilingualists so to speak, a decided advantage, indeed a necessity in conducting an investigation in certain sections of the Province. Though the question is in no sense a religious one, the fact that one is a Protestant and the other a Roman Catholic, will ensure impartiality on this point, particularly as the articles are to be the joint work of the two writers. In addition, both are trained newspaper men, whose business it is to discover facts and present them clearly and concisely.

A Vast Silence on Bilingualism.

At present there is a deep silence on the bilingual question. The Star's investigation of a year ago lead up to the point where the Provincial Government appointed a Commissioner to make an official investigation and report. This, it was expected, would have been available long before this, but, according to Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, it will be months yet before it is ready. "There are 300 bilingual schools in the Province, and there have been only 192 school days since Dr. Merchant was appointed," said Dr. Pyne, and as, by inference, he is to visit each one, his report will be withheld a considerable time yet. Meanwhile, Sir James Whitney, and the Minister of Education are not touching the subject in their public utterances. The Premier, a day or two ago, issued a long manifesto, but not a word about bilingual schools. Perhaps he is reserving this subject for a separate pronouncement. Something like this seemed to be in the mind of Mr. G. H. Ferguson, the leader in the Legislature of the attacking forces on bilingual schools, when he the other day intimated that he was content to await Sir James' decision.

Suspicion on One Side Apprehension on Other.

Meanwhile the subject is one of engrossing public interest. It is not putting the case too strongly to say that there is abroad a strong suspicion of the Government's conduct of bilingual schools, while on the other side there is apprehension on the part of the French population that possible action may take from them something hitherto regarded as a right.

For over half a century the problem of bilingual schools has been before Ontario. In 1851 French was given its first official recognition. There appears to be no record of what led up to it, but in that year the then Council of Public Instruction passed an order dealing with the qualifications for those presenting themselves for teachers' certificates: "In regard to the teaching of French—that a knowledge of French grammar be substituted for a knowledge of English grammar, and that the certificate of the teacher be expressly limited thereto." The precedent then established was strengthened a quarter of a century later, when the use of French text-books was authorized.

French text-books are still in use, and English since 1851 has not been the sole authorized language in Ontario.

Is English "To Be" Language of Ontario.

If the problem was getting nearer a solution there would be no need of apprehension, but apparently on the contrary, it is becoming more aggravated, especially during the last few years. At the outset, any investigator will find that the problem bristles with difficulties.

"Wipe the bilingual schools out completely," say some. "Do that and you have ended the whole trouble." Resolutions to this effect are frequently reported.

"Just let them try it," is about as near an answer as one can get from those who favour the present system.

Putting the matter in plain, blunt terms, it resolves itself to this: "Is English to be the language of Ontario?"

One asks is English "to be" the language of Ontario and not "to remain." In that there is a great difference. It may shock some to have it told to them that English is not at present the language of a considerable portion of Ontario, but the statement is just as true as if one said English is not the language of Paris, of Berlin, of Pekin. Hence, it is not a question of English "remaining" the language of Ontario, but is it "to be" the language of all the people in this Province in future? In answer comes a protest from that section of the Province where English is not the tongue spoken, "What! Are you going to take our language away from us? You can't do it. We have it guaranteed to us as a right under the laws of the Dominion of Canada."

There are those, however, who have no desire of interfering with the rights of others, and who say that the bilingual schools of to-day are not a means of protecting those rights. On the contrary, they say, the dual system is a snare and a delusion. One recalls the words of Bishop Fallon a year ago, when he called "the alleged bilingual school system, one which teaches neither English nor French, encourages incompetency, gives a prize to hypocrisy, and breeds ignorance."

Again he said, "the fault is not with the children or with the teachers—it is with the system, and it is against the system and the threatened extension of it that I protest. I base my protest on the rights of children to an education, and that will open up to them the avenues of success."

Against that is the statement made by another who has studied the matter deeply.

"The system is not to blame," he told the writer. The one in vogue in Ontario is the best possible. It is the one adopted by nations of Europe which have a bilingual problem just as trying as the one in Ontario. The system is all right, and would solve all the difficulties if it were only worked out properly."

The Regulation on Which Bilingualism is Based.

Here is the regulation as it stands to-day:

"IT SHALL BE THE DUTY OF EVERY TEACHER TO USE THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN INSTRUCTION AND IN ALL COMMUNICATIONS WITH THE PUPILS IN REGARD TO DISCIPLINE AND THE MANAGEMENT OF THE SCHOOL." So far it is rigid enough for the most exacting, and then is added the following words, "EXCEPT WHERE IT IS IMPRACTICABLE TO DO SO BY REASON OF THE PUPIL NOT UNDERSTANDING ENGLISH."

It is that final clause which has opened the door to bilingualism. But, after all, little objection can be taken to the wording of it. How can you teach a child five or six or seven years old except in the language he knows?

The letter of the law may be all right, but what about the spirit of its administration. There are 300 bilingual schools in Ontario, and The Star's preliminary information is to the effect that in very few of them is "English the language of instruction." If English, as the language of instruction and of use in the Province of Ontario, is going back, that fact ought to be known, and the responsibility placed where it belongs.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES CELEBRATED AT SPRINGVILLE

The anniversary of the Springville Presbyterian church was fittingly celebrated yesterday, when Rev. J. D. Morrow, pastor of the Dale Presbyterian (the Athletes' church), Toronto, preached at both services, delivering inspiring and interesting addresses. There were large congregations present at both services. In the morning the usual choir provided the music, while in the evening a choir of about forty young men of the congregation had charge of the service, also conducted by the young men.

An interesting feature was an unusual duet contributed by Messrs. Whitfield and Robert Colin, which was much appreciated by Rev. Mr. Morrow and will undoubtedly be popular with the people of the Dale church, as it took the form of a substantial donation from the Springville congregation to the funs of the Athletes' church. In the evening, Rev. Mr. Morrow gave an interesting account of his work in Toronto.

Yesterday was the fifth anniversary since Rev. Dr. Marsh has been in charge of the Springville church, and the congregation has made marked progress in that time, having increased both numerically and financially. The membership has increased over one hundred and the church is in a most flourishing condition.

To-night there will be a splendid anniversary concert at which the programme will be contributed by Miss Mae Teskey, the well known Toronto elocutionist, Miss Sanderson of Peterborough, and other excellent talent of similar calibre.

Mr. R. M. Glover For The Executive Of The O.H.A.

At a meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club, held on Saturday evening in the Examiner offices, it was decided to nominate Mr. R. M. Glover, secretary of the club, for the executive of the Ontario Hockey Association. Mr. Glover served on that body last season, having been appointed by President Duff, and his claim to the position will be strongly pressed by the Peterborough Club this year.

The executive also decided that the annual meeting of the club should be held on the evening of Nov. 16, when the officers will be elected and other important business will be transacted. It was decided by the executive at Saturday's meeting, that Mr. Thos. McGeachie should be the club's representative at the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association.

Peterborough Boys In The Limelight On Saturd y

Peterborough boys were strongly in the limelight in Saturday's rugby games and a singular coincidence is that all but two of them played with a winning team. Pete Campbell played with Varsity, which defeated Queen's. Frank Heffernan and Dick Sheehy figured on the back division of Ottawa College and helped to beat McGill. Ross Craig was at inside wing for Alerts who won from Dundas in the senior O.R.F.U., Hal Kennedy was on the line-up of T.A.A.C. which defeated St. Michael's. Harold Matthews was in the Scrimmage for R. M. C. Seconds, who won from Varsity Thirds and Claude Bartlett was at inside wing for Trinity College School, which twon the Little Four championship from Ridley. The only Peterborough men on the losing side were Harry Smith, who was at flying wing for the Argonauts against Tigers and Frank Hickey, who played middle wing for St. Michael's against T.A.A.

Will Propose Reduction Of Players To Six Men On Each Side

The Peterborough Hockey Club will submit a number of proposed amendments to the rules of the Ontario Hockey Association for the approval or disapproval of that body at its annual meeting in Toronto this month. Among the most important of these will be a proposal to reduce the number of players from seven to six men a side. Such a suggestion has met with favour in the Eastern Canadian Hockey League and it is felt that all the arguments that have been urged in its favour in the East have even more application in the Ontario body where many of the rinks are small and seven men aside seem to monopolize every inch of the playing space.

There are several weighty reasons why the reduction of the number of players would be a benefit. In the first place it would undoubtedly make the game much faster and more spectacular. Have you ever noticed in a game where a player on each side has been dropped from injuries, how much more open and pretty to watch the contest becomes? With eight forwards chasing the rubber around on a small ice surface, the game is very apt to degenerate into a "shinny" match, with the players bunched so badly that they are unable to break away. The removal of a man from each side helps to get away from this bunching in centre ice and gives the spectators a far better article of hockey. Perhaps the objection may be made that a reduction in the number would have a tendency to do away with combination, but it is hard to see how it would have any effect. Combination as played by the leading teams nowadays is almost always of the two or three man variety. It is very seldom indeed, that four forwards go down abreast passing the puck from one to the other. For one thing, the size of the average O.H.A. rink prevents any such system of play. Again, modern hockey calls for the defence players to be practically forwards, and a great number of the attacks are started by the defence, so that with three forwards and two rushing defence, there should be no lack of team-play. Such a rule would be decidedly beneficial for the smaller towns, where players are not so easily ding up as they are in the larger centres. It would be considerably easier to find three forwards than four, and the small town teams would appreciate the assistance a reduction in the number of players would give them.

Certainly, there are a number of rinks in the O.H.A. upon which seven men crowd the ice to such an extent that real hockey, the kind the spectators like, is out of the question. On the other hand, there are no rinks so large that six men on each side would be too few. Surely if the Professional League, with its immense arenas, intends to put in force the reduced number, the smaller rinks in the O.H.A. would adopt themselves much more readily to the change.

The Peterborough Club will introduce and support the amendment at the annual meeting and no doubt the proposal will lead to an interesting and definite discussion.

Wolgast Only One Left In His Class

CHICAGO, ILL., NOV. 1.—What is to become of all the good lightweights? From the looks of things right now it's pretty safe to bet that inside of six months there won't be a first-class man left in the class, with the single exception of the present champion.

We are told that Matt Wells, British champion, intends to return to the other side because he is so disgusted with his own condition that he is going to chuck the whole thing. He has found, it is said, that he cannot even make 135 pounds now.

Freddie Welsh, his closest rival for supremacy among the Britons, has had to start west early in order to train for weeks to get down somewhere near the lightweight limit so that he can fill his engagement with Ad Wolgast the latter part of the month.

PACKEY ALL RIGHT

Packey McFarland says his weight is about the same as it always has been—he can manage 133 pounds eight or ten hours before a contest, but would much prefer to be allowed to make 135 at about the same time.

If this keeps up, who is to battle the mighty Wolgast?

There isn't much of a new crop coming up. "Knockout" Brown is the best boy in the east, and he is regarded as a setup for Wolgast and admitted to be even by his eastern friends, especially over a championship ronte. Nobody in the west stands a chance with the Cadillac hurricane at the present time.

Wolgast demands his pound of flesh all right, and from the Wolgast viewpoint that is the thing to do. Since other fighters decline to concede a single ounce, why should he? It's a good argument, for he is as much inside of the lightweight limit as the others are over it. He's champion, too, and can do the dictating. So what are the others to do about it?

WOLGAST GAME

The Cadillac man is as courageous as one could wish to find, and is willing to meet any of them. He once told Stanley Ketchel that he would some day fight him for the championship of Michigan. "You live at Grand Rapids and I live at Cadillac," he told the late middleweight champion. "Those towns are too close together to hold two champions, so I'll have to fight you for it." Ketchel laughed good-naturedly at this, but said afterwards that he knew Wolgast meant it.

Ketchel boxed with Wolgast several times on the coast, notably soon after Stanley's ill-starred match with Jack Johnson, and Wolgast threw him all over the ring, causing Ketchel the greatest surprise. "He's about the strongest little cuss I ever hooked up with," Ketchel told his friends afterwards. "He ought to be champion for a good many years."

AD CHAMPION KILLER

On the weight subject, it is worthy of note that Wolgast is not only champion, but he is champion-killer. He not only wipes out all candidates from his path, but he puts them out of business. Outside of "Knockout" Brown, who boxed Wolgast twice in the east when Ad was testing his arm, not a single man Wolgast has tackled in the last two years ever has been able to make a first-class battle afterwards.

The list includes Battling Nelson, Owen Moran, Lew Powell, George Memsic, "One-Round" Hogan, and several others.

The news that Frankie Conley and Harry Gilmore, jun., are having trouble out on the Pacific coast is not a surprise around Chicago, where Conley is known. Frankie always has been a hard young man to get along with, even his brother Joe failing utterly in the task of keeping Frankie satisfied. Conley never has been noted as a grateful kid, and is a financial grinder, so to speak, at least if the tales of former handlers are to be believed.

And speaking of managers, Johnny Coulon has a new one. Johnny is going to continue to "keep it in the family," having appointed his brother to the position. Many others were hoping they might be the lucky one, because Johnny looks like something of a mine for a hustling handler.

"It is a pleasure to tell you that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best cough medicine I have ever used," writes Mrs. Hugh Campbell, of Lavonia, Ga. "I have used it with all my children and the results have been highly satisfactory." For sale by all druggists.

HIBERNATION

Great Differences in this Somnolent State.

Not only does the hibernating sleep of animals differ greatly from the ordinary sleep of repose, but there are many variations of the degree of torpor into which they sink. Some seem to slumber normally, while in the case of others there is a suspended animation which it is almost impossible to distinguish from death.

In the popular mind winter is the only season in which animals hibernate, but this is an error. In dry countries many kinds of animals are able to survive the long season of drought only by hibernation, or, more properly speaking, by estivation, the latter being the term applied to this condition when it occurs in summer.

Even in cold countries many animals begin their winter sleep before winter comes, which shows that the condition is not induced by cold, nor by lack of food, for the great bat begins to sleep sometimes as early as the end of July, when its insect food is still very plentiful.

Submerged in water of a temperature slightly higher than his own, the hedgehog not only continues to live, but appears to suffer neither inconvenience nor harm. Enclosed in an air-tight receptacle, his atmosphere undergoes a change so slight that it cannot be imputed to breathing. As respiration diminishes the irritability of the muscles of the heart increases, and thus, without the stimulus of oxygen, although much more slowly, the heart continues to beat. In the absence of the fresh air drawn into the lungs in times of activity uncleansed and unrevigorated and venous blood passes on to fill the whole system of circulation. In hibernation the waste is very small. The fat accumulated during the plenty of summer and autumn supplies all expenditure until the coming of spring, when, earlier or later, the hibernating animal, having no capital in reserve, begins to suffer the pangs of hunger. In response to the demand, respiration very slowly increases. His oxidized blood flows more quickly, and his energy returns.

Then the bat flies forth once more from the hollow tree in the wood to find the warm dusk teaming with insect life, and the hedgehog comes, it may be from the cavity under the gnarled roots below, to find beetles, worms, and slugs once more among the spring grass.

The hiding place must be secret and free from intrusion for the hibernating animal cannot bear to be suddenly aroused. Even the little dormouse, which comes out at intervals to feed, does not survive too hasty an awakening. The heat of the hand gradually passing through the nest or the warmer temperature of a room is enough. Then he awakes refreshed, full of activity, and with a disposition speedily to become tame and make friends. But if you warm him suddenly back to life before he has gradually breathed the torpor out of his blood and established an equilibrium between his respiration and muscular irritability, his heart will beat at a tremendous rate and in a few minutes he will be dead.

Some animals hibernate in solitude, while others are very sociable in their winter arrangements, notably the skunks and raccoons. Bears are morose and solitary beasts and keep to themselves.

The woodchuck sleeps soundly enough to make even the Seven Sleepers appear like victims of insomnia, and he thus makes up for all the other creatures who are light sleepers. Tame woodchucks that have been stored in barrels in barn or cellar to pass the winter have been taken up and carried miles in the arms of their youthful masters without their nap being in the least disturbed.

In early winter a fat woodchuck may be placed near a fire for half an hour without its making the slightest apparent change in his condition. He is a disagreeable little beast, however, if rubbed and warmed until thoroughly awake during the hibernating season.

The temperature of the body in hibernation is reduced very quickly to the normal when the sleep is over. The loss in weight is from 30 to 40 per cent.

Reptiles, amphibians, and some fishes hibernate, as well as some insects. The land reptiles bury themselves below the frost-line and wait for spring, or crawl into the crevices between rocks, snakes sometimes passing the winter wrapped in a tangled mass composed of a number of their species. Frogs bury themselves in the mud at the bottom of ponds and if dug up and placed in water will swim away, though their movements are sluggish.

There are several varieties of butterflies that hibernate, and one of the strangest of Nature's problems is how it is possible for a creature so fragile and delicate as the gnat to endure for many weeks and even months, the cold and frost of winter. It will come out to dance in the sunshine when there is a bright day and return to its hiding-place when hard times come again.—"Harper's Weekly."

MEN ARE HELPLESS AS CHILDREN

The sturdiest chap in town usually loses his self-control, and is utterly unable to regard his condition with the common sense that characterizes his every-day actions.

For example: He comes home tired, eats a heavy dinner and sits down to read and smoke away a quiet evening.

Suddenly he notices a weight on his stomach; then sharp pains around his heart, and a feeling of suffocation. Thoughts of "heart disease" rush over him, and in his agony he fears the worst.

A couple of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets might have given him relief—might have saved him hours of suffering.

Carry a package of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets in your vest pocket or keep them in your room. Take one after each heavy meal, and ward off indigestion.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets relieve stomach troubles by aiding nature to supply those elements, the absence of which in the gastric juices, causes indigestion and dyspepsia. They tend to aid the stomach and digest all kinds of food and to quickly convert it into rich red blood.

We know what Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are and what they will do. We guarantee them to relieve indigestion and dyspepsia. If they fail, we will refund your money.

Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

BOYS FINED FOR PLAYING TRICKS

Eight Hallowe'en larkers were arraigned in the police court this morning on a charge of being disorderly and doing damage to property. They pleaded not guilty, but were convicted on the evidence of Det. Newhall and two East City residents, and were fined $2 each. They broke a window at a residence at 623 Concession street, and a window in a new house in that vicinity wa salso broken, and the deed is credited to them, although they denied doing it.

As the last witness concluded his evidence, a voice from the gray heads in the rear of the crowd in the court room, said: "Dismiss them, Mr. Dumble." The crowd was called to order, but His Worship evidently did not accept the advice, as he imposed the fine, at the same time remarking: "Next time, try breaking your father's windows first and see how you get along." The boys admitted that when the glass broke a man jumped out of a thicket at them and they ran. "It was not a case of 'the wicked ran when no man pursued them?'" queried the Magistrate.

Det. Newhall gave evidence to the effect that a message was received at the station on that night, calling for officers to go over where the trouble was. He and P. C. Meagher drove over and came upon the little gang assembled. Meagher jumped out of the buggy and caught one of them, and some of the others called, "Don't give our names away."

"$2.00 each, to be paid forthwith," said his Worship. Try one of the windows of your own house first next time."

The two men, the windows of whose houses were broken were allowed 50c. out of the fines for the damages they sustained.

A COMPLIMENT SPOILED

The curtain had fallen on the performance of the amateur theatrical company, and compliments, wise and otherwise, were flying freely. The well-meaning young man approached his hostess.

"You played the heroine's part magnificently, Mrs. Portleigh," he said gushingly as he bowed before her.

"You're too kind, Mr. Rasleigh," replied the good lady, who would never see 40 again. "But I'm afraid you're only flattering. A young and pretty woman should really have taken the part."

Then the zealous guest overdid it.

"Ah, madam," he sighed, "with your skill you proved quite the contrary."—Answers.

RICHARD HALL & SON. LIMITED

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

ONE of my letter friends has been kind enough to send me a description of some of the remedies he has found successful for insomnia.

Knowing that there are always many sad people to whom, what should be hours of sweet unbroken rest, are hours of tortured tossing, I take pleasure in passing on his suggestion.

If they help but one person to a few hours more sleep, I am sure that everyone who has ever suffered the agony of insomnia will think this space well utilized.

"During a time of trouble and resulting sleeplessness," he writes, "I discovered the efficiency of some little remedies. I noticed that approaching sleep was at that time most often disturbed by common noises which had hardly entered my consciousness when the mind was in its normal state. When sleep came long after midnight, it was short, because, soon disturbed by the noise of the awakening city, which, combined with the daylight, made it impossible to find the much needed rest.

"The discover of these causes suggested to me the following remedies: Put cotton in my ears—as much of it as possible—and blindfold myself. Thus I reduced the disturbing causes to a minimum and the effect was most beneficial and helped the mind a good deal in overcoming the initial cause of the sleeplessness.

"The blindfolder should be a good heat conductor (linen or cotton, not wool)to prevent accumulation of heat underneath. It should cover the eyes from the eyebrows to the cheek bones, leaving the forehead free.

"I find these little helps also useful if I need a short rest during the day. In the latter case I am producing artificially the silence and darkness of the night, and in my case, with the best results.

"Of course, I do not allow myself to form a habit of the use of these helps in order not to make my rest entirely dependent upon them."

May I add to these a mention of the remedies which I have heard of elsewhere or personally found effective?

I think I may have mentioned some of them before, but such is my sympathy for any one suffering with insomnia, that I cannot resist an opportunity to give all possible remedies the widest publicity.

Anyone who has ever tried in vain to get to sleep knows how preternaturally alive and active the brain becomes with each moment of wakefulness. While the mind is in this state you might as well hunt deer in front of the city hall as stalk sleep.

So if you possibly can, get up and read something that will take the mind off itself and pacify it. Read something fairly absorbing but not too exciting, and especially not thought stimulating. A pleasant, chatty, interesting novel is best. Myself, I often have a session with my old friend, "Little Women," or perhaps try a few chapters of Cranford.

Read until you feel drowsy and want to sleep, then read awhile longer, and I am pretty sure that shortly after you snap out the lights and skip into bed, you will have the pleasant surprise of waking up and finding that it is morning.

This is especially efficacious when the cause of the sleeplessness is mental.

Drawing the blood away from the head in some way is a great cure for sleeplessness. Put cold clothes on your head and something hot to your feet. Bathe your face and forehead in alcohol. Eat something, thus drawing the blood from the head to the stomach. Do a few vigorous exercises that will send the blood tingling all over the system.

And now one "don't." If you are anything like me, don't try counting sheep or repeating poetry. Of course, I can only speak for myself, but my own experience has been that nothing stirs my mind to such angry activity as these much "touted" devices.

Heres' fervently hoping that if you have need of help something my letter friend or I have said may help you.

But here's more fervently hoping that you wont' care for this talk at all because you have no need of it.

ARMOURY FOR LINDSAY

(Lindsay Post)

The Post was informed by a gentleman, who is in a position to speak with a degree of certainty, that Lindsay would have a new armoury before November, 1912. He stated that after the new Parliament had assembled an amount would be placed in the estimates, sufficient for the erection of a first-class armoury, and that no time would be lost in calling for tenders.

Of course the new armoury will not be as large as those found in centres which boast of local regiments, but the Post was informed that it would be modern in every detail and in keeping with Lindsay's position as a military centre.

HIS OWN MEDICINE

The following clipping from the Hamilton Times, shows the opinion of a Justice of the Peace in that city as regards brutality:

"The only way to stop brutality of this sort is to give prisoners some of their own medicine, said Magistrate Jelfs this morning, in sentencing William Beckingham, Caroline street, north, for a brutal assault on his wife yesterday. His Worship sent Beckingham to jail, and ordered that at the end of a fortnight the prisoner receive ten lashes.

CASCARETS INSURE INSIDE CLEANLINESS

The Millions of Cascaret Users Never Have Headache, Constipation, Biliousness or Sick Stomach

It is more necessary that you keep your Bowels, Liver and Stomach clean, pure and fresh than it is to keep the sewers and drainage of a large city free from obstruction.

Are you keeping clean inside with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases ;take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the syste mthe decomposed waste matter and poison in the intestines and bowels.

No odds how badly and upset you feel, a Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your entire family feeling good for months. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

The young couple journeyed to Lindsay, Ont., and there,i n the Methodist manse, were united in wedlock, by Rev. John A. McCamus. The bride was unattended. OBITUARY

ALEXANDER CLEMENT.

A very sad death occurred on Saturday evening last, when Alexander Clement of 188 Perry street, passed away at the early age of 30 years.

The deceased was the son of Mr. Ambrose Clement, and was born in Cannifton, Ont., eventually coming to reside in Peterborough. Some two and a half years ago he married, and is survived by a sorrowing wife, Annie. His illness, though only extending over a period of about three weeks, was a painful one, and his end, coming so suddenly, was a severe blow to his relatives, by whom he was greatly beloved. Mr. Clement was a valued employee of the Matthews Co.

In addition to his wife and his parents, his demise is lamented by three brothers and two sisters.

The remains were conveyed by the 1.40 train this afternoon, to Belleville, for interment at Cannifton tomorrow.

POST CARD COLUMN

VOTE FOR HALL.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Upon invitation, I attended the meeting of Mr. R. B. Hall on Saturday evening, to hear that gentleman deliver an address upon the "Working Man's Compensation Act," and I am glad that I did. I have always felt that the Conservative party never did pass any legislation that was really effective for the mechanic, and Mr. Hall's explanation of what was required and could be obtained, showed me that Mr. Hall understood what he was talking about, and I am going to take him at his word, and give him a chance to do what he says he will, no matter upon which side of the House, if elected, he may have a seat. My particular object in writing you at this time is to ask my fellow working men to do likewise, and see if we cannot have some one that we can depend upon to further advance legislation on behalf of the working man and his family. Let the working men join hands in this election, and give Allan Studholme, the Labour candidate of West Hamilton some assistance.

Yours truly,
"Labour."

Failed To Do Anything For Workingman

her family, had little or no chance of succeeding in holding a verdict from a rich corporation. The case might go through five courts, and her costs would reach $1500 before she could make the company pay. The law suit might run from two to three years, and in the meantime she would be without means to provide for herself and her dependent family.

For the last seven years, the workman had not received any legislation toward assisting him in obtaining his rights, chiefly because the Ontario government was corporation ridden and not friendly to the unions. Only a couple of weeks ago, non-union labour was used extensively by the Ontario government upon some of the public buildings in Toronto, and the protests by the Trades and Labour Councils were ignored.

The only solution seemed to be an act along the lines of the English Compensation Act or an arbitration as is provided in the case of fire insurance. If you suffer by fire, you appoint an arbitrator; the company appoint one and if the two arbitrators appointed cannot agree upon the third then the county judge must be appointed. From their award, there should be no appeal, and this would settle the whole matter inside of a month.

There were apparently a large number of mechanics present, from the hearty endorsation they gave to this suggestion.

Technical Night Schools.

Mr. Gordon vigorously attacked the government for not establishing night schools in Peterborough. Last year Sir James Whitney's government gave $488,000, or nearly half a million of the peoples' money, to help educate the rich men's sons at Toronto University. What had been done for us who have had to make our own way through life? Of that money, Peterborough got not one dollar. We have a large number of well heated school buildings, never used at night. Why not, in this industrial centre, send down two or three teachers each night in the week, to teach our young mechanics, electrical engineering, drafting, and all the studies taken up in the Collegiate?

These boys cannot afford to go to the colleges, but they are ambitious to become strong enough to reach the top notch in their respective trades.

Mr. Gordon said that if night schools would teach all the subjects required, the earning power of the workman would be doubled, by his efficiency, and his employer would be the gainer also.

His theory, was to give the boys a chance. We have paid millions for prisons, asylums and hospitals, but the question of technical schools was shamefully neglected.

Mr. Hall had promised to actively insist upon Peterborough being given free night schools for the teaching of workmen, and to have the Workmen's Compensation Act changed to give the workman equity and justice. Mr. Gordon believed Mr. Hall could, and would do, this, and it was high time now to do it. The public conscience would no longer stand the heartless sacrificing of the lives of workmen, because of the soulless corporations grasping hold of the almighty dollar. Mr. Gordon said he would support the man, regardless of politics, who would fight this workmen's cause to the end. It was broader and wider than politics and parties. It was founded upon the broad principles of humanity. It was a long call back to the days of Cain, when he asked: "Am I my brother's keeper?" and there our duty to our fellow men was clearly indicated, and in this twentieth century we had a right to hope for some more consideration of human life and limb than in the days of Cain.

Mr. Gordon concluded by asking the workmen to discuss the question among themselves, to take it up in their unions and to conclude as to what they required to remedy the defects. When this was done, they could use their influence in public opinion to such an extent as to elect the man who would obtain for them their just rights, and protect their wives and children from penniless helplessness in an indifferent world.

Mr. Stratton Speaks.

Mr. Stratton said that he was glad to see such a large gathering of the workingmen present to hear a matter discussed that intimately concerned them and their families. They had had two examples in the court the past week of the necessity of an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act, or of some measure that would insure some easy and effective means of giving the working man and his family justice and fair play in the case of accident, to which workmen, in factories, were every day liable. The case of Mr. Darke was one in which some one was to blame—some one responsible, and there should be some law to cover such cases—to fix the responsibility in some easy way. In the case of the young woman whose hand was maimed for life, the Judge, in his treatment of the case, plainly showed that there should be some law that would give such a sufferer from accident justice and fair compensation. Of course there were some workers who could not drive a nail without smashing a thumb; there were some nervous persons whom it was not safe to have working among dangerous machinery; but these were exceptions, and it should be the duty of foremen to discriminate in these matters, and not keep a workman in a place of danger, who was liable, on account of his natural make-up, to be the victim of accident. The Ontario Government had not tended to help things in their legislation. They rather seemed to succeed in making loopholes through which corporation lawyers could escape responsibility for their clients. Mrs. Darke was awarded $1,800—perhaps; for after the case passes through three or four courts of appeal, and lawyers' fees are deducted, how much would be left? There was an accident, or, prehaps, half a dozen of them, in Peterborough, every week—perhaps a finger, or a hand, or foot crushed; and while the breadwinner was idle the wages ceased, and the table was more scantily supplied, or the family had to eat up the savings, if there were any. This condition of things showed the necessity of something being done. Prevention was better than cure, and if Mr. Hall was elected he (Mr. Stratton) was seen that he would be able to urge and force, if necessary, some legislative action that would, especially in these respects, be of benefit to the workingman.

The General Elections.

The time was short, and as intimated, the elections were to be held on December 11th. There was enough to keep them busy; there were the municipal elections to be thought of; there was the Christmas shopping and the holiday trade, to keep us busy; there was the first session of a new parliament at Ottawa to engage public attention, and on top of all these there was the general election for the province. But they must not let their attention be distracted from the provincial issues. The rights and welfare of the people were intimately concerned in them, and as the time was short, it behooved every worker in Mr. Hall's interests, and every elector who felt that Mr. Hall could be of service to the riding to get to work, and keep at work.

The date of registration would, no doubt, be announced in a day or two. Every man who registered tor the Dominion election would have to register again to entitle him to vote at the provincial election.

They had, no doubt, observed that during the past week Mr. MacKay, the Liberal leader, had resigned and that Mr. N. W. Rowell had been appointed Liberal leader in his stead. Mr. Rowell was a live and able man, and would, no doubt, fill the position with energy and credit to both himself and the Province. It was expected that early in the week Mr. Rowell would make an announcement of his platform.

The meeting closed with the usual cheers.

REV. MR. ROLLINS ON BI-LINGUAL SCHOOLS AND NE TEMERE DECREE

Pastor of St. Andrew's Preached a Splendid Sermon to the Orangemen of Peterborough and District Last Evening.

LARGE ATTENDANCE

A large representation of the Orange Order attended St. Andrew's church last evening, where a service was held, commemorative of the notable fifth of November, 1605, when King James 1st and his parliament were delivered from a conspiracy, which was to have developed at the sitting of the parliament, and which was organized by a handful of misguided men, namely, the Gunpowder Treason.

The members, numbering some 130, and marshalled by Mr. H. Dodds, District Director of Ceremonies, assembled at the Orange Hall and marched in procession to the church in full regalia. Occupying the major portion of the centre pews, the men were assiduous in the singing of the hymns, and joined in the prayers of the pastor. Miss Olive Howell sang a solo with her usual charm.

The Rev. Jas. Rollins delivered an inspiring address, to which the congregation listened intently. During the course of his remarks, he said: "I need scarcely tell you that I deplore national strife or creed hatred. We have a great task committed to us in this great land; we have the privilege and responsibility of laying the foundations of a nation. We have great material resources and they are bringing to our shores, people of all kingdoms, all languages and all races. It is our business to create a national sentiment, in which all shall have a share, and to build up national institutious which shall benefit and which shall be the pride and boast of all. Our land is far flung. No man knows the wonderful leavening influence of a common language. The task of unifying sentiment, and making it control the national mind is made most difficult by perpetuating the French language as well as the English language. In the Union Act of 1840, a clause was inserted, restricting the use of French language in the legislature. The use of the Public school system to this end in a province like Ontario is nothing short of a crime against the mother country. It is not a political question. It is a much broader question. It is a question that bears upon the unification of the people of this country. Many English-speaking Roman Catholics are strongly opposed to bilingual schools. We must not forget that the most trenchant words that have been written on the subject have come from the pen of a Roman Catholic Bishop, and we should see that this question should never become one of Protestant vs. Catholic.

The issue of such a decree as the Ne Temere is significant that the church, by which it was issued, is in the last stage of infatuation. That decree is against every noble sentiment of the human mind. It is against the rights of humanity. There is no permanent future in this land or in any other land on this earth for a church, however ancient its name; there is no permanent future in any land for an organization that has not lived to serve.

The speaker here related the parable of the ten talents, after which he went on to say:

"This is a solemn lesson to which all the centuries of human history have given tremendous answers and it suggests what God will do to any church or any individual who does not live to serve. 'Cast him into outer darkness ;there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.' This is a lesson for the pulpit and the pew. This is a lesson for Catholic and Protestant. This is a lesson for the Orange and the Green.'

THE COST OF OUR PROGRESS

The Monetary Times says: "We take pride in the wealth of our natural resources, our general development, the enterprise of our people, and the extent of their prosperity. We boast of our time-saving methods, rapidity of action and of our American hustle. We observe John Bull plodding along slowly, apparently doing business in double the time it takes us to do it. We give a sly wink, meanwhile sending out sensational stories of how we build towns in a week, bridges in a month, large buildings in fifteen weeks; how we move structures a mile or so without disturbing business and how we lay rails for the locomotive at a wonderful speed. In short, we are speeders and we are proud to be first-class exponents of that North America art, hustle. What price do we pay for the boast? Here at a glance is a section of the bill of cost:

	Persons.
In 4 years, killed by
Steam railways	2,049
Electric railways	301
Industrial accidents	5,296
Fires	1,072
		8,718
Injured by
Steam railways	7,344
Electric railways	8,296
Industrial accidents	10,444
Fires (estimated)	1,908

In the past four years there have been killed and injured in Canada 45,428 persons on our railways, by industrial accidents and by fires. This is at the rate of 11,357 per annum. In other words, every day during that period 6 persons have been killed and 19 injured, about one killed or injured every hour of the twenty-four. This appalling record, too, applies to only the few causes mentioned. If statistics could be obtained of all fatalities and injuries in the Dominion, the bill of cost would have a still more serious appearance.

Many, if not the majority, of these accidents, can be traced to carelessness, thoughtlessness or selfishness. The desire to achieve big results in the shortest possible time at the expense of efficiency is a national trait which the country may well take immediate steps to obliterate. The evil of dollar and dividend hunting, regardless of destruction in its wake, is a menace to Canada's progress and credit. The basis of civilization is the proper respect for life and property. We in this country have by no means sufficient regard for either The fact is noted by the capitalist and investor abroad and we suffer thereby and will do so to a greater extent, if early improvement is not made.

The national spirit of carelessness is vividly portrayed in the fire waste. In the past 32 months Canadian property has been burned to the value of $57,880,678. This year's losses to date have been at the rate of $44 a minute. In addition, lives lost in four years have numbered 1,072.

Railway accidents account for great loss of life. "Making up lost time" is responsible for many. But the stage, apparently, has not been reached where we would prefer to arrive at our destination two hours late and alive, rather than on time and dead. Collisions, derailments and parting of trains were responsible in four years for 804 killed and injured. In three years 190 persons were killed and 201 injured at high-way crossings. During the past 23 years, 7,263 persons have been killed and 25,668 injured on Canada's steam railways.

Analising the statistics of industrial accidents in the latest published report, under the heading of mining, it is found that explosions caused over 35 per cent. of the deaths and over 20 per cent. of the injuries. Falls accounted for nearly all the deaths and over 66 per cent. of the injuries in the building trades. Among unskilled labourers, 21 men were killed by being run over by vehicles, and 17 by falling material, and 53 were injured in a similar way. An alarming increase has occurred in the number of fatalities among workpeople engaged in the handling of explosives. This summer, too, there were 63 drownings in the Lachine Canal. The chief danger, says a civic official noting the fact, is in the canal with its deep drop from the banks, making rescue difficult, and it seems advisable to have a railing along those parts of the canal where people most congregate, so that they will not be so liable to tumble into the water." Sixty-three drownings, before a rail was suggested! Such records can be found in any part of the country.

The writer heard an engineer admit that a certain structure, which had been criticized, "might fall in three years' time," with possibly serious loss of life. Railroad contractors were laying steel recently at a record-breaking pace, while a big crack in the concrete abutment of a bridge was allowed to wait, despite the fact that work trains used the bridge daily. Carelessness with live wires, reckless driving of automobiles—in a thousand ways we violate the first principles of a civilized community.

The reasons for the existence of such conditions are due largely to individual, corporate and legislative carelessness. We need better laws for the protection of life and property and the strict enforcement of such laws. If the Imperial Board of Trade, for instance, had to deal with the question of our railroad fatalities as they do in Great Britain, their action for reform would be drastic enough to startle us in no slight degree. We can therefore aford to emulate John Bull in his thoroughness of work and his regard for life. Ultimately this results are better, safer and more durable than ours. American hustle takes the vitality out of the nation and in more senses than one.

PREPARATIONS FOR TAG DAY

The public are reminded that Saturday, Nov. 11 is the date of the Children's Aid Society "Tag Day" campaign. The plans for the day are practically completed and there will be a big and well organised squad of canvassers at work during the morning, afternoon and early part of the evening on Saturday. The city will be thoroughly covered under the direction of district supervisors and no one will be minus an opportunity to contribute to this most excellent work. Last year $1200 was raised on Tag Day and it is thought that this amount will be beaten on Saturday. It depends upon the generosity of the public.

Assault Case In County Court

The assault case of Albert Bishop vs. Lindsay, was aired in the County Court before Magistrate Edmison this morning. Mr. W. H. Moore appeared for the defendant, and Crown Attorney R. E. Wood for the plaintiff.

The case was dismissed, the costs being paid by the plaintiff. Some evidence was taken and was to the effect that the Bishop and Lindsay families were living in a little shanty, scarcely large enough for one family, it only consisting of two rooms, and one family had to pass through the other family's quarters to get out. It is said that some jealousy arose in the Bishop family, and the husband, it is alleged, abused his wife so that she appealed to Mr. Lindsay for aid.

The latter, it is claimed, had a tussle with her husband over the matter, with the result that the charge was laid and the result is already stated.

THE TEA PENALTY

A Strong Man's Experience

Writing from a busy railroad town the wife of an employe of one of the great roads, says:

"My husband is a railroad man who has been so much benefitted by the use of Postum that he wishes me to express his thanks to you for the good it has done him. His waking hours are taken up with this work, and he has no time to write himself.

"He has been a great tea drinker all his life and has always liked it strong.

"Tea has, of late years, acted on him like morphine does upon most people. At first it soothed him, but only for an hour or so, then it began to affect his nerves, to such an extent that he could not sleep at night, and he would go to his work in the morning wretched and miserable from the loss of rest. This condition grew constantly worse, until a friends persuaded him to quit tea and use Postum.

"At first he used Postum only for breakfast, but as he liked the taste of it and it somehow seemed to do him good, he added it to his evening meal. Then, as he grew better, he began to drink it for his noon meal, and now he will drink nothing else at table.

"His condition is so wonderfully improved that he could not be hired to give up Postum and go back to tea. His nerves have become steady and reliable once more, and his sleep is easy, natural and refreshing.

"He owes all this to Postum for he has taken no medicine and made no other change in his diet.

"His brother who was very nervous from coffee drinking, was persuaded by us to give up the coffee and use Postum and he also has recovered his health and strength." Names given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of humar interest.

OBITUARY

MRS. ISABELLA NESBITT.

In the death of Mrs. Isabella Nesbitt, who passed away yesterday afternoon, at 501 Smith street, Peterborough lost one of its oldest and most well known citizens. Mrs. Nesbitt has been ailing for some six months and on Thursday morning she was seized with a paralytic stroke from which she never rallied.

The deceased, who had reached the advanced age of 81, was born in Cavan. Later on in life she went to reside in Bailieboro, where she was united in marriage to Mr. Richard Nesbitt, who died many years ago. On the death of her husband she came to live with her brother, Mr. Richard H. Nesbitt, of 501 Smih st., city, where she passed the remainder Richard H. Nesbitt, of 501 Smith St., John's church, and her naturally gentle disposition rendered her generally beloved.

In addition to the brother above mentioned, Mrs. Nesbitt is survived by a second brother in the person of Mr. John James Nesbitt of Forbisher, Sask. There are no children to lament the demise.

The funeral will take place tomorrow. Service at the house at 11 o'clock, after which the funeral cortege will proceed to the 4th line cemetery, Cavan, for interment.

Lustrous Hair

Makes Women Fascinating and Attractive

Parisian Sage is not a nostrum, it is the scientific preparation of one of the world's greatest dermatologists.

It will grow hair. It will cure dandruff. It will stop falling hair. It will make the scalp clean and white and free it from any disease.

Parisian Sage is the most marvelous and efficient hair dressing known. It will turn harsh, lustreless and uncontrollable hair into soft, lustrous and fascinating hair in a few days. It is the favourite hair dressing of thousands of women who realize that no one can be handsome without beautiful hair. Large bottle, 50 cents at Wm. Madill's, on money back plan, who guarantees it.

TIT-BITS

WORLD'S LONGEST CHIMNEY

Wales has probably the longest chimney in the world. It is two miles high, and has a brook running through it. The chimney is connected with the copper works at Carnavon, near Abernavon. This is how it came to be built. About sixty years ago the copper smoke from these works was the plague of the neighbouring countryside. It settled upon and destroyed the grass for twenty miles round, while the sulphur and arsenic in the fumes affected the hoofs of cattle, causing gangrene. The company tried all sorts of devices to remedy the troubles, but in vain.

Finally, Mr. Robert Brenton, who was later engineer of the Sind Railway in Idia, solved the problem. The copper works are at the foot of a high, steep mountain. Mr. Brenton constructed a flue or chimney running continuously from the base to about 100 ft. above the summit, following the natural slope of the ground. The brick which lined it, and of which it was largely constructed, was burned close by. A small spring, rushing out near the mountain top, was turned into the chimney, and allowed to flow through almost its entire length, to condense the smoke. Once a year it is swept out, and about a ton of precipitated copper obtained. Its top can be seen for between forty and fifty miles.—Tid Bits.

SHE BURNS UGLY BUILDINGS

Georgette Viellard has a curious name for one who is not an old man, but a young girl. And she is determined to reform the architecture of Chartres. For the third time she has been arrested for arson, and her simple defence is that she cannot resist the temptation of setting fire to an ugly building. The temperance of Georgette in the consumption of matches is a real compliment to the beauty of Chartres.—London Chronicle.

TELEGRAPH POLES THA TAKE ROOT

Telegraph poles that live and grow are a curiosity of African engineering in Uganda, a species of wild fig, locally known as the bark-cloth tree, is used for poles, and ten years or more ago it was noticed that they took root and began to send out leaves and branches soon after being planted.

Since then a line of more than 500 miles of these growing poles has been developed. It is troublesome to maintain, as the leaves cause frequent leakage by contacts, and poles are constantly dying and being eaten by termites. The first cost, however, is only 8 to 16 cents per pole, while an iron pole costs $3 to $7 or $8.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

GOOD MONEY AFTER BAD

It is a curious fact that many men, level headed enough about other things, seem to lose their wits entirely when they become involved in lawsuits. In a case recently concluded in the German courts a Berlin merchant paid out over $900 to recover the value of a five-cent postage stamp. He had written a letter asking for an address and enclosing postage for reply. Failing to get an answer, he sued for the stamp.

The famous Missouri watermelon case was just as trifling and even more disastrous. The seed was planted on one farm, but the vine crept through a crack in the rail fence and the melon grew on the other side. Both farmers claimed it, and instead of perceiving the humour of the situation they went to law. To add to the puzzling features of the question of ownership there was the further complication in that the fence stood on a county line, whereupon a question of the jurisdiction of the courts came up. The farmers bankrupted themselves without obtaining a decision as to the ownership.

BELL MOVES A PILLAR

The church of St. Nicaise, in the city of Rheims, is surrounded with pillars. When a certain bel in the tower is rung the top of one pillar always aways to the extent of seven inches on each side, although the base is immovable, and the stones are so firmly cemented as to seem like a solid piece of masonry. Notwithstanding that each of the four bells is about the same distance from the trembling pillar, none of the others has the slightest effect on it.—Argonaut.

TRICK OR THE FLORIST'S TRADE

A Brooklyn florist was showing a friend around his greenhouse. The friend noticed that there were two hives of bees in the house and asked the florist why he kept bees.

"In the winter I grow cucumbers and the glass here," answered the florist. "The bees circulate around among the cucumber blossoms and carry the pollen from one blossom to another, fertilising the blossoms, so that I get a much larger crop than otherwise. You see there's no breeze in here to scatter the pollen. It's a trick all farmers know."

FAMOUS WOMEN'S NAMES

A census is being taken up in literary clubs here and abroad of the Christian names of women who have attained fame in art, science, history and government. The results so far obtained show a tie for first honours among Marys, Elisabeths and Anns. The next favourite name of illustrious women is Margaret, and then come Jane, Catherine, Frances, Sarah, Harriet, Charlotte, Caroline, Lucy, Matilda, Emily and Susan. The Mauds, Gwandolyns, Ediths, Hazels and Roses are not famous enough to get in the honourable mention class so far. As the census has not yet been completed, there still may be hope for some of the latter.

EAT PRUNES AND SAVE MONEY

If the cost of living is too high, if all the rest of the crops have failed, bear in mind that the prune crop this year is 140,000,000 pounds, against 80,000,000 pounds last year. Let everybody eat prunes. If meat is too high, try fish. If potatoes are scarce, eat turnips. If everything else fails, remember the wonderful prune crop and give thanks for the same.

TO QUICKLY GAIN A NEW COMPLEXION

(American Family Journal)

The quickest way to get rid of a bad complexion is by the use of ordinary mercolised wax, procurable at any drug store. Just spread the wax over your face a night in the same manner you would use cold cream, and the beautifying work begins at once. Next morning when you wash this off, tiny particles of the old, worn-out skin are taken off, and so on until soon you have entirely discarded the faded, sallow, blotchy or muddy complexion.

The fresh, bright, healthy-hued skin underneath furnishes your new complexion. No process has yet been discovered that will give a woman such a rarely beautiful and youthful skin. Marks of age, weather, worry and disease which mar the skin, of course disappear with the skin itself.

TO QUICKLY CHASE AWAY WRINKLES.

(From Fashion Review)

The surest and quickest way to obliterate wrinkles of every description, from the finest lines to the deepest furrows, is by means of the saxolite formula, about which we've heard so much of late. Bathing the face and neck in the lotion at once tightens and tones up the skin, affecting every wrinkle, as well as creased or saggy tissue about the cheeks, neck or chin. Any druggist can supply pure powdered saxolite, which is most effective. Dissolve an ounce of this in a half pint of witch hasel, and you have as perfect a solution as any expert can make.

CARLING IS DEAD

Well Known Canadian Passes Away at London at the Age of Eighty-three Years

A CONFEDERATION FATHER

London, Ont., Nov. 7.—Senator Sir John Carling, former Postmaster-General and Minister of Agriculture, died of pneumonia at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at his residence. He was in his 84th year. He had been ill for some time last spring, but during the summer rallied, though at all times weak because of his age. Early Friday morning pneumonia developed and from the first there was no hope.

His children, including Fred and Mrs. Nicholson of Ottawa, were present when the end came.

One of Canada's grand old men has passed away. Hon. Sir John Carling, K.C.M.G., while not exactly one of the fathers of Confederation, was nevertheless an active participant in the political vicissitudes of those uncertain days in the history of Canada.

Sir John was the youngest son of the late Thomas Carling, a native of Yorkshire, England, who came to Canada in 1818 and settled in Middlesex, Ontario. Born in the Township of London, Middlesex County, on Jan. 23, 1828, he was educated at the local schools and joined his father in business as a brewer. For many years he has been president of the Carling Brewing & Malting Co., which controls a large share of the Canadian trade.

He was elected to public office for the first time in 1850 as school trustee, and continued as a member of the Board of Education for four years. He became member of the Town Council in 1854 and afterwards served as an alderman when the town was incorporated as a city.

In December, 1857, he was first elected to Parliament—the old Parliament of Canada—and continued as a representative in that House until Confederation. In 1862 he was appointed Receiver-General in the Macdonald-Cartier Government of old Canada, and was returned by acclamation on accepting office. He continued in Parliament after the defeat of that administration on a general appeal to the country, the late William McBride being his opponent. At Confederation dual representation being then in vogue, he accepted office as Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works in the first Ontario Government, holding at the same time his seat in the Commons. In the contest of that year he was opposed by the late James Durand for the local Legislature, and the late James Peacock for the Commons. He continued in office in the local Legislature after the election of 1871, in which the late Frank Cornish was his opponent, still holding his seat at Ottawa. He resigned with the Government, however, in the fall of that year.

In 1888 he entered Sir John A. Macdonald's Government as Postmaster General and became Minister of Agriculture in 1885, an office he continued to fill under Sir John Abbott, but ceased to hold under Sir John Thompson. He was called to the Senate in 1891, but resigned the following year to become a candidate for the House of Commons.

He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1889, and called to the Senate for the second time in 1896.

Made Good His Boast.

Chicago, Nov. 7.—Charles Schultz, a baker, made good a boast Sunday night that he would not be afraid to "tackle an armed robber," and yesterday lies fatally wounded. Schultz had barely spoken the words when two armed highwaymen walked into a Wentworth avenue saloon, where Schultz was. He sprang upon one of the thugs and was shot twice. His wife next door heard the shots, and running to the place was knocked down by one of the escaping thieves.

Leaky Gas Jet Causes Fatal Fire.

Elmira, N.Y., Nov. 7—Walter Tompkins, a prominent fruit grower, his wife and 14-year-old son, perished in the flames which destroyed his home at Addison, N.Y., Sunday night. A railway engineer saw the flames and shrieked a fire alarm with the locomotive whistle. The blaze is thought to have started from a leaky gas jet.

Detective Shot Two Men.

Evansville, Ind., Nov. 7.—Wm. J. Walter, aged 40, of Paducah, Ky., was shot and killed and Robert Finley, aged 41 his companion, was probably fatally wounded Sunday evening in a quarrel with Detective William Wilson. Wilson is locked up.

C.N.R. Montreal Terminals.

Montreal, Nov. 7.—Interest was lent to recent reports to the effect that the Canadian Northern terminals would be located in the neighborhood of Dorchester and Lagauchetiere streets, by the appearance upon the scene yesterday morning of a party of engineers with their instruments who surveyed lines extending down Cathcart and Ste. Monique streets, and along Dorchester and Lagauchetiere streets, then back to Mansfield and Ste. Monique.

It will be seen that these operations include the block already connected with the company.

Cranberry Corner Feared.

Chicago, Nov. 7.—The possibility of a corner in the cranberry market was established by District Attorney Wilkerson after an investigation. Cranberries this week reached $10.50 a barrel, an increase of almost $5 from last year. The District Attorney was informed that in Wisconsin, New Jersey and Massachusetts, where almost all of the commercial cranberries are grown, there were organizations which belong to a central organization in New York. Those organizations could easily control the price, he was told.

Sifton In the Senate.

Ottawa, Nov. 7.—The name of Hon. Clifford Sifton is mentioned in connection with the vacancy created in the Senate by the death of Sir John Carling.

Killed by Lamp Explosion.

Kingston, Nov. 7.—Francis Showman, Gretna, died in the general hospital from injuries received in a lamp explosion. He was 78 years of age.

BY ACCLAMATION.

Hon. Mr. White Secures His Election in Leeds.

Brockville, Nov. 7.—The expected happened at Delta yesterday, when a the bye-election nomination for Leeds Hon. W. T. White, the Dominion Minister of Finance, was returned by acclamation.

The hinted opposition from the Liberal ranks did not materialise, the Leeds Reform Association, to which was left the choice of a candidate deciding that it would be unwise to fight Mr. White.

The occasion was marked by a speech of over an hour by the new M.P., who gracefully acknowledge the honor conferred upon him and his appreciation of being returned unopposed. Mr. White covered much the same ground as in his addresses of the past week at Lansdowne and Gananoque, and received a most attentive hearing from the audience of nearly 300 present. George Taylor Rev. S. J. Robins, John Webster M.P., and Rev. Frank Chisholm spoke briefly.

The last mentioned, a former Liberal candidate for Leeds, and still a staunch member of that party, spoke at the invitation of the chairman John R. Dargavel, M.P.P. The veteran Methodist preacher, speaking for the Liberals, desired that it should be made plain that Mr. White was not opposed for lack of a candidate but rather as a matter of courtesy to a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. White came to Brockville last evening and left shortly afterwards for Ottawa.

The Liberals of Brockville riding have called a convention for the 13th inst., to select a candidate for the provincial elections.

SLAYER UNKNOWN.

Coroner's Jury In Dick Murder Fails to Get Clue.

Toronto, Nov. 7.—The inquest into the death of J. Walter Dick has been brought to a close and a verdict of death on Oct. 7, as the result of being struck by a man unknown to the jury, at the corner of Toronto and King streets.

Every clue has been followed, but without result. Several times the Toronto police have felt sure of their man, but have not had sufficient evidence on which to convict.

The provincial constabulary department, a fortnight ago, was instructed to investigate. Every man under Chief Rogers was instructed regarding the whole affair and some were specially commissioned to follow up every possible clue, whether it at first sight appeared to be well grounded or not. This merely meant that the provincial police interviewed the same people that the Toronto detectives had done. They could go no farther, and the result is that the case stands with no arrest having been made.

It is quite possible that the two Toronto detectives working on the case will effect an arrest within a short time. They have not given up hope, and are still pinning hopes on remarks made by friends of deceased, and also by those who were near the scene of trouble. This hearsay is possibly poor stuff on which to work, yet forms a picture of a fairly young man whom these sleuths have been fixing their eyes on for some time.

On the other hand, however, the provincial detectives believe that there is absolutely no ground on which to work.

Mail Robbery.

Greensboro, N.C., Nov. 7.—That a U. S. mail pouch routed from Raleigh to New York and containing $20,000 disappeared two weeks ago in a manner similar to a recently reported $20,000 theft of a pouch at Lynchburg, Va., become known here yesterday. Beyond admitting the loss of the package, officials refuse to discuss the matter.

Newspaper Office Burned.

Halifax, Nov. 7.—Fire here at eight o'clock yesterday morning destroyed the building of The Standard Printing Co., Ltd., from which office The Evening News, The Standard, and Guysboro Times is published. The building was completely gutted, and the splendidly equipped plant was badly damaged by water.

NO MORE DISTRESS FROM THE STOMACH

No Dyspepsia, Gas, Heartburn or Indigestion Five Minutes Later

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a distressed, out-of-order stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin, and take a little just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach. Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it prevents fermentation and takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is at your drug store, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin contain more than sufficient to cure any case of Dyspepsia Indigestion or any other Stomach trouble.

PEKIN IS NOT TAKEN

Rumour Believed Now to Have Been Merely a Ruse on the Part of the Revolutionary Forces

MORE CITIES GO OVER

Shanghai, Nov. 7.—A Chinese report that Pekin has fallen and the Emperor has fled has caused a wide sensation, but a private telegram from Pekin, timed two o'clock yesterday afternoon, makes no mention of such an occurrence.

It is thought here that the report is intended to assist the rebel cause locally.

No Mention Of It.

London, Nov. 7.—The Reuter Telegram Co.'s latest despatch from Pekin direct, dated yesterday, 7.28 p.m., makes no mention of the fall of the city.

Local Cabinet Formed.

Shanghai, Nov. 7.—The most interesting development in Shanghai yesterday was the completion of the organization of a local Cabinet by the revolutionaries. Wu Ting Fang, who formerly held the post of Minister at Washington, has been appointed head of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Wang Jih Ting, Trade and Commerce; Shen Wan Yung, Finance; Li Ping Heu, Civil Administrator, and Lee Hsieh, Military Administrator.

The appointments, however, are not taken seriously, the appointees denying knowledge of the action of the revolutionaries, except in the case of the Civil Administrator, who has been acting in the official capacity throughout.

Wu Ting Fang, while declining to acknowledge any participation in the revolutionary administration of Shanghai, openly sympathizes with it, although criticising some of the methods. He is bitterly opposed to the Manchu clique in Pekin. Dr. Wu says that if the revolution hopes to win it must scrupulously regard the the rights of foreign nations and individuals. This, as time progresses, will be found difficult because of the conflicting views held in different provinces.

The Government at Pekin has instructed the Viceroy of Nanking not to oppose the reformers. Nanking, therefore, is expected to turn over to the revolutionaries in a few days.

Perfect order prevails at Shanghai. The arsenal, which was captured by the rebels, has resumed work. The revolutionary committee has ordered the return of the rifles and ammunition which were given out indiscriminately. Those retaining the rifles without a certificate will be immediately beheaded.

Shaohing, in the Province of Chekiang, famous for its mines; Quinsan and Kashing, in the same province, surrendered peacefully to the rebels late yesterday. Order is being maintained.

With the exception of Wusih all important points on the railroad from Shanghai to Ching Kiang are now in the hands of the revolutionists.

Nanking is still outwardly loyal and quiet, but the Tartar general is so unpopular that an upheaval threatens.

Amoy Not Captured.

Amoy, Nov. 7.—The report of the rebel occupation of Amoy is unfounded. The situation here is tense, but there are no disorders.

Can't Fly Across the Sea.

Atlantic City, N.J., Nov. 7.—No serious attempt to fly across the Atlantic Ocean in an airship will be made this year. Saturday's trial convinced Vaniman and his backers that the project is not feasible. No public announcement that the flight is called off has been made, but it is a fact, nevertheless. After one or two flights over Atlantic City, with the spectacular dirigible, the crew will be discharged.

It was found necessary in the trial flight to part with the lifeboat, wireless outfit, dynamo, and of a third pair of propellors to get buoyancy enough. Every one of the crew was ordered to alight.

It is realized that the airship, as now constructed, will not carry the additional weight that would be required for a trip across the ocean.

A Long Time Till Monday.

Montreal, Nov. 7.—For serving intoxicating liquor with sandwiches on Sunday to men who were not bonafide guests at the respective hotels, the Welland and Savoy Hotels, the Pall Mall Cafe and the Cafe Parisian were yesterday morning fined the minimum penalty, $30 and costs or three months in jail, by Recorder Weir. The decision is an interesting one, as hotelmen in general have usually considered that they were entitled to sell

Twenty-Two of Crew Drown.

London, Nov. 7.—The Greek steamer Lordos Byron, from Theodosia for Antwerp, foundered in the English Channel during a gale Sunday night. Twenty-two of the crew of twenty-five were lost.

Gross Cruelty Alleged.

New York, Nov. 7.—Charges of gross cruelty practised by Captain James Robinson of the British steamer Drummaldie were made to the British consul yesterday by three sailors, who had just arrived here on the steamer from South American ports. They declared that decayed meat with which they were served, alleged blows and curses from the captain, and the forcing of fever-stricken men to work long hours had driven some of the crew to mutiny at sea and to plot to poison the captain.

Six of the alleged conspirators were taken off the vessel at Montevideo and sent to a British prison, and after this the sailors assert, the treatment the remainder of the crew received grew worse. One of them told of being dragged from his bunk while he lay sick with fever and forced to go aloft. The three men declared that they would rather go to jail than serve the remainder of their two-year contract under Captain Robinson. The consul took the case under advisement.

OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindsay, Ont.—"I think it is no more than right for me to thank Mrs. Pinkham for what her kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. When I wrote to her some time ago I was a very sick woman, suffering from female troubles. I had inflammation of the female organs, and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend this medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and think they are fine."—Mrs. FRANK ESSLEY, Lindsay, Ontario.

We cannot understand why women will take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, without first trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration.

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

"Detachment of Morazan's Scouts captured American named Ganley this morning at daybreak. Ganley held here in quartel—condemned to death by fusilado after drumhead court-martial by Morazan. He claims to be American citizen and wants protection of his government. I cannot get Guariqui—station there dead for seven days past. Hurry in relief on receipt of this or will be too late. If possible, land marines at San Antonio Inlet and push overland to Boracao by way of Agira River Trail. I have done everything in my power, but am helpless. You must hurry—is to be shot at sunset.—Adolph Klauser, American Consul, Boracao."

McKinnon handed the written sheet to Alicia without speaking.

She read it and handed it back to him. Her hand was shaking a little. "What can we do?" she asked, almost in a whisper.

"There's nothing we can do," was McKinnon's answer. "Our cables are still out of order. They're still too weak to send!"

"But we can't stand her and see the man die—now—in that way!"

McKinnon suddenly held up a hand for silence, for the Princeton was sending again:

"Cannot lan dmen before communicating with Guariqui. Ask suspension of execution of American named Ganley for day or two until Guariqui conference.—Lieutenant Verdu."

Then came a break and another wait, while from somewhere far off in the streets below floated up the bray and throb of the military band. Then a second Boracao message trickled down through the Guariqui wires and stirred the coherer into feeble life:

"Can do nothing. Morazan claims acting for General Ulloa under President Duran's orders. But whole thing terrible mistake. We must have help at once, or innocent and law-abiding citizens will be murdered. Send men and heliograph advance from San Antonio Hill.—Klauser."

Aiken's hurried return with two orderlies and an officer in full uniform kept McKinnon from intercepting the Princeton's reply. The little station had suddenly become close and stifling. He felt weak and unstrung, and was glad to gain the open air and find the quiet sunlight and the slowly waving palms about him once more. He was glad to know that the woman he loved stood at his side, and that their future life was to be a life far from such scenes.

They were still there, side by side above the embrasure, when the hurrying Aikens, as he darted below-stairs, thrust a sheet of carbon-copy into their hands as he passed. McKinnon held it up and read it aloud:

"American named Ganley just shot down by quartel guards as he broke jail here—body surrendered to me by alcaide—am holding it awaiting instructions.—Klauser."

The sheet fluttered to the ground.

"It's over," said the woman, covering her face with her hands, while a movement that was almost a shiver crept through her stooping body.

"Yes, it's over now," echoed McKinnon, absently, as his arm went out to sustain her. And they sat there, alone with their thoughts, for many minutes.

Teacher Cured of Barber's Itch

Tells of Cures Among His Pupils That Were Remarkable

Raw, Inflamed, Itching Skin is Soothed and Healed by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Barber's Itch is a form of Ringworm, which, when once started, is most annoying and unsightly, and most difficult to cure. Barbers often refuse to shave anyone having this disease, for fear of passing it on to other customers.

But you can cure Barber's Itch and keep the skin wonderfully soft, and healthy by applying Dr. Chase's Ointment. Just read what this teacher has to say about the healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Chas. C. Poirier, Upper Caraquet, N. B., writes: "Two years ago while teaching at Shippegan I caught Barber's Itch. A friend told me Dr. Chase's Ointment would cure me, as it had him. When I went for a box I thought it dear, but when I found how good it was I thought it cheap.

"Not only was I cured by that single box, but it also cured two of my pupils, and this too quickly to be believed. One of them, a girl, had a running sore on the chin, which the doctor had tried in vain to cure. The other had a sore on the ear; water running out of it all the time. I can certify to the cure of these cases."

Wherever there is itching skin or a sore that refuses to heal you can apply Dr. Chase's Ointment with positive assurance that the results will be entirely satisfactory. The soothing, healing power of this great ointment is truly wonderful. 60c a box, at all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

A Short Story

The 'drome on the roof of the Singer Building was empty of 'planes, or nearly so, and the special night express was ready for its semi-weekly trip to Boston, when the stranger came down the ways. Graham Atwhite paused in his work as the newcomer addressed him, calling the aviator's name in a slow, questioning voice:

"Oh, then you are the passenger I was told to expect?" asked the birdman, shutting off the motors, and hushing their pulsing throb-throb, so strangely like the drumming cry of some queer bird.

"Yes," answered the stranger. Then, with a look into the darkness ahead, he questioned: "Are we ready to start?"

"It's two minutes past the starting time now." The motors, answering a turn of the aviator's hand, sang again. Back along the ways a 'phone bussed sharply. Atwhite motioned to the seat behind his own, and the two men settled themselves just as the hangarman came running, breathlessly, down the runway.

"Headquarters asking you why don't make a clearance," he megaphoned through his hands, and the aviator gave the steering wheel a whirl as he shouted:

"Phone the office that I'm off," and as the great machine trembled throughout its length and the plane glided to the edge of the 'drome, he leaned over the side of the narrow car and called to the already departing hangarman, "They needn't worry: I'll make the usual time." Then he winged a straight course out over the shimmering sea.

"It's easier out here," he explained to the silent passenger. "Those streets below make cross-currents that are nasty to sail through."

The harbour, a wide silver ribbon, melted into the sea of myriad lights beneath them, and as another plane swooped near, tearing a hole in the night, the Special answered the wail of the passing ship-of-the-air with a screech from its own siren.

Presently when the flickering stars above seemed to melt into the whirling chaos below, Atwhite turned in his seat and glanced at the passenger behind. Quiet as the night itself and as darkly mysterious the stranger sat, his eyes brooding, yet with a fearful questioning in their gaze, staring out into the void ahead.

The first faint haze of an early dawn had not yet tinted the eastern sky when they flashed over the Berkshires. The passenger seemed to rouse. "We're going to make it!" he cried, and his tone held more of joy than inquiry.

Atwhite smiled in conscious pride that was wholly pardonable. "I've never failed to make it since the first trip," he said.

They were skirting the coast now, and as the light began to dispel the gray vapors of the morn, the birdman pointed to a tremendous white flicker on the sky-line.

"Boston Light and The Graves," he shouted, pointing to where the flicker had become a succession of flashes.

Three days later, as Atwhite was preparing for his return trip to New York, a group of fellow aviators came laughing and talking toward him. In the hands of the foremost was the morning paper, and as they saw Atwhite every man's hat came off and from half a dozen throats came the hail: "Good morning, Mr. Cupid!" At first there was nothing but witty, good-natured remarks, and from them the young aviator could gather little except the fact that in some way he had become the hero of a newspaper story.

At last they left him to read for himself the several journals that they generously showered upon him, and he read each in turn, chuckling aloud more than once.

"Well, no wonder the boys called me Mr. Cupid. Hanged if I haven't qualified? To think of that fellow—Hello! here's the man now, and she's with him, too," and the aviator dropped his papers as his passenger of the last trip came smiling towards him.

"You've read the news, I see," began the visitor. "She would come with me to thank you herself," and as if that was her cue, the young woman at his side turned a beaming face to Atwhite.

"I don't know how to say it, but I know you will understand," she said, and offered him her hand.

Atwhite smiled. "I think I do," he returned, pressing the little hand that lay in his. "It would have been too bad if we had lost the race."

"But you didn't, you see!" the girl cried, joyfully. Then her face clouded. "It was awful, though, for right up to the last minute I expected to be deported, and the steamer was ready to sail when he came."

The starting bell rang loudly, there was a scramble on the part of several aviators as they scurried past on the way to their machines. Atwhite climbed aboard his plane and banged in the clutch, the machine bounded forward.

"Come in again next week, and I'll have a permit ready, that is, if you'd like to fly," he called to the girl.

She smiled and nodded in answer and Atwhite turned his eyes away from her beaming face, just as the plane rose, light as a bird, and took the air."—Boston Post.

Carried Baby In Valise

BUFFALO, NOV. 4.—When a woman, apparently about thirty-five years old, entered a Main street department store yesterday afternoon and laid a suit case rather gently on the floor, no particular notice was taken of her.

But when she lifted the satchel to one of the counters and opening it produced a wee baby, there was commotion. Customers in the vicinity forgot all else and stared in amazement. Sadie and Lizzie, behind a stack of baby's underwear, stopped their conversation with regard to what "he says to me when I called him up the other day." Maude, behind the ribbon counter, ceased her desperate efforts to annihilate a large stick of chewing gum and stared with wondering eyes as wide open as saucers.

Taking the infant from its odd conveyance the woman grew talkative, and said the baby was only two months old. "Such a dear little thing, isn't it, too?" The shop girls agreed as to the dearness of the baby, but that was not what they were most interested in. They waited impatiently for the visitor to explain.

At last the girl behind the glove counter could hold herself no longer.

"Say, if I ain't too rude, what's the idea of that new kind of baby carriage you got there?" she asked.

But the woman with the baby was too occupied to offer an explanation. A crowd gathered near the underwear counter with the object of interest, a dimpling two-months' old baby, smiling from the depths of a well-paddled valise.

Next the woman went into the shoe department and told the clerks that she "always carried the baby in the valise." At that moment Detective Sergeant Hollmund came upon the scene, and seeing the commotion caused by the woman, baby and valise, told the store officials.

Superintendent Churchill, of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, was notified and came to the store. He told the woman the next time she was found carrying the baby in the valise in that strange manner she would be arrested.

Broke Record

NEW YORK, NOV. 6.—Calabraith P. Rodgers, the aviator who practically completed his ocean-to-ocean flight by landing at Pasadena, Calif., yesterday afternoon, started from this city forty-nine days ago on which was to prove his record-making trip. The aviator, in a Wright bi-plane, rose from the Sheepshead Bay race-track at 4.25 p.m. on September 17, and arrived at Pasadena at 4.10 p.m. Sunday. He left behind him at Marshall, Mo., on Oct. 10, a broken world's record for a cross-country flight, having then travelled 1,398 miles, as against the record of 1,265 miles previously made by Harry Atwood. Rodgers' mileage over the Atwood record kept piling up day by day until upon his arrival at Pasadena he had eclipsed the Atwood figures by a total of 2,966 miles.

Figured from his actual flying time of three days, ten hours and four minutes in travelling 4,231 miles, his rate of speed was 51.59 miles an hour.

Finances of Dominion

OTTAWA, NOV. 7.—The finances of the Dominions, as shown by the monthly statement for October, was never in better shape, and Hon. Mr. Fielding has left his successor with a surplus of probably thirty-five millions in sight for the end of the current fiscal year. For the first seven months of the fiscal year the revenue has been $76,291,178, an increase of $10,476,792 over the corresponding period of last year, while expenditures show decreases of a million each in both consolidated fund and capital accounts. The surplus of revenue over total expenditure for the seven months has been a little over twenty-one millions.

For October the revenue totalled $12,221,653, an increase of $2,555,461 over October of last year. The revenue for the month is the largest on record.

The net debt of the Dominion was decreased by $5,344,644 during the month, and now stands at $318,583,924.

ZAM-BUK

CURED US! WHY NOT YOU?

Injury to Foot Healed.

Mr. Reuben Atherton, of 267 Ferguson Ave., Hamilton, says:—While employed with the Otis Elevator Co. a heavy plank fell and severely crushed my big toe and right foot. The nail had to be removed from the toe when the doctor came to dress the injured members. The flesh was terribly bruised, turned very black, and the foot and leg became much swollen and painful. I was laid off work for some eight weeks. The doctor attended regularly at first, but the wounds did not heal. At last I heard of Zam-Buk and began using this ointment. It really seemed to act like magic, cleansing all unhealthy matter from the wounds, and drawing out all discoloration, inflammation and soreness. In two weeks the toe and foot were well again. Zam-Buk balm is certainly a wonderful healer, and I would not be without a box in the house.

Poisoned Sore Cured.

Mrs. D. S. Green, of Kingston, Ont., writes:—My daughter Hazel sustained a poisoned wound on her heel. She had chilblains and when the skin broke some poison got into the wound and made a terrible place. It was painful, much swollen, and made her almost unable to move about. For a long time she could not bear to put a shoe on. I tried several things, but there was no trace of improvement. At last a lady friend recommended Zam-Buk. I left off the ordinary salves and applied this herbal balm to her heel. In a few days Zam-Buk had cleansed and healed the sore so well that she was able to put on her shoe, and a few days later the wound was healed and Hazel was back at school. I shall always keep Zam-Buk handy in future.

Obstinate Skin Rash Ended.

Mrs. H. Burdett, of 196 Simcoe St., East Hamilton, says:—"I was cured by Zam-Buk of an obstinate skin rash which had defied all previous remedies. This eruption broke out on my face in the form of red pimples and blotches. Various remedies one after another were tried, yet nothing permanently removed this eruption until I used Zam-Buk. After each application of this herbal ointment my skin became clearer, and in a week my face was as smooth and white as before the rash broke out, thanks to Zam-Buk. Since then our home is never without it.

For all skin injuries & diseases Zam-Buk is best. All druggists and stores 50c a box or post free for price from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Aviator Rodgers

PASADENA, CALIF., NOV. 6.—Whether Aviator C. P. Rodgers will bring his ocean-to-ocean flight technically to an end above the Pacific ocean off Venice Beach or at San Diego, Calif., is a question not yet settled. Representatives of both towns are clamoring for the honor. Both have had the ear of Rodgers as well as that of his managers, and it probably will be settled by a bid, the one willing to pay the most to be chosen.

Officially, Rodgers' flight came to an end yesterday, when he alighted at Pasadena, and it is possible that the flight over the water will not be made for several days. Should Venice be successful in the contest for favor, it probably will not take place until next Sunday, in order to allow Sunday beach-goers to see the aviator in action.

Needlework Notes

An effective trimming for a dress can be secured by selecting a pattern of lace with a decided floral figure and painting the flowers and leaves in oil paints. These colors will not fade if pressed with a hot iron after being painted. Paint the outline of the design in a tone slightly darker than the rest of the figure.

Buy linen bird's eye towelling by the piece and make from this either eight towels with hemstitched ends or nine with scalloped ends. Of course, the handwork on the towels adds to their beauty and value. Those with scalloped ends could have single eyelets or groups of them in each scallop. The initial can be surrounded with the eyelets. Those with hemstitched hems should have the simple initial.

When making embroidered ruffles to get the best effect the embroidery should be done on the sheerest of handkerchief linen, and may be elaborated by the addition of dots in graduated sizes the same color as the edge. A smart bow of velvet or satin ribbon beneath the chin should carry out the color suggested in the edge of the ruffle. On a plain serge dress the ruffle is sometimes augmented by a pleated ruffle to match around the neck and at the edge of the sleeves, these dainty bits of white forming the only trimming.

The girl who can stencil or do rapid embroidery should make one or more of the new flowered aprons to be used for fancy work or when at a chafing dish. The skirt of the apron is a short oval shape, much like a huge egg. The bib is cut in conventional flower form, the edges cut to the outline of the petals. On the lower part of the oval an extra piece is added for a pocket. This, too, is decorated with a big conventional flower and foliage design, with the outline cut to shape. To meet the pocket on the upper part of the skirt are long sprays of foliage with the points turned in. The design is stenciled in natural colors, or if the design is worked, in heavy outline and a bold filling stitch or a bold long and short stitch.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"Yet each man kills the thing he loves,
By each let this be heard,
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word;
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword!"
—Oscar Wilde.

"In a recent talk you tell of the girl, whose engagement has been announced ,whose preparations for marriage have partly been made, and you say that the right thing for her to do is to break the engagement when she realizes that she would rather be free. Let us reverse the case and suppose the man has become tired of the girl. It is considered only honourable that he 'grin and bear it,' that he hide his true feelings and go ahead and marry her. Do you think this is right or not?
—One who would like to know!"

This is one of the questions which my morning's mail brought me.

How I wish all the queries and puzzlements which come to me were so easily answered.

Being a Yankee, I think I'll have to meet that question by another.

Do you think, my friend, that there lives a girl who would be any happier to find out that her man did not love her after marriage, when there is no escape instead of before marriage when there is?

Perhaps the man who discovers that he is in such a predicament, might fancy in a fine glow of honour and self-sacrifice, that he would never let her find out at all, but would keep his feelings a secret for life.

But, alas, fine glows of honour and self-sacrifice die down just as surely and naturally as the log in your fireplace crumbles into cold ashes, and I don't believe anyone short of an archangel could hide from a woman in a lifetime of daily living with her, the fact that he did not love her.

She must know some time. It does not seem to me that there is any question when that some time should be.

I consider that the proper thing for a man to do who finds he has made such a tragic mistake is first to do nothing.

Let him wait.

Let him test himself in every way of which he can think.

Let him be sure.

But after he is absolutely sure that he isn't making a second mistake, let him go to the girl and tell her simply and frankly that he doesn't think he cares enough for her to make her happy, and ask her to break the engagement.

In the name of human decency, in the name of the kindness that kills "with a knife because the dead so soon grow cold," let him not try to hint about the matter. It seems to me that the most cruel thing in such a case would be for a girl to look back afterwards and remember things which, in the folly of her love and trust, she had disregarded. So let him tell her frankly, quickly and finally.

And now, one more suggestion. When he has broken with her there are still two possible courses left to him. He may allow people to guess the truth or he may do everything in his power to give the impression that the lack of love was on her side and that the engagement was broken actually as well as formally by her.

Which course he pursues will stamp him surely for what he is—either an honourable man who has made an unfortunate mistake—or a cad, pure and simple.

SYSTEM OF FIRE MARSHALS IS PROPOSED FOR ONTARIO

Chief Thompson, of Toronto, Chosen as Chairman of a Committee---Chief Howard Favours Movement

TORONTO, Nov. 7.—Fire Chief Thompson, of oronto, has been chosen as chairman of a special committee f the Fire Chiefs of Ontario, which is to take up with the Ontario Government the matter of appointing Provincial fire marshals. The marshals would be charged with the double duty of examining premises in order to reduce the likelihood of fire and of investigating closely into the causes of fires.

At a recent meeting of the chiefs of fire departments of the Province of Ontario, it was decided to ask the Legislature of Ontario to provide for the appintment of Provincial fire marshals fr the two-fold purpose of examining cclosely into the cause of every fire and of inspection of premises, so as to reduce the likelihood of fire.

The enormous fire waste on the Continent of North America has created pronounced alarm and in the United States the movement is very general on the part of the various States Governments to adopt measures now to be urged by the fire chiefs of Ontario. New York State has just adopted such a measure; it has also authorized the City of New York to organize a bureau of its own, and merchants and manufacturers are co-operating wih the civic authorities to bring this about.

It is likely that the Toronto Board f Trade will be asked to use their influence with the Ontario Government in this regard, and at the last convention of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association the Insurance Committee was charged with the responsibility of doing all that lay in its power to accomplish the same result.

Much is being talked these days of conservation of national resources, and the suppressin of the fire waste is intimately associated with this modern tendency.

This latter is the question which Chief Howard discussed with the Examiner some time ago, when he expressed himself as being thoroughly in favour of such a movement.

Richeson on Trial

BOSTON, NOV. 4.—The Rev. Clarence Virgil Thompson Richeson, charged with the murder of Miss Avis Linnell, was arraigned before Judge Sanderson in the Superior Criminal Court yesterday.

The accused pastor was represented by John L. Lee, the noted Virginia lawyer, who has been remarkably successful in a number of trials of men charged with murder. The Rev. Dr. Richeson pleaded not guilty. Then the greatest legal fight in criminal history in this State, if not in the country, was begun.

The date of the trial will be set for January. District Attorney Pelletier has agreed to an immediate trial, and this early date is satisfactory to the accused clergyman's counsel.

The long silence of the indicted pastor was broken in a letter of resignation to the Baptist Immanual Church of Cambridge. It was written by the clergyman in his cell and forwarded to Charles F. Cummings, clerk of the church.

The letter was short, but a marvel of strong, eloquent, convincing construction. It is intensely religious in spirit.

This is the letter:

"Charles Street Jail, Nov. 2, 1911.

"Charles F. Cummings, clerk, Immanuel Baptist Church, No. 15 Marlboro street, Belmont, Mass.:

"My Dear Sir,—I beg to herewith tender my resignation as pastor of Immanuel Church.

"Strong in the consciousness of my innocence, and firmly persuaded that God in His own good time will lift this burden from me, I nevertheless feel that I should not permit the shadow thrown across my life to darken the religious welfare of my church and its people, whom I love.

"I therefore deem it my duty to place the church in a position to select my successor.

"With my heartfelt thanks for the many kindnesses shown me by each and all of the members of my church, I am, sincerely yours,

"Charles V. T. Richeson."

"I have had a long talk with Mr. Richeson and I am confident of his innocence, and thit he will be acquitted of the charges against him," said his lawyer.

"As the trial proceeds the people of New England will learn facts about this case that have n e out yet. These facts can only ased properly at the trial.

"I have had a talk with Grant Edmands, the father of Miss Violet Edmands, to whom Mr. Richeson is engaged. Mr. Edmands believes in the innocence of the clergyman and will stick to him to the end."

INDICTED ON FIVE COUNTS

Richeson is under indictment on five counts alleging the murder of Miss Linnell. The indictment alleges that he conveyed poison to Miss Linnell for the purpose of murder. The reason there are five counts in the indictment is that the police have not discovered how the poison was "conveyed." Here is the crucial point in the case upon which will be fought the trial. The police in their search for evidence upon which to convict the clergyman say they have developed the following:

First—That Rev. Dr. Richeson on October 10 bought cyanide of potassium, enough to "kill ten men."

Second—That Richeson experimented with poison on October 12 at his boarding place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Carter in Cambridge.

Third—That on October 14, the police allege, the minister gave poison to Miss Avis Linnell.

Fourth—That the motive of the Rev. Dr. Richeson was to get rid of his former sweetheart that he might marry Miss Violet Edmands, the Brookline heiress.

Against the evidence of the police, the defence is weaving a strong defence.

The first contention of the defence is a challenge to the prosecution to show that the minister ever gave Miss Linnell cyanide of potassium. This is the crucial point of the defence. Until the police can show that some package, some vial, or something supposed to contain the poison was given to Miss Linnell by the minister, the defence is not compelled to show its hand.

It might stake its case upon this damaging missing link in the chain of circumstantial evidence which the police have so far woven against the young minister. The defence will claim that there was nothing found in Avis Linnell's room at the Young Women's Christian Association which would indicate that the minister had ever given her a poison.

It will claim that no vial, no package, nothing to indicate the presence of a poison was ever found in Avis Linnell's room or in the bathroom or where it might have been in her possession.

NOTHING IN HIS ROOM

Third, the defence will show that nothing was found in Richeson's room in Cambridge to indicate that he ever had cyanide of potassium or that he ever conveyed cyanide of potassium to the young music student.

Fourth, that no person ever saw Richeson give any poison or anything else to Avis Linnell on the day she took the fatal draught and that on this fateful day in the girl's life no one saw her with the minister.

The defence will attempt to show that the damaging evidence against the clergyman is purely circumatantial.

Steel Production

The current issues of the Iron Trade Journal contains statistics regarding the production of pig iron, steel ingots, and steel rails in Canada during the first half of 1911.

The figures are, on the whole, gratifying. They show that the output of pig iron by the Canadian furnaces for the six months ending June 30 aggregated 409,170 tons, an increase of 16 per cent over the same period of 1910.

The increase in the production of steel ingots was not so large, being about 10 1-2 per cent. The aggregate output of the four companies manufacturing ingots was 374,793 tons.

Steel rail production fell off about 8 per cent during the six months as compared with the corresponding period in 1910, being 161,635 tons.

	First Six Mos. 1911.	First Six Mos. 1910.
Pig iron, tons . .	409,170	344,782
Steel ingots, tons	374,793	338,936
Steel rails, tons .	161,635	174,592
Grand total.	936,598	860,341

The one unsatisfactory feature of the iron and steel situation in Canada is the demoralised condition of prices on account of the competition in the United States. During the last few months this competition has been particularly keen. With the demand almost nil in the home market, they have flooded Canada with their surplus stocks, bringing prices in this country down to a practically unprofitable point. And, unfortunately, there is no prospect of an immediate improvement.

It is significant, says the Iron Trade Journal, that in spite of the keen competition from the United States, the production of iron and steel in Canada during the first half of the year should have been so gratifying as far as tonnage is concerned.

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—The Tiny Tads are going out, as usual, in a bunch,
To find some sort of provender for breakfast and for lunch.

2—A Chimpanzeatinghouse they spy, but him they pass with scorn.
"We do not trust that place," they say; "let's find some Stewnicorn."

3—They eat some lovely Windoughnuts, which, when they open wide,
They find are filled with jelly and with jam and things inside.

Oh, nice Pumacaronies!" and they follow them a mile.

They hope the Volcanoble beast is not going to sneeze!

TIT-BITS

COAL IN NEW MEXICO

The first record of coal production in New Mexico is contained in the issue of the first volume by the United States survey of "Mineral Resources of the United States," which covered the calendar year 1882. In that year the reported output was only 157,092 tons. From 1882 to 1910 the total production has amounted to 31,10,2818 short tons, which, including mining and other loss, represents a total exhaustion of about 46,600,000 tos.

According to the estimate of Marius R. Campbell of the United States Geological Survey, the original coal supply of New Mexico, was 163,780,000 tons, so that the exhaustion to date represents approximately 0.03 of 1 per cent. of the original suppll. Mr. Campbell's figures do not, however, include the contents of several newly discovered and extensive fields.

New Mexico's production for last year showed a notable increase over that of former years. The output for 1910, according to E. W. Parker, of the United States Geological Survey, was 3,508,231 short tons, with a value of $4,877,151, as against 2,801,128 tons in 1909, a gain of 707,193 tons, or 25'25 per cent. The record for both years was the best attained. The value of the product increased from $3,619,744 to $4,877,151, a gain of $1,25,7407, or nearly 35 per cent.

The increased production is attributed partly to the strike in the coal mines in the Middle States and the northern (Boulder) district of Colorado and partly to the growth of population and the settlement of new lands in New Mexico, Arisona and California—settlement that is creating a demand which will be permanent and growing. Both the bituminous and the sub-bituminous coals of New Mexico are rapidly growing in favour for domestic purposes, the bituminous coal being shipped from the Raton field to markets in Kansas, Oklahoma and even farther east, and the sub-bituminous coal of the Gallup district supplying the markets of the Southwest and Pacific coast. The domestic demand for New Mexico coal in 1910 was so great that the operators were unable to fill orders promptly.—Pittsburg Post.

BOILED CURRANT PUDDING

Pick apart and put through the food chopper one-quarter of a pound of beef suet. Mix with it one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter of a pound of cleaned currants and one-half of a poud of flour. Stir in just enough sweet milk to moisten to a stiff dough. Turn into a greased dish or mold with a tightly fitting lid, place on a trivet in a saucepan or kettle, pour boiling water round it, cover the kettle and keep the water at a ocntinuous boil for two hours and a half.

THE "TEN DEMANDMENTS"

For gross worldly wisdom it would be difficult to surpass the "Ten Demandments" hanging in one of the many salmon canneries at Steveston, Wastern Canada:

1. Don't lie. It wastes my time and yours. I am sure to catch you in the end, and that is the wrong end.
2. Watch your work, not the clock. A long day's work makes a long day short; and a short day's work makes my face long.
3. Give me more than I expect. I can afford to increase your pay if you increase my profits.
4. You owe so much to yourself you cannot afford to owe anybody else. Keep out of debt, or keep ut of my shops.
5. Dishonesty is never an accident. Good men, like good women, never see temptation when they meet it.
6. Mind your own business and in time you'll have a business of your own to mind.
7. Don't do anything here which hurts your self-respect. An employee who is willing to steal for me is willing to steal from me.
8. It is none of my business what you do at night. But if dissipation affects what you do the next day, and you do half as much as I demand, you'll last half as long as you hoped.
9. Don't tell me what I'd like to hear, but what I ought to hear. I don't want a valet to my vanity, but one for my dollars.
10. Don't kick if I kick. If you're worth while correcting you're worth while keeping. I don't waste time cutting specks out of rotten apples.

TRANS-AFRICAN RAILWAY

The prospect of the vigorous exploitation of North and West Africa, as the result of the Franco-German settlement of the Morocco-French Congo question, has evoked a proposal for the construction of a vast trans-African railway, to do for the African continent what the Union Pacific has accomplished for the Western States of America.

Mr. Andre Berthelot, formerly a deputy of the French chamber, outlines the scheme, in the Matin, as a railway starting from Algiers or Oran and extending to Katanga to join the Cape-to-Cairo line, which he argues ought to be modified to join Algeria instead of Egypt, with the cape.

The trans-African line would have two branches, one running from the Sahara to Niberia, joining West Africa with Algeria, and the other connecting the western Mediterranean section of the continent with the Indian Ocean by means of the Uganda railway.

M. Berthelot estimates that the railway will reduce the distance to London from Johannesburg to nine days, and to Paris from Lake Chad to four. He points out that the British have already built 1,860 miles of the Cape-to-Cairo line, the Belgians 310 miles of track, and the French, in Algeria, 372 miles. Thus, of the 6,572 miles from Algiers to the cape, only some 4,000 miles remain to be built. He regard it a a perfectly feasible scheme, considering the trans-Siberian railway, from Moscow to Vladivostock, which is 5,532 miles long.—Paris Correspondence Philadelphia Ledger.

A LOSING PACE

As the man from the West, in tow of a New York friend, stood absorbed in the moving panorama of the beautiful park, along the nearest bridal path came a pretty girl on a satin-skinned horse. Behind her, at the proper distance, came the groom.

The man from the West stared, and turned to his companion with a look of mingled contempt and incredulity.

"Say, what does he expect her to do—whistle him up 'side of her?" he asked, in a withering tone. "A man must be mighty bashful to ride behind his girl like that. 'Tain't muche the way we do out West."—Youth's Companion.

A PARDONABLE MISTAKE

"The cold weather is coming on, and we shall soon see some very remarkable cold weather motoring suits."

The speaker sat in his New York office. He resumed:

"I'll be glad when cold weather motoring clothes are made more sightly. They give us such a shaggy look now, don't they? Did you ever hear about the performing bear?

"Well, a country hotel, a good deal frequented by motorists, took in a showman and his performing bear, and one morning the bear escaped from the stable.

"Everybody fled before the animal. The hotel man, however, pursued it courageously. It entered the hotel, mounted the stairway, pushed open a bedroom door and vanished.

"Then the hotel man, close behind, heard from the bedroom an angry exclamation in a feminine voice and the words:

"George, dear, how often have I forbidden you to come into my room without knocking—and in your automobile coat, too."—Washington Star.

TRIPOLI'S HISTORIC BACKGROUND

Since the world began the arm of Italy has reached out into the Mediterranean toward Africa, its finger pointing straight at Tripoli. Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Byzantines, Arabs, Spaniards and Turks followed the suggestion of that finger in turn, but of them all only the Arab and the Turk remain. In every case a colonial empire was the mirage which beckoned to those land-hungry peoples from behind the golden haze which hangs over the African coastline, and in every case their African adventures ended in disappointment and disaster. After an interim of centuries, in which the roads and ramparts and reservoirs built along that shore by those primeval pioneers have crumbled into dust, the troop-laden transports of a regenerated Italy have followed in the wake of those Greek galleys, those Roman triremes, and those Spanish caravels. Undeterred by the recollection of her disastrous Abyssinian adventure, Italy is imbued with the idea, just as were her powerful predecessors, that her commercial and political interests demand the extension of her dominion across the Middle sea.

Ever since the purple sails of Phoenicia first flaunted along its coast, the history of Tripolitania has been one of invasion and conquest. In the very dawn of history the galleys of Greece dropped anchor off this shore, in the belief that it was the Garden of the Hesperides, and the vestiges of their colony of Cyrenaica lure the archaeologists to-day. The Greeks retreated before Carthage's colonial expansion, and the Carthaginians gave way in turn to the conquering Romans, who, because of its three-leagued cities of Oea, Sabrata and Leptis, named their new possession Tripolis, just as Decapolis signified the region of ten cities and Pentapoli of five. Christianity was scarcely four centuries old when the hordes of fierce-faced, skin-clad Vandals, sweeping down from their Germanic forests, overran a decadent Italy and carried fire and sword and torture from end to end of the Mediterranean. Before another century had rolled around, however, Belisarius, the great captain of Byzantium, had broken the Vandal power forever, and the troubled land of Tripolitania once again came under the shadow of the cross. Then the wave of Arab conquest came, rolling across North Africa, until it broke upon the coasts of Spain, and supplanting the feeble Christianity of the natives of all this region with the vigorous and fanatical faith of Islam. Though Ferdinand the Catholic, not content with expelling the Moors from Spain, continued the crusade against the infidel by capturing the Tripolitan capital, the Knights of St. John, to whom he turned the city over, surrendered to the beleaguering Turks just as the sixteenth century had reached its turning point, and Turkish it has remained, at least in name, ever since.—American Review of Reviews.

HOW AN ACTOR WAS MADE

Melyn Arbuckle, the actor, was invited to a dinner to meet a few members of Congress the last time he played in Washington, says the Sunday Magazine. He told this story:

"I am from Bowie County, Texas, and my presence here to-night is peculiarly appropriate, because I, too, once ran for office, one of the highest and most distinguished offices in the gift of the people, that of justice of the peace. Toward the end of my campaign I made my greatest speech. Standing on a goods box in a crossroads store, I told my constituents all about Marcus Aurelius and Plutarch. I dwelt on the importance of securing justice for all. I raved, I roared. Demosthenes would have envied me.

"Then my opponent rose and said, 'Voters, you know I own a big grocery store a few miles up the road. I am about to open a new and long line of credit. If I am elected, I shall be glad to see you all at my store.'"

Arbuckle paused and surveyed his political hearers sadly. "Gentlemen," he concluded mournfully, "that 'line' made me go on the stage for a living."

SNAKE DIDN'T MIND HOT WATER

Mrs. James Phillips, of near Odell, had a terrific encounter with a 6-foot blacksnake in her home early the other morning. She was alone in the house, her husband having gone to a nearby farm. She had just sat down to eat her breakfast when she noticed the wriggling snake near the door.

Horrified, the woman ran into an adjoining room. She got a bucket of scalding water and threw it on the reptile. But this seemed to have no effect on the snake. It chased her into the front room. The woman again threw a bucket of scalding water on the snake, but this made it fight all the harder. It struck at her several times, and finally chased her from the house.

For fully an hour she fought the reptile, and finally killed it with a club.—Pittsburgh Dispatch to New York World.

SAFEST STYLE IN DANCING

Far more important, in the eyes of fashionable Europe, than the wrangles of diplomats about the fate of Italy and Turkey is the convention of dancing masters in Paris to determine what styles for the coming season are to be. Delegates to the conclave are of the opinion ballroom dancing is becoming simpler than ever before and that the swaying, rhythmical trot dances of South America are the most popular movements of the day. There was a time when such intricate figures as gavottes and sarabandes were danced by society folk, but dances so sedate, it seems, long have been abandoned for the swinging glide of the Boston and the curious twinings of the Turkey Trot, and its many imitations. The modern mazurka, a Louis XV. waltz-minuet, and the Argentine five-step have finally been settled on as the most appropriate dances for the coming winter.—New York Press.

TAKING THE CHINESE CENSUS

Difficulties of census work among Chinese are amusingly illustrated by the British commissioner at Wei-hai-Wei in his report. "A Chinese child at birth is said to be one year old," he writes, "and after it has passed one year it is said to be two years old. Thus a child if born in the last month of the year may be said to be two years of age before it is 30 days old according to European reckoning. A child of 18 months' time of life since birth is reckoned by Chinese to be two ye rs or three years old, this depending on whether it was born in the first or second half of t ear. It is common for a Chinese l r to give a son the name of a girl, presumably to deceive the fates, it being considered easier to bring up a girl. There are many large undivided families in Wei-hai-Wei. The largest is that of a widow named Meng Yu Shih, whose family consists of 66, which, with one servant, makes 67 mouths to the common meal."—New York Tribune.

QUARTER'S WORTH

It was a very busy hour on Forty-second street, and the traffic "cops" were having their hands extremely full. Just as things were starting along, after a complicated blockade, a little newsboy dropped a quarter, and darted out into the street after it, under the nose of a motorman, who had just started his car.

The indignant motorman threw on the brakes with a jerk. As the car came to a sudden stop an automobile directly behind it turned sharply to one side to avoid a collision. It skidded, the hood coming under the startled noses of a pair of dray horses. One of the front tires blew up with a loud report.

This was too much for the horses, and they jumped forward together. In another minute the heavily loaded dray was careened down the sidewalk, the people scattering in terror. A lamp-post was knocked over, and the dray thrown violently in the other direction upset, flinging a couple of heavy boxes through a brilliantly lighted display window.

The broken electric lights flased for a minute, then the flimsy trimmings of the window caught fire, and in a few minutes the clanging of the fire department was added to the uproar, and the crowd extended for a full block in either direction.

When the fire was out and the wreckage was being cleared away, the newsboy, with his quarter safe in his pocket, turned away and started down the street, murmuring to himself: "Gee, I wonder what begun all dat fuss?"—New York Times.

NO KEYS OR KEYHOLES FOR THIS LOCK

The old joke about the clubman, returning home very late from his club and vowing that he couldn't open the front door because somebody had stolen the keyhole, is sadly out of date at last. Somebody has invented a keyless lock which requires neither key nor keyhole. The lock is moved by the knobs or buttons projecting at the right hand side. It can be set in such a way that only the members of the house to which it belongs can unlock it, and it is made in no fewer tha 38,005 combinations. It is unlocked by pulling one or more of the knobs upwards a certain number of times. The clubman will find his keyless lock very satisfactory, provided, of course, that he doesn't forget the combination.—New York World.

INDIAN "CUT-UP" AT 102

Giving his age as 102 years, John Michel, Nez Perce Indian, was lodged in the city jail following his arrest by Policeman Phelan for executing a lone war dance in front of 319 Main avenue shortly after 11 o'clock at night.

"How many moons?" asked Desk Sergt. Walter Hogan.

"Hundred-two," the Indian replied, after a time.

A single charge of drunk was placed against the old man. His only possession was a set of tweezers, used for shaving himself after the manner of the aborigine in his native State.—Spokane Dispatch to New York Herald.

AN UNPAID BILL

After neglecting the matter for 45 years Uncle Sam has finally acknowledged that he is indebted to Benjamin Havens of Iowa Falls, Iowa, in the sum of $6.27. Mr. Havens was a soldier in the war for the Union, and of the amount due him, $1.70 is for an unpaid balance of his pay for military service, while the remainder is an allowance for clothing which he never drew.

With Uncle Sam, however, it is one thing to acknowledge a debt and quite another thing to pay it. Not that he is really a mean old codger, but he is such a stickler for form that his financial transactions are always so bound and tied up with red tape that he is usually a mighty poor paymaster.

Wherefore Mr. Havens has been notified that there are no funds available for the payment of his account. The result is that his little claim for $6.27 will have to be provided for in a special appropriation bill, at a cost to the government of several times that amount in paper, printing, time and oratory.—New York Mail.

YOUNG GIRLS AND IRREVERENCE

The irreverence so condemned in modern young people is by no means wholly an vil. Submissive credulity does not mark the mind of the age; wholly an evil. Submissive credulity to make an intelligent girl "revere" character and conduct visibly unworthy. You may love incapable or unreasonable parents and comply with their wishes as far as is right; but belief in the infallibility of parents went with "the divine right of kings"—long ago, says Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman in the Pictorial Review.

Greater knowledge means less reverence for authority, but brings with it a new reverence for truth. Irreverent to parents the modern girl may be, and to those functionaries who claim respect on the mysterious ground of being "elders" (quite negligible old parties, some of them); but she is now beginning to learn reverence for the laws of nature and her real place and power in life.

She is no longer a docile, unpaid house servant or parlour assistant; but demands real work in the world, some business of her own, her own money, even, in some cases, her own home. This is called gross selfishness in a young woman, yet understood and respected in a young man.

The individual existence of our daughters is something we are slow to recognise. If they pass from father's home to husband's, we sentimentalise a little, but do not begrudge it. Yet when a young woman out of college seeks some avenue of useful employment, with a salary attached, she is considered to be neglecting her parents.

"The realisation of one's self," is sometimes held as the ideal in this movement—toward extra domestic life. Even if it were only that—why not? Surely a young woman has a life of her own to live, and a right to live it.

The true nature of the change is not in self-realisation, however, but in social service. That resistless current which is sweeping shoals of young women out of the home and into industry, is not by any means an outburst of new self-interest, but the rising demand of social development which calls for special service from everyone.

A girl who earns a salary and pays for a trained nurse for her mother does not necessarily lovt that parent less than a girl who insists on nursing her mother with her own hands—quite regardless of competence in the task.—Brooklyn Eagle.

COOKING HINTS

Meats to be roasted or broiled should be given the greatest amount of heat possible at first that the surface may be hardened and the juice retained.

Fresh meats should be put into boiling water except for soup, when cold water should be used.

Salt meats should be thoroughly washed and put on in cold water.

To fry lamb or veal, season with salt and pepper, dip in egg and then cracker dust or bread crumbs; fry in butter.

A large ham should be boiled four hours; a small ham two hours. The more gently meat boils the tenderer and more savory it will be.

A rag which has been tightly wrung out of crude oil and hung out doors for some time is excellent for use upon polished floors.

HAVE NO NATIONAL ANTHEM

Turkey and Italy are not the only European countries lacking a national anthem. Germany does not possess a national song in the true sense of the word. The "Wacht am Rhein" owed its popularity to its applicability during the Franco-Prussian war, but neither this nor "Heil dir im Siegeskrans" (set to the tune of our own "God Save the King") has ever been formally adopted as a national anthem. Spain, also, though she has many songs of local and party patriotism, has none that can be said to breathe a purely national feling.

TIT-BITS

COAL IN NEW MEXICO

The first record of coal production in New Mexico is contained in the issue of the first volume by the United States survey of "Mineral Resources of the United States," which covered the calendar year 1883. In that year the reported output was only 157,092 tons. From 1882 to 1910 the total production has amounted to 31,10,2818 short tons, which, including mining and other loss, represents a total exhaustion of about 46,600,000 tos.

According to the estimate of Marius R. Campbell of the United States Geological Survey, the original coal supply of New Mexico, was 163,780,000 tons, so that the exhaustion to date represents approximately 0.03 of 1 per cent. of the original suppll. Mr. Campbell's figures do not, however, include the contents of several newly discovered and extensive fields.

New Mexico's production for last year showed a notable increase over that of former years. The output for 1910, according to E. W. Parker, of the United States Geological Survey, was 3,508,231 short tons, with a value of $4,877,151, as against 2,801,128 tons in 1909, a gain of 707,193 tons, or 25'25 per cent. The record for both years was the best attained. The value of the product increased from $3,619,744 to $4,877,151, a gain of $1,25,7407, or nearly 35 per cent.

The increased production is attributed partly to the strike in the coal mines in the Middle States and the northern (Boulder) district of Colorado and partly to the growth of population and the settlement of new lands in New Mexico, Arisona and California—settlement that is creating a demand which will be permanent and growing. Both the bituminous and the sub-bituminous coals of New Mexico are rapidly growing in favour for domestic purposes, the bituminous coal being shipped from the Raton field to markets in Kansas, Oklahoma and even farther east, and the sub-bituminous coal of the Gallup district supplying the markets of the Southwest and Pacific coast. The domestic demand for New Mexico coal in 1910 was so great that the operators were unable to fill orders promptly.—Pittsburg Post.

BOILED CURRANT PUDDING

Pick apart and put through the food chopper one-quarter of a pound of beef suet. Mix with it one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter of a pound of cleaned currants and one-half of a poud of flour. Stir in just enough sweet milk to moisten to a stiff dough. Turn into a greased dish or mold with a tightly fitting lid, place on a trivet in a saucepan or kettle, pour boiling water round it, cover the kettle and keep the water at a continuous boil for two hours and a half.

THE "TEN DEMANDMENTS"

1. Don't lie. It wastes my time and yours. I am sure to catch you in the end, and that is the wrong end.
2. Watch your work, not the clock. A long day's work makes a long day short; and a short day's work makes my face long.
3. Give me more than I expect. I can afford to increase your pay if you increase my profits.
4. You owe so much to yourself you cannot afford to owe anybody else. Keep out of debt, or keep ut of my shops.
5. Dishonesty is never an accident. Good men, like good women, never see temptation when they meet it.
6. Mind your own business and in time you'll have a business of your own to mind.
7. Don't do anything here which hurts your self-respect. An employee who is willing to steal for me is willing to steal from me.
8. It is none of my business what you do at night. But if dissipation affects what you do the next day, and you do half as much as I demand, you'll last half as long as you hoped.
9. Don't tell me what I'd like to hear, but what I ought to hear. I don't want a valet to my vanity, but one for my dollars.
10. Don't kick if I kick. If you're worth while correcting you're worth while keeping. I don't waste time cutting specks out of rotten apples.

TRANS-AFRICAN RAILWAY

The prospect of the vigorous exploitation of North and West Africa, as the result of the Franco-German settlement of the Morocco-French Congo question, has evoked a proposal for the construction of a vast trans-African railway, to do for the African continent what the Union Pacific has accomplished for the Western States of America.

Mr. Andre Berthelot, formerly a deputy of the French chamber, outlines the scheme, in the Matin, as a railway starting from Algiers or Oran and extending to Katanga to join the Cape-to-Cairo line, which he argues ought to be modified to join Algeria instead of Egypt, with the cape.

The trans-African line would have two branches, one running from the Sahara to Niberia, joining West Africa with Algeria, and the other connecting the western Mediterranean section of the continent with the Indian Ocean by means of the Uganda railway.

M. Berthelot estimates that the railway will reduce the distance to London from Johannesburg to nine days, and to Paris from Lake Chad to four. He points out that the British have already built 1,860 miles of the Cape-to-Cairo line, the Belgians 310 miles of track, and the French, in Algeria, 372 miles. Thus, of the 6,572 miles from Algiers to the cape, only some 4,000 miles remain to be built. He regard it a a perfectly feasible scheme, considering the trans-Siberian railway, from Moscow to Vladivostock, which is 5,332 miles long.—Paris Correspondence Philadelphia Ledger.

A LOSING PACE

As the man from the West, in tow of a New York friend, stood absorbed in the moving panorama of the beautiful park, along the nearest bridal path came a pretty girl on a satin-skinned horse. Behind her, at the proper distance, came the groom.

"Say, what does he expect her to do—whistle him up 'side of her?" he asked, in a withering tone. "A man must be mighty bashful to ride behind his girl like that. 'Tain't muche the way we do out West."—Youth's Companion.

A PARDONABLE MISTAKE

"The cold weather is coming on, and we shall soon see some very remarkable cold weather motoring suits."

The speaker sat in his New York office. He resumed:

"I'll be glad when cold weather motoring clothes are made more sightly. They give us such a shaggy look now, don't they? Did you ever hear about the performing bear?

"Well, a country hotel, a good deal frequented by motorists, took in a showman and his performing bear, and one morning the bear escaped from the stable.

"Everybody fled before the animal. The hotel man, however, pursued it courageously. It entered the hotel, mounted the stairway, pushed open a bedroom door and vanished.

"Then the hotel man, close behind, heard from the bedroom an angry exclamation in a feminine voice and the words:

"George, dear, how often have I forbidden you to come into my room without knocking—and in your automobile coat, too."—Washington Star.

TRIPOLI'S HISTORIC BACKGROUND

Since the world began the arm of Italy has reached out into the Mediterranean toward Africa, its finger pointing straight at Tripoli. Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Byzantines, Arabs, Spaniards and Turks followed the suggestion of that finger in turn, but of them all only the Arab and the Turk remain. In every case a colonial empire was the mirage which beckoned to those land-hungry peoples from behind the golden haze which hangs over the African coastline, and in every case their African adventures ended in disappointment and disaster. After an interim of centuries, in which the roads and ramparts and reservoirs built along that shore by those primeval pioneers have crumbled into dust, the troop-laden transports of a regenerated Italy have followed in the wake of those Greek galleys, those Roman triremes, and those Spanish caravels. Undeterred by the recollection of her disastrous Abyssinian adventure, Italy is imbued with the idea, just as were her powerful predecessors, that her commercial and political interests demand the extension of her dominion across the Middle sea.

Ever since the purple sails of Phoenicia first flaunted along its coast, the history of Tripolitania has been one of invasion and conquest. In the very dawn of history the galleys of Greece dropped anchor off this shore, in the belief that it was the Garden of the Hesperides, and the vestiges of their colony of Cyrenaica lure the archaeologists to-day. The Greeks retreated before Carthage's colonial expansion, and the Carthaginians gave way in turn to the conquering Romans, who, because of its three-leagued cities of Oea, Sabrata and Leptis, named their new possession Tripolis, just as Decapolis signified the region of ten cities and Pentapoli of five. Christianity was scarcely four centuries old when the hordes of fierce-faced, skin-clad Vandals, sweeping down from their Germanic forests, overran a decadent Italy and carried fire and sword and torture from end to end of the Mediterranean. Before another century had rolled around, however, Belisarius ,the great captain of Byzantium, had broken the Vandal power forever, and the troubled land of Tripolitania once again came under the shadow of the cross. Then the wave of Arab conquest came, rolling across North Africa, until it broke upon the coasts of Spain, and supplanting the feeble Christianity of the natives of all this region with the vigorous and fanatical faith of Islam. Though Ferdinand the Catholic, not content with expelling the Moors from Spain, continued the crusade against the infidel by capturing the Tripolitan capital, the Knights of St. John, to whom he turned the city over, surrendered to the beleaguering Turks just as the sixteenth century had reached its turning point, and Turkish it has remained, at least in name, ever since.—American Review of Reviews.

HOW AN ACTOR WAS MADE

Melyn Arbuckle, the actor, was invited to a dinner to meet a few members of Congress the last time he played in Washington, says the Sunday Magazine. He told this story:

"I am from Bowie County, Texas, and my presence here to-night is peculiarly appropriate, because I, too, once ran for office, one of the highest and most distinguished offices in the gift of the people, that of justice of the peace. Toward the end of my campaign I made my greatest speech. Standing on a goods box in a crossroads store, I told my constituents all about Marcus Aurelius and Plutarch. I dwelt on the importance of securing justice for all. I raved, I roared. Demosthenes would have envied me.

"Then my opponent rose and said, 'Voters, you know I own a big grocery store a few miles up the road. I am about to open a new and long line of credit. If I am elected. I shall be glad to see you all at my store.'"

Arbuckle paused and surveyed his political hearers sadly. "Gentlemen," he concluded mournfully, "that 'line' made me go on the stage for a living."

SNAKE DIDN'T MIND HOT WATER

Mrs. James Phillips, of near Odell, had a terrific encounter with a 6-foot blacksnake in her home early the other morning. She was alone in the house, her husband having gone to a nearby farm. She had just sat down to eat her breakfast when she noticed the wriggling snake near the door.

Horrified, the woman ran into an adjoining room. She got a bucket of scalding water and threw it on the reptile. But this seemed to have no effect on the snake. It chased her into the front room. The woman again threw a bucket of scalding water on the snake, but this made it fight all the harder. It struck at her several times, and finally chased her from the house.

For fully an hour she fought the reptile, and finally killed it with a club.—Pittsburgh Dispatch to New York World.

SAFEST STYLE IN DANCING

Far more important, in the eyes of fashionable Europe, than the wrangles of diplomats about the fate of Italy and Turkey is the convention of dancing masters in Paris to determine what styles for the coming season are to be. Delegates to the conclave are of the opinion ballroom dancing is becoming simpler than ever before and that the swaying, rhythmical trot dances of South America are the most popular movements of the day. There was a time when such intricate figures as gavottes and sarabandes were danced by society folk, but dances so sedate, it seems, long have been abandoned for the swinging glide of the Boston and the curious twinings of the Turkey Trot, and its many imitations. The modern masurka, a Louis XV. waltsminuet, and the Argentine five-step have finally been settled on as the most appropriate dances for the coming winter.—New York Press.

TAKING THE CHINESE CENSUS

Difficulties of census work among Chinese are amusingly illustrated by the British commissioner at Wei-hai-Wei in his report. "A Chinese child at birth is said to be one year old," he writes, "and after it has passed one year it is said to be two years old. Thus a child if born in the last month of the year may be said to be two years of age before it is 30 days old according to European reckoning. A child of 18 months' time of life since birth is reckoned by Chinese to be two years or three years old, this depending on whether it was born in the first or second half of the year. It is common for a Chinese mother to give a son the name of a girl, presumably to deceive the fates, it being considered easier to bring up a girl. There are many large undivided families in Wei-hai-Wei. The largest is that of a widow named Meng Yu Shih, whose family consists of 66, which, with one servant, makes 67 mouths to the common meal."—New York Tribune.

QUARTER'S WORTH

It was a very busy hour on Forty-second street, and the traffic "cops" were having their hands extremely full. Just as things were starting along, after a complicated blockade, a little newsboy dropped a quarter, and darted out into the street after it, under the nose of a motorman, who had just started his car.

The indignant motorman threw on the brakes with a jerk. As the car came to a sudden stop an automobile directly behind it turned sharply to one side to avoid a collision. It skidded, the hood coming under the startled noses of a pair of dray horses. One of the front tires blew up with a loud report.

This was too much for the horses, and they jumped forward together. In another minute the heavily loaded dray was careened down the sidewalk, the people scattering in terror. A lamp-post was knocked over, and the dray thrown violently in the other direction upset, flinging a couple of heavy boxes through a brilliantly lighted display window.

The broken electric lights fused for a minute, then the flimsy trimmings of the window caught fire, and in a few minutes the clanging of the fire department was added to the uproar, and the crowd extended for a full block in either direction.

When the fire was out and the wreckage was being cleared away, the newsboy, with his quarter safe in his pocket, turned away and started down the street, murmuring to himself: "Gee, I wonder what begun all dat fuss?"—New York Times.

NO KEYS OR KEYHOLES FOR THIS LOCK

The old joke about the clubman, returning home very late from his club and vowing that he couldn't open the front door because somebody had stolen the keyhole, is sadly out of date at last. Somebody has invented a keyless lock which requires neither key nor keyhole. The lock is moved by the knobs or buttons projecting at the right hand side. It can be set in such a way that only the members of the house to which it belongs can unlock it, and it is made in no fewer tha 88,005 combinations. It is unlocked by pulling one or more of the knobs upwards a certain number of times. The clubman will find his keyless lock very satisfactory, provided, of course, that he doesn't forget the combination.—New York World.

INDIAN "CUT-UP" AT 102

Giving his age as 102 years, John Michel, Nez Perce Indian, was lodged in the city jail following his arrest by Policeman Phelan for executing a lone war dance in front of 319 Main avenue shortly after 11 o'clock at night.

"How many moons?" asked Desk Sergt. Walter Hogan.

"Hundred-two," the Indian replied, after a time.

A single charge of drunk was placed against the old man. His only possession was a set of tweesers, used for shaving himself after the manner of the aborigine in his native State.—Spokane Dispatch to New York Herald.

AN UNPAID BILL

After neglecting the matter for 45 years Uncle Sam has finally acknowledged that he is indebted to Benjamin Havens of Iowa Falls, Iowa, in the sum of $6.27. Mr. Havens was a soldier in the war for the Union, and of the amount due him, $1.70 is for an unpaid balance of his pay for military service, while the remainder is an allowance for clothing which he never drew.

With Uncle Sam, however, it is one thing to acknowledge a debt and quite another thing to pay it. Not that he is really a mean old codger, but he is such a stickler for form that his financial transactions are always so bound and tied up with red tape that he is usually a mighty poor paymaster.

Wherefore Mr. Havens has been notified that there are no funds available for the payment of his account. The result is that his little claim for $6.27 will have to be provided for in a special appropriation bill, at a cost to the government of several times that amount in paper, printing, time and oratory.—New York Mail.

YOUNG GIRLS AND IRREVERENCE

The irreverence so condemned in modern young people is by no means wholly an vil. Submissive credulity does not mark the mind of the age; wholly an evil. Submissive credulity to make an intelligent girl "revere" character and conduct visibly unworthy. You may love incapable or unreasonable parents and comply with their wishes as far as is right; but belief in the infallibility of parents went with "the divine right of kings"—long ago, says Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman in the Pictorial Review.

Greater knowledge means less reverence for authority, but brings with it a new reverence for truth. Irreverent to parents the modern girl may be, and to those functionaries who claim respect on the mysterious ground of being "elders" (quite negligible old parties, some of them); but she is now beginning to learn reverence for the laws of nature and her real place and power in life.

She is no longer a docile, unpaid house servant or parlour assistant; but demands real work in the world, some business of her own, her own money, even, in some cases, her own home. This is called gross selfishness in a young woman, yet understood and respected in a young man.

The individual existence of our daughters is something we are slow to recognize. If they pass from father's home to husband's, we sentimentalize a little, but do not begrudge it. Yet when a young woman out of college seeks some avenue of useful employment, with a salary attached, she is considered to be neglecting her parents.

"The realization of one's self," is sometimes held as the ideal in this movement—toward extra domestic life. Even if it were only that—why not? Surely a young woman has a life of her own to live, and a right to live it.

The true nature of the change is not in self-realization, however, but in social service. That resistless current which is sweeping shoals of young women out of the home and into industry, is not by any means an outburst of new self-interest, but the rising demand of social development which calls for special service from everyone.

A girl who earns a salary and pays for a trained nurse for her mother does not necessarily lovt that parent less than a girl who insists on nursing her mother with her own hands—quite regardless of competence in the task.—Brooklyn Eagle.

COOKING HINTS

Meats to be roasted or broiled should be given the greatest amount of heat possible at first that the surface may be hardened and the juice retained.

Fresh meats should be put into boiling water except for soup, when cold water should be used.

Salt meats should be thoroughly washed and put on in cold water.

To fry lamb or veal, season with salt and pepper, dip in egg and then cracker dust or bread crumbs; fry in butter.

A large ham should be boiled four hours; a small ham two hours. The more gently meat boils the tenderer and more savory it will be.

A rag which has been tightly wrung out of crude oil and hung out doors for some time is excellent for use upon polished floors.

HAVE NO NATIONAL ANTHEM

Turkey and Italy are not the only European countries lacking a national anthem. Germany does not possess a national song in the true sense of the word. The "Wacht am Rhein" owed its popularity to its applicability during the Franco-Prussian war, but neither this nor "Heil dir im Siegeskrans" (set to the tune of our own "God Save the King") has ever been formally adopted as a national anthem. Spain, also, though she has many songs of local and party patriotism, has none that can be said to breathe a purely national feling.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON IN THE WITNESS BOX

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Booker T. Washington, noted negro educatr and funder of the famous Tuskagee Institute, was possessed of a most unfortunate memry when he took the stand yesterday to testify against Henry A. Ulrich, the white man who beat Dr. Washington when he found him in the vestibule of his house on March 19. Dr. Washington could not even remember the name of the person he was seeking when he entered th building.

Ulrich was placed on trial yesterday before Jusices Moss, Zejler, and Ryan, in Special Sessions. He was charged with assaulting the negro pedagogue. He was defended by Jas. T. Moore, one of the finest contributrs t Tuskagee when Dr. Washingtn founded the school.

Mrs. Mary Alverez, a resident in the apartment house at 113½ West Sixty-third Street, where the assault took place, estified that she told the policeman who arrested Washington that she was glad he arrested "that burglar." She said he had been "hanging arund" he house all evening. Mrs. Alveres admitted that she saw Ulrich strike Dr. Washington with a stick after he had knocked the negro down. Dr. Washington, she said, had offered to explain to Ulrich wh he was, but Ulrich paid no attention to him.

Policeman James Tierney, who arrested Washington, corroborated her in the declaratin that Washington ffered to tell Ulrich who he was. He said he had arresed Washington on Ulrich's complaint that he was an alleged burglar, and that he had insulted Mrs. Ulrich. Dr. Washington, he said, was sober.

Dr. Washington, plainly nervous and ill at ease, was next called. He said that the assault occurred at 9.15 in the evening. "I was in the vestibule of the building, looking at the names on he doorplates, when this man came in, seized me by the throat, hurled me to the ground, and beat me with a cane. I said to him: "'Don't beat me that way. If I have violated the law, call a policeman.' He kept on beating me and I ran. When I reached Central Park west I was so weak I fell, and then two men beat me. I do not know what the second man was. He fled when the pliceman arrived."

"What were you doing in the building?" asked Justice Moss.

"I was examining the doorplates," said Washington.

"Who were you looking for?"

"I do not recall. It has been several months, and I do not know for whom I was looking."

"Did you tell newspaper reporters you were looking for a Mr. McClure, a white man, who was connected with Tuskagee?" asked Moore.

"I do not think so," said Washington.

"but I od not recall."

Washington admitted that he had been to the house thirty minutes before the assault and had inspected the nameplates. "I thought I saw a name that was similar to the one I was looking for," he said, "and rang that bell, but was told the party I wanted was not there. I walked up and down for half an hour and then returned. I again rang the bell once or twice, but could not find the person I was seeking."

The state mad objection when Washington was asked if he was looking for a white or coloured person. Washington was not compelled to answer.

URIC ACID SUFFERING

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Story Of Gold Mine

BRIDGEPORT, CAL., NOV. 1.—An old assay certificate, found on the body of J. J. D. Miller, who died in the shaft of his mining claim, 12 miles north of here, told two stories, when it was deciphered in the coroner's office here to-day. One side told of gold in Miller's shaft. The other bore the penciled record of the man's seven-day imprisonment, ended by death at noon, Friday, October 13.

The body was found last Saturday with the left leg pinned against the side of the fifteen-foot shaft by a mass of rock. Miller stood upright with his head thrown back. The shaft is slightly inclined, and he must have seen the sun which stood on the meridian, as he wrote the last lines of his diary:

"Friday, noon—The thirteenth day, no hope." The certificate was folded, and had been replaced in his pocket book. The daily record follows:

"October 6—Frank Yparraguirre, Sweet Water: If help does not come, send this message to M. C. Miller, wife, Harrisonburg, Va., and wire what to do with the body.—J. J. D Miller."

"This occurred Friday morning, October 6th. It is now Saturday noon. No help yet. Why did this come?"

"Sunday night—It is cold and long. God help me. I forgive mother.

"Monday—It is noon. Why did Dick forget? A drink of cold water would taste good. Am getting weak."

"Tuesday night—The end is near. Don't see how Dick can forget me."

"Wednesday night—Guess to-night will be the last; no hope, the end near."

Thursday's record is illegible.

"Friday noon—The thirteenth—no hope."

The "Dick" referred to is Richard Barnes, a teamster on the Yparraguirre ranch, where the two men had been employed together. The body was found by Barnes.

Miller came to California about a year ago from Virginia. An unsuccessful attempt was made by the authorities to communicate with his widow in Harrisonburg to-day.

PROGRESSIVE PLATFORM ADVANCED BY THE LIBERAL PARTY IN ONTARIO

Mr. N. W. Rowell, the New Leader, Issues an Address to the Electors in Which He Outlines the Reform His Party Will Endeavour to Bring About---Attitude of the Liberal Party Clearly Defined on Matters of Vital Interest to the People.

Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., recently chosen as the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, has put forth the following platform, after consultation with the committee appointed at the recent meeting of the Ontario Reform Association:

To the Electors of Ontario:

By the action of the Government the Legislative Assembly of this Province has been dissolved before the expiry of the Legislative term, and the electors are called upon to bear the trouble and expense of an unnecessary general election during an inclement season of the year. Nominations take place December 4, the election on December 11

The Government of Sir James Whitney has disappointed the progressive forces in our Province by its failure to grasp the urgency and importance of the settlement and development of New Ontario, by its failure to devise an adequate policy to promote the great agricultural interests of the Province, and by its failure to manifest practical sympathy with progressive measures of social and moral reform.

The Liberal party considers the development of New Ontario one of the supreme opportunities and most urgent obligations of the Government, requiring the whole time and thought of a responsible Minister of the Crown; and it believes that its successful development means increased prosperity to every citizen of Ontario. We recognize that agriculture is the basic industry of this Province, and that an intelligent and far-sighted policy demands a great advance on all progressive lines.

Even more important than the successful material development of the Province is the promotion of the social, moral and industrial welfare of the people, and the development among us of the highest type of citizenship. The rapid growth of industrial centres has created new and important problems with which our Provincial Government should deal. It is the duty of the Government, by wise measures to contribute to social educational and moral reform.

Holding this Liberal faith, as leader of the Liberal party of this Province I beg to submit the following statement of policy, and to appeal to all electors, irrespective of party, to rally to its support:

NEW ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT.

In order that the Government may enter seriously upon the problem of the settlement and development of New Ontario, we propose the creation of a Department of Immigration and Colonization, to be presided over by a Minister of the Crown, who shall devote his whole time and energies to this important work, among other matters: to the promotion of settlement; building of roads; insuring other necessary transportation facilities; providing drainage requirements; assisting pioneer settlers to secure loans to a limited extent on the security of the lands occupied by them, repayable over a term of years, giving special assistance to pioneer schools.

Our further policy is the maintenance of the colonization character of the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway; the protection of shippers and settlers from inequitable rates by subjecting the railway to regulation by the Dominion Railway Commission and the general railway law; removing just grounds of complaint by permitting actions at law against the railway without the necessity of first obtaining permission from the Attorney-General; placing the railway with all practicable speed to a suitable outlet to Hudson Bay, and branches as required for the development of the country.

The encouragement of mining by a reduction of the fees for prospecting and recording, by insuring reasonable transportation facilities, and by giving increased stability to mining titles. The securing for underground miners an eight-hour day.

The boundary between Ontario and Manitoba should be so delimited as to give Ontario a suitable port on Hudson Bay for ocean-going vessels.

AGRICULTURE.

We believe that the people of Ontario view with grave concern the serious decline in the rural population of this Province, as disclosed by the recent census, and we propose the immediate appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the causes thereof, and to suggest measures which, in the opinion of the Commission, should be taken to prevent any further decline and promote the general agricultural interests of the Province. The Commission should be specially instructed to consider and report upon adequate technical instruction in farming in our rural schools and special technical education in fruit-growing districts.

In the meantime we propose to adopt measures:

To bring about the active immigration into this Province of suitable people for settlement and employment upon our farm lands; to induce land-seeking farmers to remain in the Province by locating in New Ontario instead of emigrating to western Canada.

To secure the building of a good-roads system throughout Ontario by an issue of Provincial bonds or by other assistance on an adequate scale thereby facilitating traffic and insuring quick delivery of farm and garden products.

To extend in every feasible way public light, power and telephone services to the farms of the Province.

To provide for the establishment of suitable demonstration farms through out Ontario; to promote Ontario's apple and general fruit growing industry by establishing demonstration orchards, and to advertise widely the important and growing apple industry by holding an annual Provincial Apple Show.

To appoint a sufficient number of Provincial inspectors with authority to stamp out the evils arising from noxious weeds, insect pests and diseases of orchard trees.

To make Guelph Agricultural College more useful by enlarging its sphere of experimental work, especially in stock-breeding.

TAXATION.

Social justice demands the removal of existing inequalities in taxation, and we propose the amendment of the Assessment Act to permit municipalities to exempt improvements from taxation either in whole or in part.

To provide that the property of railway and other public utility corporations shall contribute to the revenues of municipalities and of the Province on a basis of assessment and taxation in every respect equal to the assessment and taxation of the property of private citizens.

SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL BETTERMENT.

The betterment of the social and industrial condition of the masses of the people shall be one of our supreme concerns.

The evils of intemperance constitute a grave social peril. During the ensuing Parliamentary term we will consider the best form of legislation to deal effectively with these evils, and the electors will have an opportunity of passing upon our proposals at the following general election.

We will immediately abolish the three-fifths vote in local option contests and substitute a simple majority.

During the continuance of the license system we will secure the removal of its administration from political influence.

We promise the passage of a measure to provide for compensation of workmen injured in our industries, and to their dependents where such injuries result in death, modelled after the recent legislation in Great Britain, and to insure in all cases the payment of such compensation.

Special investigation and supervision by the Province of matters affecting the health and well-being of industrial workers and communities; encouragement of town planning and the prevention of the growth of congested areas; the suppression of tuberculosis and the avoidance of occupational diseases.

EDUCATION.

If the youth of this Province are to receive an education to fit them for citizenship, a more progressive and adequate educational policy is urgently needed. We propose:

To promote a more co-operative relation between the primary schools, the high schools and the universities; more liberal grants in aid of primary education; the promotion of industrial training and technical instruction in urban and rural communities; the restoration of model schools, with a view to increase the supply and efficiency of teachers.

To provide through adequate training schools a sufficient supply of competent teachers, and thus insure under proper regulations that the pupils in every school in the Province shall receive a thorough English education.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP AND CONSERVATION.

We believe in, and will support, the public ownership and operation of public utilities, and especially the utilization of waterpowers throughout the Province for the generation and distribution of electricity; also the acquisition and operation of telephone lines.

A scientific policy of forestry, including the necessary reforestation of suitable Crown lands; the conservation of our timber resources by the revesting in the Crown of berths containing young pine timber; an adequate system of fire ranging to protect Crown timber; the sale of Crown timber by public auction rather than by private sale or tender; assistance financially, upon the principle adopted in regard to drainage, to municipalities that desire to purchase and reforest the thousands of acres of waste land now existing and which increase yearly in many portions of the Province.

We condemn the alienation by the Whitney Government of millions of acres of the public domain by way of land grants to railway corporations

ONTARIO RAILWAY AND MUNICIPAL BOARD.

There should be an enlargement of the powers and reorganization of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, so as to render it an influential and effective tribunal in the public interest.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

It will be our duty to combat at all times by legislative enactment and administrative action such trusts, mergers and other combinations of capital as stifle competition, increase the cost of living and impair political independence.

We will abolish the right of the Government to deny access to the courts to those who claim to have suffered wrong or damage through the action of the Government or any Commission appointed thereunder.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

The spoils and patronage systems are inimical to the highest efficiency of the civil service and to the best interests of the country. We propose the creation of a Civil Service Commission, and that appointments and promotions in the service shall be by merit after competitive examination.

ELECTORAL REFORM.

We will prohibit under adequate penalties all corporations over which the Province has jurisdiction from making campaign contributions; require the publication of all campaign contributions to candidates and political organizations; and provide for the appointment of a public prosecutor as in England, whose duty it shall be to intervene in contested elections to see that all who are guilty of electoral fraud or corruption are duly prosecuted.

I shall take an early opportunity of discussing before the electors the policies herein outlined, and I appeal to all who believe in these policies to give to the Liberal candidates throughout this Province their cordial support.

Yours respectfully,
NEWTON W. ROWELL.

NO OPERATION WAS EVER NEEDED HERE

BECAUSE MRS. GOODINE USED DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Doctor said she would have to undergo operation, but Dodd's Kidne yPills cured her.

Central Kingsclear, York Co., N.B., Nov. 6.—(Special.)—"The doctor said I would have to undergo an operation." So said Mrs. J. V. Goodine, of this place. But she smiled as she made the remark, for all need of the dreaded operation had vanished. Mrs. Goodine used Dodd's Kidney Pills and is a well woman. Given in brief and in her own words, Mrs. Goodine's experience is as follows:

"I was very miserable with Kidney Disease and unable to do my own work. The doctor said I would have to undergo an operation. After using three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills I was all better and able to do my work. This statement is true, as you can easily prove by enquiring among my neighbours."

CHARGE OF DAMAGING DISMISSED

Interesting Case at Police Court This Morning When Tenant Was Charged With Injuring Property

MUCH EVIDENCE

A case which occupied almost the entire forenoon was tried at the police court this morning with the result that the charge was dismissed.

Fred Bunton was charged with unlawfully and maliciously injuring the property of Edward Ferguson at 220 Edinburgh street. A number of witnesses were called and considerable evidence was taken ,but the plaintiff was unable to prove his case with the above result. Bunton elected summary trial.

The evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses was to the effect that during the defendant's tenantship of his house, he tore down a shed, tore paper off the walls, broke a hole in the ceiling and left the house without paying two months' rent, without giving a month's notice and leaving the house in a filthy condition.

Defendant admitted tearing down the shed, but stated that he had got permission to do so, as the lumber was to be used for building a fence on the property and making some other repairs. He said that the rain came through the roof, causing the plaster to fall off, which accounted for the hole in the ceiling. He did not deny that perhaps the children had pulled off some loose paper.

The plaintiff was unable to prove that he had not given permission to tear down the shed, and as the defendant had a witness who stated that he heard him getting permission, the case had to be dismissed. A former tenant gave evidence to the effect that when he lived in the house it was in good condition, but when he looked around since the tenant had left, it was in a terrible state.

A carpenter inspected the place and furnished some evidence regarding the cost of repairs. He detailed the costs for the separate damages, and in all the amount necessary to put the house in shape amounted to $31.50.

The magistrate dismissed the case, at the same time advising the tenant to pay the rent before he got into further trouble.

Made Good His Boast

Chicago Baker Shot by Robbers as a Result

CHICAGO, NOV. 6. — Charles Schultz, a baker, made a boast last night that he would not be afraid to "tackle an armed robber," and to-day lies perhaps fatally wounded in a hospital as a sequel. Schultt had hardly spoken when two highwaymen, armed with revolvers, walked into a Wentworth avenue saloon and ordered the baker and several others to throw up their hands. True to his word, Schultz sprang upon one of the thugs and tried to wrench the weapon from him. In the struggle he was shot twice. Schultz lives next door to the saloon. His wife heard the shots, and running to the place to see if her husband was injured, was knocked down by one of the thieves, both of whom escaped.

VICEROY SUICIDES AND TROOPS KILL EACH OTHER

Serious State of Affairs in Nanking---No One in Authority to Direct Operations---Foreigners Residing in the City Have Fled Into the Open Country.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NANKING, CHINA, NOV. 7.— The Viceroy of Nanking has committed suicide and the situation is serious. The troops are shooting each other down in open streets and nobody is in authority to direct the operations. The foreigners fled to the open country this morning.

CHAIRMAN SEVERE ON THE RAILWAY MEN

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, NOV. 7.— In connection with the Canadian Northern entrance into Toronto, Chairman Mabee of the Dominion Railway Commission this morning made the railway representatives sit up. He said: "I cannot understand why the railway companies do not act like white men. When a man becomes a railway man he seems to become a law himself, but so far as I am concerned, I intend that railway companies shall obey the law like any other individual." The chairman's remarks were brought about by the allegation of the Grand Trunk that the Canadian Northern had trespassed on their property.

GENERAL OF IMPERIAL ARMY ASSASSINATED THIS MORNING

Special Wire to The Examiner.

PEKIN, NOV. 7.— The imperial palace is guarded by a division of ten thousand, all faithful Manchus. General Wu, one of the most brilliant of the young military leaders, recently appointed governor of Shansi, was assassinated in his tent this morning at Shikia, Chuang. He was on his way to persuade the rebels to accept the terms of the government, but the Manchus suspected he was at heart a revolutionist and so made away with him. There is little change in the general situation, the Imperialists losing one day and gaining the next.

PEKIN, CHINA, NOV. 7.— There was great excitement throughout this city this morning when smoke issued from a building in the centre of the city, supposed to have been occupied by revolutionists from Junta. It was rumoured around that this was the signal for a general uprising within the city and there was a panic which resulted in the crushing to death of four persons and injuring twenty others. Order was eventually restored by the appearance of Imperial and foreign troops in the streets. In addition to the assassination of General Wu, word comes this morning of the killing of a number of other officers. It seems that some regiments are alternately imperialists, then revolutionary, then returning to imperialist, slaughtering their officers at every turn of opinion.

GRAIN STILL STANDIN IN STOOK IN THE WEST

Mr. R. McGill Hood, of 525 George street, who has just returned from Vancouver and various points in the west, gave the Examiner the benefit of some of his experiences, this morning. Mr. Hood is a representative of Messrs. Palter Bros., Hat and Cap Manufacturers, of Toronto, and has been travelling throughout the west since the early summer. In conversation with a reporter, he said:

There is an average of over one-third of the grain still standing in the stook, as the west is short of mills. This is a great drawback. However, there is an increase over last year already, as the crops were so abundant.

The activity prevailing along the coast is immense. Vancouver is growing faster than any city in the country, and this statement is confirmed by the census returns. Victoria is also going ahead very rapidly, while the shipping along the Pacific coast is increasing wonderfully.

The Canadian Northern Railway is making active preparations for camps along the Thompson and Fraser Rivers. The C.P.R. and the C.N.R. run parallel along either side of these rivers.

"Calgary is perhaps the greatest of the prairie cities," continued Mr. Hood. "In this city the C.P.R. is building a very large hotel, the foundations of which have just been laid. Business has been good all through the west this summer."

"Were you ever fortunate enough to meet any of your old Peterborough acquaintances," asked the reporter.

"Very often," was the reply. "In Edmonton there is quite a colony of Peterborough people."

Miss Agnes Dickson, Missionary from China and formerly of the Y. W. C. A. Peterboro, will address a meeting of women in St. Andrew's School Hall on Thursday evening Nov. 9th at 8 o'clock. All ladies of the city welcome. Silver collection.

A Terrific Wind Storm On Lakes

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., NOV. 7.— Despatches from Lakes Huron, Erie and Ontario ports tell of terrific wind storms last night and this morning, making havoc among the shipping in some of the docks, while the vessels have reached port after fearful buffetings. It is not thought that any craft went down in the open lakes.

Snake In Partridge

BROCKVILLE, NOV. 6.—A clergyman of Bishop's Mills shot a partridge and in dressing it made the peculiar find of a live green snake in the intestines. The mouth of the reptile was lodged near the stomach, and it was apparently sustained by absorbing a share of the bird's daily food. The partridge was fat and in good condition, although the snake measured over two feet in length.

CELLAR FLOODED

A drain near the Market Square gained access to the basement of the stores under the market hall, some time within the past week, with the result that the public lavatory and basements of the stores in the market building, were flooded and some damage was done. Four men have been engaged at pumping out the water, yesterday and to-day, the task being completed this afternoon, but as yet no trace of the inlet of the water can be found.

KILLS THE DANDRUFF GERM

Stops Falling Hair—Others Imitate and Make Similar Claims, but the Genuine and Original Dandruff Germ Destroyer is Newbro's Herpicide

The discovery of the dandruff germ as the cause of all hair troubles is not a recent event. Prof. Unna gave the germ theory to the world in 1887 and two years later Sabouraud by his experiments with a rabbit proved beyond a doubt the actual existence of this germ.

On the heels of this establishment of the germ theory came the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide. This was the first and only remedy for the destruction of the dandruff germ.

There have been other preparations alleged to kill this germ, stop falling hair and itching of the scalp. But Newbro's Herpicide really does these things. For this reason it has long been known as the original remedy, and the only one that is genuine.

Don't be fooled by preparations which are trading upon the marvelous success of Herpicide. Remember you take no chances with Newbro's Herpicide. It is absolutely guaranteed.

For sale by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops.

The Herpicide Company, of Detroit, Mich., Dept. R., will send a sample bottle and booklet upon receipt of 10c. in postage.

ONTARIO LIBERAL PLATFORM.

In another column is printed the platform of the Liberal party in Ontario, as promulgated by the new leader, Mr. N. W. Rowell. In the first place it is a platform of principles, and founded upon the principles upon which the Liberal party stands. A perusal of it will show that if it is applied to the government of Ontario, it will mean advanced and progressive legislation and live and effective administration. It is claimed that it overlaps some of the planks of the Whitney programme; Possibly. But with this difference—it proposes to do in these respects, what Sir James Whitney proposed and promised to do, and has not done. The Liberal policy recognizes that the people have rights to be respected. That the people should be ruled by their representatives and that the days of one-man, absolute, autocratic rule, will be shortened, if not abolished outright. The people will be allowed to say by their votes, what they wish to do in the matter of assessment of property and the imposition of taxation, they themselves have to pay; and all through Mr. Rowell's declaration of policy runs the thread of recognition of popular rights and suggestions as to giving them effect. The public interest is the paramount motive. The platform of the Liberal party is nothing new; principles do not change; changing conditions may affect the mode of application, but the application is the thing. The Whitney government has done a great deal of great talking, and has done little else in many important respects during the past seven years. The people want the benefit of a policy of doing something, in line with popular wishes and requirements.

OFF TO A GOOD START.

Hon. W. T. White, Finance Minister, is reaping where he has not sown; and he enters upon the administration of the Dominion finances with everything in the best of condition. Hon. Mr. Fielding has achieved a post-mortem (official) surplus, thus keeping up the habit of fifteen years. If the increase in Dominion revenue for the remainder of the current fiscal year keeps up the pace of the first seven months there will be a surplus of thirty-five millions to report; a surplus within one million of the entire revenue of the Dominion fifteen years ago. The revenue for the first seven months of the year amounts to $78,21,178, an increase of ten and a half millions over the corresponding period of last year. At the past rate of increase the revenue for the full twelve months of 1911-12 will amount to 126 million dollars. The surplus for the first seven months of the year amounts to about 21 millions of dollars, and at this rate will amount to 36 millions at the end of the year. Hon. Mr. White will have no need to take lessons from Hon. Geo. E. Foster's expense, in borrowing money to meet current expenses. If Mr .White and his colleagues in the Borden Government can keep Canada straight upon the high way of prosperity, as they found it, a great deal will be forgiven them.

AUTOCRATIC RULE.

Sir James Whitney has held power by a large majority of legislative supporters. No Ontario premier has ever had, in this regard, so magnificent an opportunity of giving application to a grand constructive policy such as a province of Ontario's resources and possibilities requires and demands. He has not used his power for such a purpose. He has simply plodded on in the rut of rotuine legislation and administration. There is no department of his government that has come anywise near living up to its opportunities and plain duty. Instead of using his big majority to give the province advance administration and constructive legislation, he has used it as a petty tyrant, played the little dictator and altogether lived up to the spirit of the dictum—"I am Sir Oracle; when I ope my mouth, let no dog bark." His big support in the House has made him autocratic, with the manners of a sore-headed bear, and the methods of a Czar. He even tries the patience and strains the loyalty of his own party followers and friends .All over the province, not even excepting Peterborough, there are good loyal Conservatives who are still chafing under snubs administered by Sir James Whitney. A big majority gives great capacity for useful public service when wisely and legitimately used; when abused it becomes a brake on the wheels of progress and a menace to our liberties and private property rights. It would do Sir James Whitney a world of good, to have this majority so reduced as to make him remember that public service is a public trust, and that power is to be exercised in the interests of the people, and not by the whim of an autocrat.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Smallpax is in the Soo jail—the proper place for it.

The three-fifth clause is a legal recognition of fractional manhood.

The trouble with the Whitney Government is not that it is invincible, but inconvincible.

Canada grows the best grain in the world, and the Yankees have to acknowledge the—wheat.

If Sir James Whitney wants to see what his railway commission is like, let him compare it with the Dominion railway commission.

There are 1723 miles of Grand Trunk Pacific in operation at present, west of Fort William, and 900 miles almost ready for traffic—altogether 2623 miles doing the work of western development.

If Italy makes a war of territorial aggrandizement upon women and children, and vindictive slaughter of unarmed enemies, it will forfeit the esteem of civilization, which will be inclined to hold, as anticipatory justice, the atrocities Italians suffered in their struggles for a united Italy.

Sir James goes into the election dangling the possibility of becoming the county seat of the Temiskaming district before Cobalt, Haileybury, Liskeard, and Englehart. What was that, asks the Globe, Sir James said once about being bold enough to be honest? Let him choose his county seat now.

It is urged against Mr. T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., for Lennox, that for the past three years he has done nothing but draw his salary. It is hard to please some people. There are constituencies where the people would be glad if their representative had shown any evidence that he was even drawing his breath—that he was really alive.

Sir James Whitney showed that he was bold enough to shirk a troublesome question by appointing Dr. Merchant to investigatae bi-lingual schools, in order to strangle discussion in the Legislature. Now, to show his boldness and honesty still further, he withholds the report in order to discourage discussion of the subject during the elections.

"HAS ANYBODY HERE SEEN——?"

(Toronto Star.)

"Since Dr. Merchant was appointed last November to investigate the 310 bilingual schools in Ontario he has had only about 190 working days in which to do so. Nevertheless the Liberal editors are savagely demanding that Dr. Merchant shall and MUST present his report!"—London Free Press.

No savage demand has been made by anybody so far as we have seen.

To escape a discussion of bilingual schools in the Legisalture, Dr. Merchant was appointed to make a report on the conditions prevailing in these institutions. The may be 310 schools but there are only two or three conditions to be reported on.

Dr Merchant may have had but 190 days for his task, yet the particular schools or class of schools which excite dispute and represent the system, could have been thoroughly inspected in less time than has been consumed, had this been desired.

But the point is that the Government shelved the question by appointing an investigator, when the school conditions should have been and were entirely familiar to one of its own highly organized departments. Having appointed an investigator and having found that he needs a lot of time, what was the hurry about bringing on the election?

The hurry was to get to the polls before Dr. Merchant got to the Legislature with his report.

It is a natural desire and readily understood. But it puts out of campaign use the stirring poem about the leader who is "bold enough to be honest and honest enough to be bold." From the bi-lingual school question the members of the Whitney Cabinet are running away in several directions at once.

WHITNEY GOVERNMENT AND THE POWER PROBLEM

It is claimed for the Whitney Government that it will "spread the hydro-electric power to Central Ontario, even if the Government has to expropriate to do it."

The Whitney Government is all powerful, and it has shown that it can seize, confiscate, and appropriate water powers without compensation to owners—give doubtful adtages to the public at the expense of their fellow citizens, and discourage, neutralize and penalize private enterprise.

The Whitney Government expropriated undeveloped water powers last session without one cent of compensation to owners—not expropriation but confiscation.

It has the power to seize upon all powers developed in this district, and judging by precedent will do so without regard to the rights of owners to compensation—give public privileges at the expense of violence to private rights.

In connection with the construction of Western Ontario Hydro-Electric transmission lines fences were destroyed, standing crops trampled down, orchards injured, and without a cent of compensation to owners—refused and still refused and the door closed to redress by the courts.

The Whitney Government forced fourteen municipalities in Western Ontario—cities, towns and villages, which had passed bylaws to acquire Hydro-Electric Power on certain terms, to accept power on another basis altogether, and on higher terms, by means of legislation that changed contracts voted for and entered into in good faith.

The Whitney Government is all-powerful and uses its power tyrannically. The people want electric power, but they want it on fair and honourable terms, not by confiscation and seizure of the fruits of private enterprise without compensation. Fair business methods are expected of a Government. We are not living in the days of King George III., and Ontario is not Russia.

LABOUR LEGISLATION.

(Brantford Expositor)

Perhaps nowhere, as much as in the attitude of the Whitney Government towards labour, is there shown such a lack of constructive legislation.

Sir James Whitney has done as much for organized labour in the seven years of Conservative rule as he has for tax reform, on which he stamped his foot in the legislature, and tax reform vanished for the time being to the political lumber room.

The provincial bureau of labour, an active organization under former Liberal governments, became under Sir James Whitney practically a nonentity.

Workmen's compensation was allowed to slumber in the graveyard of political ideals for seven years, then it was suddenly resurrected on the eve of an election. Toronto labour forces at once characterized the move as a bribe, and bribe it was.

Child labour reform has been a dead issue in the government of Sir James Whitney, and unless a stray inspector finds a child below legal age at factory employment there is absolutely no way of preventing the practice which is arising in the big mills and factories of this province, and which is undermining the capabilities of the artisan of the future, and gnawing away at future industrial efficiency.

Legislation requiring the presentation of a certificate of age by every boy and girl seeking factory employment is needed to curb the evils arising from child labour.

So long as the Whitney Government of Ontario has a majority large enough to give that Government the assumption that it can abuse its power, ignore the rights of the people, fail to give progressive legislation to a province which is peopled by the most progressive nation builders of the universe, then just so long will Ontario remain in the quagmire of masterly activity which has characterized, with but slight exception, the administrative rule of the past seven years given by the government of Sir Jams Whitney.

Ontario needs young men at the helm; the Liberal party has such in plenty, and it is the duty of the hour to elect them.

AVOID HARSH DRUGS

Many Cathartics Tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels

If you are subject to constipation, you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful, and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatement ever devised. Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation. The preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are prompt, soothing, and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principal ingredient is odorless, tasteless, and colourless. Combined with other well-known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience what ever. They do not gripe, purge, nor cause nausea. They act without causing any pain or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons, and aged people, as well as for the most hearty person.

They come in three size packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents; 36 tablets, 25 cents; 80 tablets, 50 cents. Remember, you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store—McDermid and Jury, druggists.

Hallowe'en Party

Mrs. S. Herrington, Havelock, was the hostess of a Hallowe'en party Monday, Oct. 30th, at her residence, George street, in honour of her daughter, Miss Leta, her house being beautifully decorated for the occasion, with corn stalks and lighted pumpkins. The guests, numbering about fifty, were received by Mrs. Herrington, assisted by the Misses K. McNichol and O. Rose, looking very picturesque as "Ghost" and "Witch," with Miss Leta proving the centre of attraction by dressing as "Gipsy," and telling fortunes, under a tent, in one corner of the parlour.

A buffet lunch was served, about 12o' clock, the table being very prettily decorated with shaded candles.

Afterwards, a most enjoyable time was spent in all kinds of hallowe'en games and dancing. The out-of-town guests present were: Miss S. Morrison, Norwood; Messrs. W. Kennedy, H. L. Dowling, J. Noble, W. Herrington, A. Scribber, R. McGregor, Toronto; Mr. H. Freeman, Kingston.

Charge Withdrawn

The case of the Catholic Emigration Society of Ottawa vs. Fred Payne of Dummer, came up before Magistrate Edmison in the county court this morning, but no evidence was taken. In fact, the counsels did not appear, as the society had withdrawn the charge. The former charge against Payne was that of enticing a young boy named Wood away from a farmer where he had been placed by the society. There was not sufficient evidence in this case for a conviction, and the case was dismissed, with the result that another charge was laid, and later withdrawn. The parties involved in the case came to a satisfactory settlement before the case was tried.

ONTARIO LIBERAL PLATFORM.

In another column is printed the platform of the Liberal party in Ontario, as promulgated by the new leader, Mr. N. W. Rowell. In the first place it is a platform of principles, and founded upon the principles upon which the Liberal party stands. A perusal of it will show that if it is applied to the government of Ontario, it will mean advanced and progressive legislation and live and effective administration. It is claimed that it overlaps some of the planks of the Whitney programme; Possibly. But with this difference—it proposes to do in these respects, what Sir James Whitney proposed and promised to do, and has not done. The Liberal policy recognizes that the people have rights to be respected. That the people should be ruled by their representatives and that the days of one-man, absolute, autocratic rule, will be shortened, if not abolished outright. The people will be allowed to say by their votes, what they wish to do in the matter of assessment of property and the imposition of taxation, they themselves have to pay; and all through Mr. Rowell's declaration of policy runs the thread of recognition of popular rights and suggestions as to giving them effect. The public interest is the paramount motive. The platform of the Liberal party is nothing new; principles do not change; changing conditions may affect the mode of application, but the application is the thing. The Whitney government has done a great deal of great talking, and has done little else in many important respects during the past seven years. The people want the benefit of a policy of doing something, in line with popular wishes and requirements.

OFF TO A GOOD START.

Hon. W. T. White, Finance Minister, is reaping where he has not sown; and he enters upon the administration of the Dominion finances with everything in the best of condition. Hon. Mr. Fielding has achieved a post-mortem (official) surplus, thus keeping up the habit of fifteen years. If the increase in Dominion revenue for the remainder of the current fiscal year keeps up the pace of the first seven months there will be a surplus of thirty-five millions to report; a surplus within one million of the entire revenue of the Dominion fifteen years ago. The revenue for the first seven months of the year amounts to $76,21.178, an increase of ten and a half millions over the corresponding period of last year. At the past rate of increase the revenue for the full twelve months of 1911-12 will amount to 126 million dollars. The surplus for the first seven months of the year amounts to about 21 millions of dollars, and at this rate will amount to 36 millions at the end of the year. Hon. Mr. White will have no need to take lessons from Hon. Geo. E. Foster's expense, in borrowing money to meet current expenses. If Mr. White and his colleagues in the Borden Government can keep Canada straight upon the high way of prosperity, as they found it, a great deal will be forgiven them.

AUTOCRATIC RULE.

Sir James Whitney has held power by a large majority of legislative supporters. No Ontario premier has ever had, in this regard, so magnificent an opportunity of giving application to a grand constructive policy such as a province of Ontario's resources and possibilities requires and demands. He has not used his power for such a purpose. He has simply plodded on in the rut of rotuine legislation and administration. There is no department of his government that has come anywise near living up to its opportunities and plain duty. Instead of using his big majority to give the province advance administration and constructive legislation, he has used it as a petty tyrant, played the little dictator and altogether lived up to the spirit of the dictum—"I am Sir Oracle; when I ope my mouth, let no dog bark." His big support in the House has made him autocratic, with the manners of a sore-headed bear, and the methods of a Czar. He even tries the patience and strains the loyalty of his own party followers and friends. All over the province, not even excepting Peterborough, there are good loyal Conservatives who are still chafing under snubs administered by Sir James Whitney. A big majority gives great capacity for useful public service when wisely and legitimately used; when abused it becomes a brake on the wheels of progress and a menace to our liberties and private property rights. It would do Sir James Whitney a world of good, to have his majority so reduced as to make him remember that public service is a public trust, and that power is to be exercised in the interests of the people, and not by the whim of an autocrat.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Smallpox is in the Soo jail—the proper place for it.

The three-fifth clause is a legal recognition of fractional manhood.

The trouble with the Whitney Government is not that it is invincible, but inconvincibile.

Canada grows the best grain in the world, and the Yankees have to acknowledge the—wheat.

If Sir James Whitney wants to see what his railway commission is like, let him compare it with the Dominion railway commission.

There are 1723 miles of Grand Trunk Pacific in operation at present, west of Fort William, and 900 miles almost ready for traffic—altogether 2623 miles doing the work of western development.

If Italy makes a war of territorial aggrandizement upon women and children, and vindictive slaughter of unarmed enemies, it will forfeit the esteem of civilization, which will be inclined to hold, as anticipatory justice, the atrocities Italians suffered in their struggles for a united Italy.

Sir James goes into the election dangling the possibility of becoming the county seat of the Temiskaming district before Cobalt, Haileybury, Liskeard, and Englehart. What was that, asks the Globe, Sir James said once about being bold enough to be honest? Let him choose his county seat now.

It is urged against Mr. T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., for Lennox, that for the past three years he has done nothing but draw his salary. It's hard to please some people. There are constituencies where the people would be glad if their representative had shown any evidence that he was even drawing his breath—that he was really alive.

Sir James Whitney showed that he was bold enough to shirk a troublesome question by appointing Dr. Merchant to investigate bi-lingual schools, in order to strangle discussion in the Legislature. Now, to show his boldness and honesty still further, he withholds the report in order to discourage discussion of the subject during the elections.

"HAS ANYBODY HERE SEEN——?"

(Toronto Star.)

"Since Dr. Merchant was appointed last November to investigate the 310 bilingual schools in Ontario he has had only about 190 working days in which to do so. Nevertheless the Liberal editors are savagely demanding that Dr. Merchant shall and MUST present his report!"—London Free Press.

No savage demand has been made by anybody so far as we have seen.

To escape a discussion of bilingual schools in the Legisalture, Dr. Merchant was appointed to make a report on the conditions prevailing in these institutions. There may be 310 schools but there are only two or three conditions to be reported on.

Dr. Merchant may have had but 190 days for his task, yet the particular schools or class of schools which excite dispute and represent the system, could have been thoroughly inspected in less time than has been consumed, had this been desired.

But the point is that the Government shelved the question by appointing an investigator, when the school conditions should have been and were entirely familiar to one of its own highly organized departments. Having appointed an investigator and having found that he needs a lot of time, what was the hurry about bringing on the election?

The hurry was to get to the polls before Dr. Merchant got to the Legislature with his report.

It is a natural desire and readily understood. But it puts out of campaign use the stirring poem about the leader who is "bold enough to be honest and honest enough to be bold." From the bi-lingual school question the members of the Whitney Cabinet are running away in several directions at once.

WHITNEY GOVERNMENT AND THE POWER PROBLEM

It is claimed for the Whitney Government that it will "spread the hydro-electric power to Central Ontario, even if the Government has to expropriate to do it."

The Whitney Government is all powerful, and it has shown that it can seize, confiscate, and appropriate water powers without compensation to owners—give doubtful adtages to the public at the expense of their fellow citizens, and discourage, neutralize and penalize private enterprise.

The Whitney Government expropriated undeveloped water powers last session without one cent of compensation to owners—not expropriation but confiscation.

It has the power to seize upon all powers developed in this district, and judging by precedent will do so without regard to the rights of owners to compensation—give public privileges at the expense of violence to private rights.

In connection with the construction of Western Ontario Hydro-Electric transmission lines fences were destroyed, standing crops trampled down, orchards injured, and without a cent of compensation to owners—refused and still refused and the door closed to redress by the courts.

The Whitney Government forced fourteen municipalities in Western Ontario—cities, towns and villages, which had passed bylaws to acquire Hydro-Electric Power on certain terms, to accept power on another basis altogether, and on higher terms, by means of legislation that changed contracts voted for and entered into in good faith.

The Whitney Government took away the right to appeal to the courts, as they did in the case of the Florence Mining Company.

The Whitney Government is all-powerful and uses its power tyrannically. The people want electric power, but they want it on fair and honourable terms, not by confiscation and seizure of the fruits of private enterprise without compensation. Fair business methods are expected of a Government. We are not living in the days of King George III., and Ontario is not Russia.

LABOUR LEGISLATION.

(Brantford Expositor)

Perhaps nowhere, as much as in the attitude of the Whitney Government towards labour, is there shown such a lack of constructive legislation.

Sir James Whitney has done as much for organized labour in the seven years of Conservative rule as he has for tax reform, on which he stamped his foot in the legislature, and tax reform vanished for the time being to the political lumber room.

The provincial bureau of labour, an active organization under former Liberal governments, became under Sir James Whitney practically a nonentity.

Workmen's compensation was allowed to slumber in the graveyard of political ideals for seven years, then it was suddenly resurrected on the eve of an election. Toronto labour forces at once characterized the move as a bribe, and bribe it was.

Child labour reform has been a dead issue in the government of Sir James Whitney, and unless a stray inspector finds a child below legal age at factory employment there is absolutely no way of preventing the practice which is arising in the big mills and factories of this province, and which is undermining the capabilities of the artisan of the future, and gnawing away at future industrial efficiency.

Legislation requiring the presentation of a certificate of age by every boy and girl seeking factory employment is needed to curb the evils arising from child labour.

So long as the Whitney Government of Ontario has a majority large enough to give that Government the assumption that it can abuse its power, ignore the rights of the people, fail to give progressive legislation to a province which is peopled by the most progressive nation builders of the universe, then just so long will Ontario remain in the quagmire of masterly activity which has characterized, with but slight exception, the administrative rule of the past seven years given by the government of Sir James Whitney.

Ontario needs young men at the helm; the Liberal party has such in plenty, and it is the duty of the hour to elect them.

AVOID HARSH DRUGS

Many Cathartics Tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels

If you are subject to constipation, you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful, and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatement ever devised. Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation. The preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are prompt, soothing, and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principal ingredient is odorless, tasteless, and colourless. Combined with other well-known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience what ever. They do not gripe, purge, nor cause nausea. They act without causing any pain or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons, and aged people, as well as for the most hearty person.

They come in three size packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents; 36 tablets, 25 cents; 80 tablets, 50 cents. Remember, you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store—McDermid and Jury, druggists.

Hallowe'en Party

Mrs. S. Herrington, Havelock, was the hostess of a Hallowe'en party Monday, Oct. 30th, at her residence, George street, in honour of her daughter, Miss Leta, her house being beautifully decorated for the occasion, with corn stalks and lighted pumpkins. The guests, numbering about fifty, were received by Mrs. Herrington, assisted by the Misses K. McNichol and O. Rose, looking very picturesque as "Ghost" and "Witch," with Miss Leta proving the centre of attraction by dressing as "Gipsy," and telling fortunes, under a tent, in one corner of the parlour.

A buffet lunch was served, about 12o' clock, the table being very prettily decorated with shaded candles.

Afterwards, a most enjoyable time was spent in all kinds of hallowe'en games and dancing. The out-of-town guests present were: Miss S. Morrison, Norwood; Messrs. W. Kennedy, H. L. Dowling, J. Noble, W. Herrington, A. Scribber, R. McGregor, Toronto; Mr. H. Freeman, Kingston.

Charge Withdrawn

The case of the Catholic Emigration Society of Ottawa vs. Fred Payne of Dummer, came up before Magistrate Edmison in the county court this morning, but no evidence was taken. In fact, the counsels did not appear, as the society had withdrawn the charge. The former charge against Payne was that of enticing a young boy named Wood away from a farmer where he had been placed by the society. There was not sufficient evidence in this case for a conviction, and the case was dismissed, with the result that another charge was laid, and later withdrawn. The parties involved in the case came to a satisfactory settlement before the case was tried.

Championship Of Three Unions Hinges On Outcome Of Next Saturday's Games

TORONTO, NOV. 7.—The rugby situation is a trifle more complicated to-day as a result of the outcome of Saturday's games. The dopesters are not so sure of their ground, and altogether there is an air of uncertainty surrounding the whole thing.

Next Saturday's games will be fraught with the greatest importance to all the senior teams, and only the unwise and the foolish would attempt to hazard an opinion as to what is really going to happen. Toronto people are very much concerned in all the games, as upon the outcome of these matches will depend the location of the games for the Canadian championships, which last week were looked upon as a certainty for Toronto.

THE COLLEGE SITUATION

Ottawa College and Varsity play here on the Varsity Stadium, and a glance at the records shows that the Intercollegiate championship is at stake. The former's sweeping victory over McGill indicates that Father Staunton's team are much better than has been rated, and will extend the Varsity team to the limit to win. The local Collegians are quite confident of taking the measure of the Ottawa team, and thereby securing revenge for their defeat at Ottawa several weeks ago. Maynard, Taylor and probably German will be back in the line-up. This game will be the contest of the season in the College Union, and the prospects are for the largest crowd of the year. The McGill-Queen's game has no bearing on the championship.

INTER-PROVINCIAL POSSIBILITIES

The unlucky Argonauts, who had victory snatched from them in the last minute of play at Hamilton, will go to Ottawa to play the Rough Riders, who themselves just managed to nose out a last-minute win at Montreal. This game and the Tiger game at Montreal will either settle the championship of the Inter-Provincial or create a tie. If Argos win they will be champions; if Ottawa and Tigers win there will be a three-cornered tie; if Ottawa win and Tigers lose there will be a tie between Ottawa and Argos, which can be settled by one game on a neutral field. The Argos have this much in their favor. Unlike Hamilton, they do not quit away from home, and will play just as good a game in Ottawa as they will in Toronto. Whether that will be good enough to beat Ottawa on an Ottawa field is a question which will have to be answered on the field.

IN THE ONTARIO UNION

The Ontario Union championship will also be settled on Saturday, when Hamilton Alerts and T.A.A.C. play at Hamilton. If the Alerts win they will be champions, but if they lose they will be tied with T.A.A.C., and the teams will play the return game in Toronto the following Saturday. There is a feeling in some quarters that the Ontario champions will beat the Inter-Provincial champions in the semi-final, and that they will make the College champions go to the limit to win. That is something, however, that can only be determined definitely on the grid-iron.

Is This Right?

BY W. W. NAUGHTON

SAN FRANCISCO, NOV. 6. — If Kid Cutler, late of Jack Johnson's staff, is to be believed, the champion has gone to pieces.

If the news is true, it means, I suppose, that the gay life of London has done for another great negro heavy-weight.

Peter Jackson was the first that the primrose path of the big city across the water robbed of his fighting strength and cunning. When Peter first set foot in the tight little isle, he was feted as though he were a foreign prince. One British nobleman offered Peter his country place—some said it was his castle—in which to train.

Peter's popularity lasted quite a while. It began to wane soon after his fight with Frank Slavin, which, according to English standards, was the greatest battle of Peter's career. It was such a gruelling affair that it made physical wrecks of both men. At least, that was the opinion that crystalized, and, as neither accomplished anything in the prize ring subsequently, it looked as though there was something to base the argument on.

Johnson never was and never will be as popular as Jackson, but the same facilities for getting into the London night life are open to him. And, if Cutler speaks the truth, Jack has availed himself of the privilege and is beginning to reap the whirlwind. According to Cutler, Johnson, like Jackson, will have to box soon to replenish his treasury.

At present we are out of white hopes and not likely to stock up again, as there is no demand for that kind of merchandise. It was the craze for a while, like bobble skirts, but now white hopes are last year's birds. Jim Flynn had the last and now occupies the position of the cat that ate the canary. If the Johnson-Langford outlook should grow dim again and Johnson is forced to fight to keep the wolf from the door, the New York promoters may decide to put Flynn and Johnson in the ring. I mean, of course, if Johnson insists on meeting a white man.

It may be to smile at the idea of a Johnson-Flynn match, but where is there another in the Caucasian race better entitled to oppose the champion? Flynn has licked big Al Kaufmann and bigger Carl Morris, and it does not look as though there is any one else of Flynn's complexion to lick.

It is said, Bombardier Wells is coming to this country looking for work. Well, that suggests a better programme still. Send Flynn and the stalwart Britisher together and let Johnson get ready to box the winner.

NOW ON THE MARKET

CHICAGO, NOV. 4.—Ed. Reulbach, Cub pitcher, for years the terror of National League batsmen, is on the market. He may be the first of the veteran corps of slabmen that Manager Frank Chance will trade or sell in a desperate effort to build up his pitching staff for the season of 1912.

Chance before he left for the coast practically admitted that he would trade Reulbach during the winter if it were possible to get the man he wanted in exchange. A trade is more probable than a sale, as Chance wants pitchers more than the club wants the money.

Reulbach has been of little or no help to the club for the past two years. Ever since he returned from the Southern training trip in 1910 to the bedside of his little boy, ill with diphtheria, which disease the pitcher also contracted, he has been a disappointment to Chance.

In 1910 Reulbach's poor showing was attributed to his illness. It was said the antitoxin he had been forced to take had made him unfit for pitching for a year. So when the 1911 fight began much was expected of this once great slab artist. But he failed again. He was off his stride all season and was used only when Chance had nobody else to send to the mound.

Even in Reulbach's good years, which began in 1905, and ended with 1909, he was at times an erratic twirler. Always early in the season he was as wild as a hawk and practically useless. After about the first of July in each race, however, he would become one of the greatest pitchers in the game, sometimes winning as many as thirteen or fourteen straight games for Chance's machine.

When Chance was asked before he left for the coast if he intended to keep Reulbach and Cole he said:

"Cole will stay with the team. He was sick early this season and I attribute his poor work to that. He never fully regained his health. At that he pitched some good games and led my pitchers. I expect him to be as good next year as he was his first season with me. As for Reulbach, I don't know just what I'll do. He may not stay with the team."

RUGBY

Dick Sheehy carried off a large share of the credit for the early lead College were enabled to roll up. He was up under everything and McGill's fast backs could not possibly outleg him. His reckless tackling sent frequent thrills through the throng of fans. His work was spectacular, but effective. With Nagle and Gilligan, Sheehy made the third of a brilliant trio of stars.

Big Frank Hefferman, although by no means completely recovered from his injuries, covered himself with glory, and was going at his best, when the other players were pretty nearly all in, near the end of the game. By next Saturday he should be in shape to play the game of his life against 'Varsity.—Ottawa Free Press.

A New Way to Block a Kick.

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—When McGill were in possession of the ball Ottawa College brought into play a few trick plays, which proved very effective in blocking Billington's kicks. One of them was a tandem rush from either side of the scrimmage, which was directed at the McGill line, and a number of times when McGill had fine chances to score this play blocked the kick.

Pete Campbell kept the team on the jump all the time and not only started many magnificent runs but on some occasions finished them on the second pass. Campbell is as lively as a cricket and is after the ball all the time.—Toronto Star.

PLANS TO GO AS MISSIONARY

Special to The Examiner

BOSTON, MASS., NOV. 7.—So confident is he that he will be acquitted of the charge of murdering Avis Linnell that Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson has planned to marry Miss Violet Edmands, his heiress-fiancee, and become a missionary in foreign fields.

Richeson has told some of his friends who have visited him in the jail that he knows he will be freed when the jury determines his case.

Miss Edmands has been firm in her belief of the innocence of the pastor, and it is said she and all the members of her family are anxious for the marriage to take place as soon as Richeson is freed, if he is acquitted.

The pastor has told his friends that, no matter what the jury decides, he realizes that it would be folly for him to attempt again to preach in this country or to accept a pastorate. The notoriety that has been drawn about him has made it impossible for him to secure a church, even if he is completely exonerated by the jury. For that reason, he plans, if he is acquitted, to go either to China or Africa. Miss Edmands, as his wife, would accompany him, he is said to have confided in his friends.

Richeson was to have been arraigned yesterday to plead to the indictment which charges him with the first degree murder of Miss Linnell. When court opened, however, District Attorney Pelletier announced that, at the request of Congressman Robert Orr Harris, senior counsel for the prisoner, the arraignment would be postponed until next Monday.

Mounted Police May Disappear

OTTAWA, Nov. 7.—That the Royal North-West Mounted Police, which has made history in the west, may be abolished so far as Dominion control is concerned, in the event of the promise to give the provinces autonomous control of their public lands by the Borden administration being carried out is considered probable in certain circles here.

At the present time the Dominion Government and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan jointly pay for the upkeep of the force, which now numbers less than 800 men, in comparison with 1,000 in the years before Alberta and Saskatchewan were made provinces of the Dominion and were part of the great North-West Territory.

"There is one thing," stated Col. Fred White, Comptroller of the R.N.W.M.P. department, in discussing the probability, "and that is that the force will not be increased. I have not yet discussed the future of the force with Hon. Mr. Borden, who, as Premier, is the ministerial head of the department and in direct control, and so am not at all certain just what will be done. I shall have a conference with him on his return from Halifax, but as yet, on account of pressure of work, he has not had an opportunity of going into the question."

If the provinces secure control of the Dominion lands within their boundaries, the necessity of the Dominion contributing to the enforcement of law and order will, it is considered, be eliminated as the provinces will likely do as the province of Ontario has done, establish a provincial constabulary. There will then remain to be patrolled only the Yukon and North-West Territory, which is likely to be further diminished by the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. This would mean the practical abolition of that famous band of men, who have made history for so many years in the west.

New Corporation

New York, Nov. 3.—A $65,000,000 corporation, to merge the greatest string of five and ten cents stores in America is announced to-day by F. W. Woolworth. Six hundred concerns will enter the new corporation, which will be known as F. W. Woolworth & Company.

The new corporation will take over the business of F. W. Woolworth & Company of New York, S. H. Knox & Company of Buffalo, F. M. Kirby & Company of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; E. P. Charlton & Company of Fall River, Mass.; S. C. Woolworth of Scranton, Pa.; W. H. Moore of Watertown, and W. H. Moore & Son of Schenectady. The corporation also will assume a controlling interest in the English business of F. W. Woolworth & Company, Ltd.

It is understood the new corporation will have seven per cent. preferred stock to the value of $50,000,000. It is said that Goldman, Sachs & Company, and Lehman Brothers of New York and Kleinwort Sons' & Company of London will acquire an interest in the securities of the new company.

ROMANCE OF IDEA

The life of F. W. Woolworth, head of the big merger, announced to-day, is the romance of an idea. Woolworth is the head of 286 stores, besides supplementary warehouses in Lewiston, Me., and Denver, Colo. He has 20 stores in England. A recent census showed that 1,500,000 persons entered his stores in a day.

The man who mastered such a business is less than 50 years old. He started, without wages, as a farmer's boy in a dry goods store in Watertown, set up his first store in 1879 and has been in business for 30 years. He was born in Jefferson County, New York. He opened his first store in Utica, but the proposition did not go. He tried again in Lancaster, Pa., and there laid the foundation for his fortune.

State Elections

WASHINGTON, NOV. 6.—Leaders of National politics are looking with acute interest to the result of the State elections to-morrow, because of their possible bearing on the Presidential campaign of next year. The contests afford the first opportunity for a formal popular expression since the bringing together of the first Democratic National House of Representatives in sixteen years and the continent-spanning speech-making trip of President Taft.

In Massachusetts Governor Foss, formerly a representative here, has led the Democratic forces; in New Jersey the election is held in the home State of a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President (Woodrow Wilson); in New York the issues are local, but the State is one always closely scanned by political observers; in Kentucky Representative Ollie James, one of the bulwarks of his party in Congress, is a candidate for U. S. Senator, and Wm. J. Bryan and Speaker Champ Clark have campaigned for him.

Vice-President Sherman has taken an active part in the Republican fight in New Jersey, while Speaker Clark has done some vigorous campaigning in Nebraska and Tennessee, as well as in Kentucky.

An Innovation in Oil Heaters

The Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater, with its drums enameled in turquoise, is an ornament to any room, whether in the country or city home.

No home is quite complete without a Perfection Oil Heater. It is a necessity in the fall and spring, when it is too warm to start the regular heating apparatus, and too cool to be without heat. In the midst of winter it is often convenient as an auxiliary heater, as there are always some cold corners in a house.

The enameled heater always presents a nice appearance, as the enamel will not tarnish or burn off. It is not an "enamel paint," but it is the same as the enamel of your cooking utensils.

The Perfection is the most reliable and convenient portable heating device you can find. An automatically-locking flame spreader prevents turning the wick high enough to smoke.

ABDICATION OF EMPEROR DEMANDED BY REBELS

Examiner Special:

PEKIN. NOV. 6.—General Li Yuan, commander-in-chief of the rebels in southern China, has flatly refused Yuan Shi Kai's offers for a settlement of the revolutionists' grievances against the throne.

The only terms upon which General Li will make peace, Yuan states, include the following:

"Deposition and degradation of the Emperor:

"Formal recognition of the recently-proclaimed 'republic of Han.'

"Election by popular vote of a head of the republican government to succeed himself."

Yuan Shi Kai still declines to accept the Premiership, although assured of the support of the National Assembly and General Chang, in command of the Lanchau troops. No tangible head of the Government is visible. The Government urgently needs funds.

50,000 PERSONS KILLED

According to Chinese report, 50,000 persons have been killed at Hankow by bullets, fire and sword.

The Imperialists have recaptured Tung-Kwan, near the eastern border of Shen-Si Province. The rebels lost heavily and retreated towards Sian-Fu, the capital of Shen-Si. A foreign traveller just returned from Sian-Fu, reports that district in the wildest disorder. Former soldiers were looting everywhere and there was no trace of Government troops. The rebels at Sian-Fu asserted that all the officials, from treasurer to Taoti, had been killed as well as the Manchus, men, women and children.

RECOGNIZE REBELS

Another edict has been issued instructing the assembly to proceed with the election of a Parliament and promising to recognise the revolutionary political party.

The total damage by fire at Hankow amounts to many millions. Some of the British river boats, including the gunboat Woodcock, were struck by shots during the fighting, but nobody was wounded.

The Rev. Mr. Huntington, of the American church mission, entered a strong protest against the execution of Manchu women and children at I-Chang, declaring that such action would alienate the sympathy of all civilised nations. The revolutionary leaders replied that they had been compelled to authorise the executions in order to placate the soldiers and rebels, but they promised that no more executions of the kind would take place.

SHANGHAI THE CENTRE

LONLON, NOV. 6.—The Times Pekin correspondent says:

There is no longer reason to doubt that Shanghai is the headquarters of the revolution movement. The peaceful transfer of the city to the revolution, with the prominent positions given to men like Wu Ting Fang and Wen Taung Yao, has caused an immense sensation in Peking, which is deepened by to-night's news that Soochow and Hang Chow have joined the movement. Assuredly nothing can now prevent Taku and Tien-Tsin from joining the revolutionaries.

ENJOYABLE "AT HOME" AT ST. ANDREW'S LAST EVENING

Despite the extremely inclement and gloomy condition of the weather which prevailed all last evening, the scene in St. Andrew's Sunday School room was bright and cheery, and bore not the slightest resemblance to the cold, dreary rain, which fell in torrents without, and which, now and then, dashed in sheets against the window panes, with a rattle that, at times, could be heard above the melodious tones of the piano. Mr. H. C. Treneer, St. Andrew's Church organist, prior to the opening of the splendid programme, delighted the audience by rendering some of his choice selections, which were greatly appreciated, and which had a remarkable influence in enlivening the proceedings, as the people endeavoured to become acquainted, which was effected more readily by the hearty welcome extended to the visitors, and the untiring efforts of the ladies in charge to see that all received due attention and were enjoying themselves to the full, which undoubtedly they did.

When, finally, all the young people had secured their partners, which was effected by the usual system, a piano selection was rendered by Mr. Herbert C. Treneer, and it is unnecessary to say that several encores followed, every one of which was greatly appreciated, a fact which was emphasized and exhibited in no uncertain manner by the enthusiastic audience.

A solo was very pleasingly rendered by Miss Olive Howell, in her usual popular manner, and a humorous reading by Mr. Johns followed, which received several encores.

Previous to the programme a guessing contest was inaugurated, and at the close of the programme, four prizes were presented. Two to the winners of the contest, and two were given to those whose guesses were farthest away from the correct answers.

Dainty refreshments were then served, and later a most enjoyable and sociable evening was concluded by a little speech from Rev. Mr. Rollins, pastor, and chairman for the evening, in which he extended a most hearty welcome to the young people to pay another visit to the church. The whole function was principally in honour of the Normal students, but they were not very largely represented, probably on account of the weather.

English Land Soon Will Belong To The People

LONDON, NOV. 7.—One of the most notable and lasting effects of the French Revolution was the transfer of the ownership of the land of France from the feudal aristocracy to the people. In England this process has been going on peacefully and almost unnoticed during the last twelve months at a rate which, if continued much longer, will accomplish as great a change in the ownership of the land as the Revolution did in that of France.

There are several reasons for this change. Enemies of the present government say that the owners of land feel that they are no longer safe, and that they have been forced to sell by the new policy of taxing land. As far as the amount of the tax is concerned this is absurd, but there is no doubt that the fear of heavier taxation, now that the principle has been established, has had some effect. Far greater, however, has been the influence of the rising price of land, which strangely enough, is due both to what the government is doing and what the opposition is expected to do when it returns to power. The government policy has been to encourage the re-settlement of small holders on the land and it has even authorized county councils to buy land and re-sell or rent it to occupying tenants. This increased demand, added to a private movement, "back to the soil," has stiffened prices. Then agriculturists generally are looking for a great revival of farming in England, when the Tories come back to power and introduce their protective tariff, so land is acquiring a prospective value that it didn't have before. How great the advance is, is shown by the case of a district in the Cotswold Hills in Gloucestershire, where stony, barren land that was bought for $60 an acre fifteen years ago is fetching $125 an acre now and there is mighty little of it to be got at that.

All these influences are making land sales a good thing for the landlords. They are getting hard cash for their estates, which after all are a good deal of trouble and don't return a big percentage on the money. Many of them are investing in stocks and bonds and some are buying cheap land in Canada and South Africa.

Among the notable land sales of the past year was that of the Duke of Bedford's Devonshire estate, which realised $2,500,000. Most of the land was bought by the tenants. The Duke of Sutherland, who is buying up thousands of acres in Canada, sold 1,380 acres at Trentham in Staffordshire for about $125,000, and Viscount Clifden has unloaded 2,030 acres in Oxfordshire for $210,000, an estate in Cornwall for $65,000 and one in Cambridgeshire for $235,000. Another big sale was that of Lord Londesborough's estates in Yorkshire, which netted about $640,000, while Lord Lansdowne, the famous Tory leader in the House of Lords, got over $170,000 for 1,050 acres in Wiltshire.

So far no figures are available as to the total sales this year, but they will run into many millions of dollars and there are lots more to come. Any enterprising American who wants to buy up England has a good chance to do so now, but he will have to reckon on Lloyd George's taxes which are more likely to grow than to decrease.

An interesting side issue of this change in the ownership of land is the effect it will have on the English aristocracy. Until now it has been almost exclusively a territorial and feudal one. A peer without land was almost unthinkable and newly created business peers always made haste to buy land and so acquire a definite standing in their new caste. Land, too, was regarded as a sort of insurance against changing fortunes. It was tangible property, and under the law of entail it was inalienable. A spendthrift son might run through the income, and get into debt, but the land remained. Now it will be easier to dissipate the ancestral fortune and ambitious American mammas who want titled sons-in-law may soon find a slump in prices.

Killed The Fatted Calf

The Lindsay nimrods are getting it put over them in bunches of late. Two weeks ago those sports were held responsible for the destruction of farmers' geese on the shores of Rabbit Point, but this time they have changed their hunting grounds and class of game.

County Constable Thornbury received information from a South Ops farmer living in the vicinity of Cross Creeks, that during the fore part of last week a party of hunters encamped on the shores of the Scugog and commenced handling their rifles as some men do the truth. As a result one of his calves received a shot from the gun of a reckless hunter.

Constable Thornbury took up the case, and was not long in locating his men, who promptly paid for the animal at the price set by the farmer.—Lindsay Warder.

HOW DO YOU DO?

"How can you, friend?" the Swedish say,
The Dutch, "How do you fare?"
"How do you have yourself to-day?"
Has quite a Polish air.
In Italy, "How do you stand?"
Will greet your every hour;
In Turkey when one takes your hand,
"Be under God's great power!"
"How do you carry you?" is heard
When Frenchmen so enquire;
While Egypt's friendly greeting word
Is "How do you perspire?"
"Thin may thy shadows never grow!"
The Persian's wish is true;
His Arab cousin, bowing low,
Says: "Praise God! How are you?"
But oddest of them all is when
Two Chinese meet, for thrice,
They shake their own two hands, and then
Ask "Have you eaten rice?"

Ridpath Recovering

TORONTO, NOV. 7.—Bruce Ridpath, the athlete and hockeyist who was so seriously injured by Colin A. Campbell's auto in Yonge street Thursday night, seemed much better yesterday, and Dr. Walter McKeown, who is attending him, fully expects him to recover.

It now is learned that Ridpath did not get off a street car, but that he was crossing the street in front of a north-bound car and walked in front of Mr. Campbell's auto, which had only the small oil lamps burning. When seen by The Star yesterday morning, Mr. J. I. Ridpath, 584 Yonge street, a brother of the injured man, stated that about five minutes before the accident occurred a younger brother coming up Yonge st. met Bruce going down on the west side of the street. There is a rumor that Bruce was crossing the street to catch a friend who was going down, but the elder brother knows nothing about this. It is evident, however, that Bruce must have crossed from the west to the east side, probably to speak to some one, and was in the act of recrossing from east to west when he was hit.

Mr. Campbell and his solicitor, Mr Rose, are reticent, but feel confident that the trial will clear matters up.

Tag Day

There is every reason to expect a substantial increase in the funds of the Children's Aid Society as the result of the Tag Day campaign, which will be conducted on Saturday. The details in connection with the crusade are practically all arranged and those in charge are hoping that the weatherman will do his best for the movement. It will be remembered that the weather was ideal last year, bright and sunshiny, with a zest in the air that made one feel open-hearted. It is hoped that the conditions are similar on Saturday and if they are, last year's splendid sum will be surpassed. The public is urged to keep Saturday in mind and have plenty of small change with them. Of course the canvassers will not object to taking a bank note and there will be no particular hesitancy in accepting those of large denominations.

Post In New Republic

WASHINGTON, D.C., NOV. 7.—Wu Ting Fang, who has accepted the post of foreign minister of the New Chinese Government, is one of the most widely-travelled, best educated, and most enlightened of living Chinese. His name was originally Ho Kai, but he changed it following a course in the British schools in Victoria. Next he went to Oxford University, finally returning home to accept a high office under the Imperial Government. He was first assigned to Washington in 1897. In 1902 he was recalled to Pekin, and it was reported that his Government considered he had become too much Occidentalized and intended to behead him. Instead, he reappeared in W[illing]ton in 1908, and served as [mi]r again until the fall of 1909, was recalled a second time to Pekin to take charge of the reorganization of various Governmental departments.

The Imperial advisories evidently suspected him of too much Americanism in his dealings, however, and he seems never to have been given a very free hand. Of late he has been living in practical retirement in Shanghai.

"What is a statesman?" he asked, rhetorically, just before his departure from Washington to China for the second time. "One who keeps up with the times."

Dr. Wu openly admired American institutions and freely predicted many times that, sooner or later, constitutional government in China was bound to come.

An Artistic Performance

Countess De Swirsky Made Favourable Impression in Kingston

Great interest is being taken in the appearance at the Grand Opera House to-night of the famous Russian dancesse, Countess Thamara de Swirsky, and no doubt there will be a large attendance. Mr. W. F. Turner of the local Opera House had a conversation over the long distance telephone with Manager D. P. Brannigan of the Kingston Opera House, where the Countess appeared last evening, and was informed that the performance was one of the most artistic and meritorious seen in that city. Furthermore, there was nothing with which the most fastidious could find fault, the programme being entirely free from vulgarity or suggestiveness. A feature is the splendid playing of the special orchestra which accompanies Countess de Swirsky.

SEWER COMPLETED

THROWN FROM WHEEL

While riding his wheel along Charlotte street, close to the sidewalk, Donald Elliott, a young lad residing on Wescott street, fell and struck his head against a telegraph pole, inflicting a nasty cut on the right cheek. He was assisted to his feet by a couple of bystanders and was able to proceed to his home unaided. He attributes the accident to the muddy condition of the road, which caused his wheel to slip from under him.

SAGE TEA WILL DARKEN THE HAIR

Restore Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed

There is nothing new about the idea of using Sage for restoring the colour of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair, with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to old-time, tiresome methods of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is call for the ready-made product, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, containing sage in the proper strength, with the addition of sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

The manufactures of this remedy authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

Don't neglect your hair. Get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-day, and notice the difference after a few days' use.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all drug gists. Special agent, Warne Drug Co.

THE TOWN MARSHAL"

Whatever else may be said of O. E. Wee's new production the "Town Marshal," which comes to the Grand Opera House next Saturday, matinee and evening, the charge of imitation of other plays cannot be made. "The Town Marshal" is new rural comedy in four acts, by that noted playwright, Lem B. Parker, and is one of the season's successes. The play virtually breaks new ground in the dramatic field, and should prove a veritable surprise when the curtain rises. It is built upon a thoroughly modern theme, viz.: The influence of thought on the lives and well being of the men and women of our present day. That thought, intangible and evanescent as it is, is still a force, a power, a theory that has for some time past engaged the serious attention of our foremost psychologists, but its portrayal upon the stage has heretofore been neglected. Special Saturday prices will prevail and the seat sale opens Thursday morning.

SOME "COLD" FACTS

The only certain way of forever avoiding one, is to be locked in an air-tight hut o fsnow, somewhere in the vicinity of the north pole. There are no other being has ever breathed forth germ-laden air.

Explorers in the arctics for years observed that exposure to the rigours of the northern atmosphere emancipated all their men from "catching colds." When the sub-arctic climes were reached again the usual epidemic of "colds" appeared.

"Atchew," "Atchew," you sneeze. "You are catching a 'cold,'" remarks the spectator. Not all, you may reply; for you have already caught "it."

The correct name may be coryza or rhinitis, with red eyes and weeping nose; tnsilitis with its swollen aching throat and fever; bronchitis with its inflamed tubes belching forth coughs and clouds of germ-laden spray; or la grip, with its protean manifestations of pain, exhaustion and fever. It matters not. To you they are all "colds."

Shut your mouth and save your life. The malicious germs that linger longingly about your face, alight upon neutral soil when inspired through the nose, but exhibit a voracious delight in penetrating the chilled surfaces of the mouth and throat. The complex, winding, spiral bones of the nasal cavities, lined with a peculiar membrane so made as to quickly warm up the coldest air inspired, is also provided with a rich supply of germicidal blood. Mouth breathers (with their large tonsils, adenoids, or nasal obstructions) invariably succumb first to any prevalent infections.

"Colds" are more frequent when there is some sudden change of temperature. A rapid drop or rise of the thermometer, cold winds, or a damp atmosphere, sends a sharp chill into the unacclimated veins and capillaries. Once the surface blood is cooled below the normal, the ubiquitous microbe begins his dirty work, and a "cold" follows.

When from exhaustive work, intemperance in food, drink, or pleasures, loss of sleep, irritation, overexertion, or mental depression, the vigour of the bodily forces is reduced, infecaion of some sort is inevitable.

"Hothouse plants" who live in superheated dwellings or steam-heated flats, woh wear fur coats, excess clothing, red-medicated lingerie, heavy neck pieces, turned-up collars, ear and pulse warmers, and other like abominations, are shining marks for the "cold" bacillus. Their skins are so spoiled and coddled by over-zealous care, that a chronic condition of exposed and sensitive veins is always present. They "take cold easily," shudder in fear at an open window, and are very free with their imprecations upon "drafts."

On the other hand, those of us who begin in the summer to restore our integument to its native savagery—like the bodies of the Sioux chiefs—by exposure to icy showers, open air sleep, thinnest underwear, who continue it as far into the winter as possible, never fear cold blasts. Chilly air currents, "drafts" or a tolerably "good wetting" have few terros.

There is no specific drug remedy for these infections. All that can be intelligently done is to maintain the sufferero's strength, keep him quiet, supply him with hot drinks, good nursing and an alert doctor.

Above all beware of the friend who tells you to "take something simple" or the neighbour who advises "the remedy that has never failed to work wonders."

TIT-BITS

A LITTLE GAME FOR CHILDREN

A jolly little game for children to participate in of evenings after study hour is called "The Trades," and is played in the following manner:

Each participant chooses a trade which he exercises in according to the style of the trade. The shoemaker mends shoes; the carpenter saws boards; the painter paints a portrait the laundress washes linen in a tub the cook stirs a cake; the locksmith hammers a lock; the spinner turns a wheel.

One of the party is chosen as leader Then all get into a circle, either sitting or standing, and begin exercising according to their individual vocations. When the leader tires of his o her trade he or she quickly takes up that of the boy or girl seated to the right, and instantly all leave off their own trade and begin imitating the movements of the right-hand neighbor. This throws the leadership to the player seated at the original leader's left, who takes up the trade abandoned by the first leader. If one of the players makes a mistake, he must pay a forfeit.

THINGS GIRLS SHOULD KNOW

Freshly cut flowers may be kept nice for a long time by putting their stems in freshly-cut potato. Stand the potato in a vase or bowl and fill with water.

Velvet that has been spotted with rain should not be brushed dry. Shake the velvet and leave it. The water will evaporate and show no mark—unless the velvet was dusty before getting rained on. In that case, wipe the velvet while still rain-damped with a clean damp cloth. This will remove the dust. Then shake well and leave to dry.

Lemon juice and salt spread over he stains made by ordinary ink, and the cloth then laid in the bright sun, will erase the stains within a few hours. Of course, this recipe is for cotton and linen, but not applicable to silk or woollens, as the lemon would remove their color.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS

A new electrical office device will seal, stamp, and keep a record of 150 letters a minute.

An exchange states that in this country the latest statistics show hat about 1,500,000 dozen eggs are produced in a year. These 18,000,000,000 eggs would go around the earth at the equator about 16 times. The line would be 400,000 miles long. The quantity of eggs would weigh not less than 1,000,000 tons. It would load 100 of the biggest steamers on the great lakes, averaging 10,000 tons to the cargo. No less than 30,000 average railroad cars would be required to move that immense weight of eggs, even if they could be shoveled into the cars like so much coal. If these American figures are multiplied by five or six, the total egg crop of the world may be roughly indicated, if not measured. It is probable that the eggs produced in one year, in all countries, weigh not less than five or six million tons. That means about 66 or 70 eggs in a year for every man, woman, and child on earth.

CAUSE FOR GENEROSITY

"I fear the Greeks even whey they bring me gifts," said Senator La Follette apropos of a trust he disliked. "And when I see this trust being generous and charitable I think of a Madison young man in a smart restaurant.

"This young man's wife said to him, in a shocked tone, at the end of their repast:

"'Why, Jack, how extravagant you are! You tipped that waiter a dollar and a half.'

"'Hush!' said Jack. 'He brought me change for a twenty when I'd given him only a ten. Would you have me be mean after that?'"—Washington Star.

THE END IS NEAR

Manchu Court is Now Contemplating Flight From Pekin

NORTH FAVOURS REPUBLIC

Pekin, Nov. 8.—The legations consider that the end of the Manchu dynasty is imminent. The provinces north of Yangtse are now declaring for a republic. The only force of Manchu troops large enough to cope with the local situation are in Pekin, but there are indications that the capital will be surrounded before many days by Chinese soldiers.

Where the court will take refuge is a question. There are evidences that the court intended to proceed to Changkau (Kalgan). Troops guarding the route to that town, which lies in the Province of Chili, 125 miles northwest of Pekin, were expected to dynamite the tunnel after the passage of the train bearing the Emperor and his household.

Reports have now been received that Chang Kia Kau is unsafe.

The National Assembly is holding meetings without a quorum, but certain members are endeavoring to maintain a nucleus. Na Tung, vice-president of the Privy Council, has taken rooms for his family in a hotel in the legation quarter. Prince Ching's palace seems to be deserted. It is believed that he is in the Forbidden City.

A concerted attack upon the foreigners is not feared, but there are many within the city who are opposed to foreigners.

Gen. Chang Shao Tsen, who was appointed by Imperial edict as envoy to proceed to Yangtse provinces to conciliate the people, has declined the appointment, saying that he preferred to remain with his own troops at Lanchau. The third Changchun division, which halted at Lanchau for one day, is being sent to Fengtai, near Pekin. A train load of arms and ammunition from Lanchau has already been sidetracked at that point. It is believed that the third division is acting under Gen. Chang's orders.

The Government proposed yesterday to cut the Pekin-Tientsin Railway beyond Fengtai, to prevent additional troops from arriving. It is understood that the British Minister, Sir John Jordan, protested, on the ground that Great Britain was entitled to operate the railway in the event of the suspension of service, in accordance with an old agreement. Consequently the line is still open.

The Chinese report that the Kalgan Railway is in the hands of the revolutionaries, while a rebel force is proceeding apparently in the direction of Pekin, at a point on the railway about 70 miles from the capital. All the railway connections with the capital are threatened.

It is expected that the assassination of Gen. Wu Lu Cheng will lead to the revolt of the remainder of his old Sixth Division, which is now with Yuan Shi Kai. The Government reports, however, that two train loads of Imperial soldiers are now on their way to Hankow, and these may be sufficient to prevent a mutiny.

A hundred carts left Pekin last night for Jehol, and two hundred mounted Manchus proceeded in the same direction early in the day. The Chinese believe that this advance party is preparing the way for the flight of the court, but many Manchus are leaving and troops are constantly moving in the vicinity of Pekin. The Manchus troops here number 11,000, Imperial Guards 7,500, police 4,000, and banner police about 5,000.

The city was quiet last night, and there is no sign of any intended movement.

Chefoo, in Shantung Province, has gone over to the revolutionaries. Prior to this, one of the leaders, Wang Shao Nien, a distinguished educationalist, informed the consuls that everything was ready for a peaceful assumption of authority by the Chinese, and that there would be no slaughter of the Manchus unless they resisted.

British Regiment Needed.

London, Nov. 8.—The Pekin correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says: "The situation here to-day is far worse than ever before. The commonest prudence demands that a British regiment should be brought from Tientsin to Pekin. Prince Tsai Tao, ex-Minister of War, and a brother of the Prince Regent, is attempting to persuade the Empress Dowager to depose the regent.

"The Chinese Foreign Board is authority for stating that a scheme for the neutralization of Shanghai is under consideration, similar to that established at the time of the taiopina rebellion."

A despatch to The Telegraph from Shanghai says that the Province of Yunhan has declared its independence and that the viceroy has disappeared.

Court Terror-Stricken.

London, Nov. 8.—A Pekin despatch to The Times, dated Nov. 6, says that trustworthy information from the court shows that the court is paralyzed with fear. It will remain at Pekin, whatever happens, says the correspondent, but many princesses and noble ladies have sought the protection of the foreign concessions.

A despatch to The Daily Mail from Rangoon, British India, gives reports that Chinese troops in Tengyueh, in the Province of Tunnan, which borders on Burma, mutinied on Oct. 27, killing Gen. Chang and other officers. The Taotai was either killed or committed suicide. The women members of his family were thrown into a well and the treasury was looted.

According to revolutionary accounts, Talifu, in the same province, was captured on Oct. 25, and Yung Chang and Yunanfu on Oct. 27. All the officials were executed.

Manhood Suffrage For Britain.

London, Nov. 8.—A deputation composed of 90 members of Parliament waited upon Premier Asquith yesterday evening to memoralize him in favor of adult suffrage, which would enfranchise all persons of both sexes. Arthur Henderson, M.P. for Durham, pointed out that only 7,904,655 persons were enfranchised out of 45,000,000.

The Foreign Minister said that the Government was pledged to manhood suffrage and would introduce a bill to that effect, but it would not include women. The bill, however, he said, would be in such a form that the House could extend it to include women if the House so pleased.

Bonus to Break Record.

Pasadena, Nov. 8.—A gold cup and bonuses up to $8,000 have been offered by the backers of Aviator C. P. Rodgers, to any rival airman who can break Rodgers' transcontinental record of 49 days. This was announced yesterday by Edward Merritt, one of Rodgers' business representatives.

The bonuses, it was stated, would be given as follows: $100 a day for every day cut from the 49 days' record; $500 for each day under 40 days; $1,000 for each day under 35.

To Honor Sir Wilfrid.

Ottawa, Nov. 8.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's seventieth birthday on Monday, the 20th inst., will be fittingly marked by the Liberal members of Parliament. A suggestion has been made that the day be made the occasion of an expression of the affection and esteem of Liberals for their leader.

ITALIANS GET BUSY

Forward Movement at Tripoli Proves Successful

RIOTS IN TUNIS

Paris, Nov. 8.—A Tripoli despatch from an Italian source says that the Italian advance began yesterday. A turning movement was executed and the Hamedieh fort was occupied.

Claim Turkish Victory.

Constantinople, Nov. 8.—The War Office yesterday does not claim that the Turkish troops have reoccupied Derna, Tripoli. An official telegram from that quarter, however, reports that the Turks won a big victory over the Italians, 500 of the latter being killed and 18 guns and large quantities of ammunition and provisions being captured. The Porte has despatched a protest to the Powers against Italy's claim that she has annexed Tripoli and Cyrenaica, setting forth Turkey's determination to resist.

The Porte declares that the annexation proclamation is void because it is contrary to the elementary principles of international law while Turkey and Italy are still in a state of war, and that the Ottoman Government is resolved to preserve and defend by force of arms its sovereign rights.

Further, says the Porte, the proclamation is in violation of the engagements solemnly contracted under treaties, especially those of Paris and Berlin, as well as by Italy towards the great Powers as by the latter towards the Ottoman Government.

Rioting In Tunis.

Tunis, Nov. 8.—Groups of Italians and Arabs came into collision yesterday and a desperate affray ensued. It required strenuous efforts on the part of the whole police force, reinforced by detachments of troops, to restore order, and this was only accomplished after a large number had been killed or wounded on both sides. In addition, a police sergeant was killed and several of his men were badly hurt.

The rioting continued for a long time in different sections of the city. Revolvers were freely used. It is even reported that at one time a mob of Arabs, several thousand strong, threatened to overpower the troops, who fired five volleys. The number of killed has not been established, but it is estimated at from twenty to fifty.

The disorders began as a result of a decision of the municipality to revise the boundaries of the Arab cemetery. A thousand Arabs repaired to the cemetery to protest. Others fell upon the surveyors, who were Italians. The affair soon assumed the proportions of a regular battle between Arabs and Italians, and spread to the different quarters of the city.

Leave Canada For Italy.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Fifty Italians will leave the Grand Trunk depot tonight for New York, where they will embark on the Cunarder Carpathia for Italy. Nearly all of them will enlist for service in the Italian army in Tripoli, according to Antonio Cordasco, a prominent Italian shipping agent of this city. Mr. Cordasco claims that many hundreds have left Canada in the last few weeks for this purpose and he believes that hundreds more will leave in the next few days.

These men believe that when the war is over Italian soldiers will be settled on the land and will be rewarded for their services by substantial land grants.

Louis Coanga, on the other hand, declares that the present exodus of Italians, while slightly larger than usual, is simply due to natural causes and that the men are going home to spend the winter quietly in Italy and not to fight.

Warns Catholics.

Kingston, Nov. 8.—"The Canadian Freeman," a Catholic organ published here, makes the following comment yesterday on the McRae murder case at Cornwall:

"The life sentence was something out of the ordinary under the circumstances connected with the case, and Justice Sutherland's ideas may become a matter of question later on. However, Catholics who are traveling towards the mixed marriage destiny should seriously reflect and think of the unfortunate outcome of the marriage of a Carp doctor to the daughter of one of Glengarry's most highly respected Scotch Catholics. Farquhar McRae's life sentence at his age of 65 was surely a surprise."

Put Stopper on Langevin.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—The statement was made here yesterday that owing to irritation caused in political circles and because the question has long since ceased to interest the public and papal delegate at Ottawa, Mgr. Stagni has forbidden His Grace Mgr. Langevin, Archbishop of St. Boniface, discussing the Manitoba school question in the province of Quebec.

It is further said that the decision was reached in high quarters on account of the announcement made some time ago by Mgr. Langevin to the effect that he felt like preaching a crusade in all parts of Quebec, taking the ground that the school question is not settled.

New Navy For Portugal.

Lisbon, Nov. 8.—The British Minister at Lisbon in a conference with the Minister of Marine, pointed out that, as Portugal was an ally of Great Britain's, she must reorganize her navy. Accordingly the Government has decided to purchase a number of warships and certain artillery.

A proposal has been received from British capitalists for a loan of $50,000,000 to run twenty-five years at 4 per cent., conditional, however, on an agreement that the proposed warships shall be built in England. The Government, nevertheless, will invite bids from French and German constructors.

Broke His Neck.

Madoc, Nov. 8.—Irwin Love, aged 60, an old resident of Madoc Township, and for the past five years living retired with his daughter in Madoc Village, left his house soon after dinner to hang a door in a neighboring barn. When he did not return for his usual evening meal, neighbors who went to look him up, found him dead on the barn floor, his neck broken. He had evidently fallen from a box about three feet high, on which he stood to hang the door.

Must Build New School.

Brantford, Nov. 8.—Brantford City Council has been notified by the school board authorities that a new school in Holmedale to cost $50,000 will be built next year, whether the Council authorizes the issue of debentures or not. The Council will likely provide the money without taking a vote of the ratepayers.

Crushed His Skull.

Hamilton, Nov. 8.—William Fairweather, East Simcoe street, was almost instantly killed at the plant of the Hamilton Bridge Works Co yesterday afternoon, when a reinforcing plate weighing about 400 pounds fell on him and crushed his skull.

Home For Working Girls.

London, Nov. 8.—Queen Mary will devote the $375,000 subscribed by the Marys of the Empire as a coronation gift to the establishment of a seaside home for working girls.

The fund was largely subscribed to by the women of Canada, who rejoice in the name of Mary.

TAMMANY HARD HIT

New York State Goes Republican in Local Contests

SURPRISES IN THE RESULTS

New York, Nov. 8.—Returns received up to midnight from throughout the state on the assembly election indicate that the complexion of that body will be as follows: Republicans, 109; Democrats, 49; Socialist, 1. This would mean a net gain of 37 seats for the Republicans and give them a majority of 50.

Tammany Hall's hold on New York City was shaken yesterday in a battle of the ballots in which local offices were mainly at stake. The Democrats successfully defended their ancient strongholds of Manhattan and the Bronx, but by greatly reduced pluralities. Queen's County also stood by the Democrats, but the Republican-fusion candidates made nearly a clean sweep of Brooklyn and probably divided honors in the borough of Richmond.

A year ago Manhattan and Bronx gave Governor Dix a plurality of 68,000 and elected a Democratic supreme court justice by about 22,000. Yesterday Robert L. Fowler, the Democratic candidate for surrogate, carried New York County with a maximum plurality of about 17,000.

The Democrats elected their candidate for sheriff by about 8,000, and the three Democratic candidates for supreme court justices in the first judicial district pulled through by a bare 5,000. Francis M. Scott, the fourth justice elected, was endorsed by both parties.

The Republicans gained eight assemblymen in New York County, and will send 16 members of that body out of the total delegation of 35.

Rochester Goes Republican.

Rochester, N.Y., Nov. 8.—Hiram H. Edgerton (Republican) was elected mayor of Rochester yesterday for the third time, by about 6,500 plurality. He carried with him the entire city ticket. The Republicans have 19 of 32 seats in the common council. Munroe County also went Republican and will send a solid delegation to the assembly.

Republicans Sweep Buffalo.

Buffalo, N.Y., Nov. 8.—The Republicans made practically a clean sweep in Buffalo and Erie County yesterday. The principal candidates on the city ticket were elected by pluralities ranging from 3,000 to 10,000. In the upper house all five Republican candidates were elected, and in the board of aldermen the result is: Republicans 19, Democrats 9, a Republican gain of 5.

General Republican Victory.

Providence, R.I., Nov. 8.—Returns at midnight from more than half of the state indicate a general Republican victory. Governor Pothier, a native of Quebec, being returned to office apparently by a greatly increased plurality. With 108 out of 184 voting precincts heard from the vote was: Pothier, 21,119; Waterman (Dem.) 16,530.

The Republican gains extended into the general assembly, where the Republican majority of last year has been augmented apparently, so that the Democratic representation will be very slight. Indications at midnight were that the Senate would be solidly Republican.

Return to Democratic Fold.

Cleveland, Nov. 8.—Cleveland, which two years ago went Republican, electing Herman C. Baehr mayor over the late Tom L. Johnson, yesterday returned to the Democratic fold, electing Newton D. Baker, Tom L. Johnson's political heir, mayor, over Frank C. Hogen, Republican, by about 18,000 majority.

The entire Democratic city ticket won with the exception of five councilmen.

Governor Foss Safe.

Boston, Nov. 8.—On the face of the returns from 984 out of 1,070 election districts, the Democrats won the state election yesterday and kept Massachusetts in the party column by continuing Governor Eugene N. Foss in office for a second term. The returns gave Foss (Deb.), 187,863; Frothingham (Rep.), 177,074. Last year the same districts gave Foss 201,284; Draper (Rep.) 167,497.

The margin of victory yesterday was the narrowest in years, and for many hours after the close of the polls the result hung in the balance.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Serious news is received daily from Angola, Portuguese West Africa. A revolt among the natives is spreading rapidly and they are burning and pillaging everything in their path.

The roof of a Grand Trunk freight car was blown off at Kingston yesterday in a peculiar manner. It was loaded with corn, and the contents became moistened and fermented.

Burglars Monday night blew open the safe at the office of Robertson, Nicoll & Co., at Smith's Falls, using nitro-glycerine. They only took about $5 in silver and some insurance papers.

John Pettifier of North Cloyne shot himself in the right arm, and it is feared it will have to be amputated. He had to drive thirty miles to get a train to reach Kingston for medical treatment.

A tract of land 300 acres in extent, and situated northwest of the asylum building at Orillia, has been selected as a site for the establishment of the Government farm in connection with the asylum.

The flour and planing mills of R. O. Konkle, two miles from Beamsville, were completely destroyed by fire yesterday, entailing a loss of over $9,000. It is supposed some person dropped a match or cigar stub among the shavings.

Doorithe Raymond, of Three Rivers, Que., a lad of 18, was accidentally killed Monday afternoon when he slipped, and grasped a wire which had got crossed with the city's lighting system wires. He was electrocuted.

Memorial Arch Planned.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—The construction of the New York to Montreal highway is assured. It may be completed next year. If not, it will be finished the following year.

A member of the Canadian section of the movement for better roads said that the Montreal-New York road would be but a part of a much more extensive movement to establish a through road between the City of Quebec and Miami, Fla.

The roadway between this city and the American border line will be known as the King Edward road, and it is probable that there will be erected a memorial arch on the spot where the line crosses the boundary to celebrate the hundred years' peace between Great Britain and the United States.

In the latter connection there is to be a celebration at Lake Champlain in 1914, and the new arch, which will probably be donated by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, will be dedicated on that occasion by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught.

Perjury Case at Cobourg.

Cobourg, Nov. 8.—Mr. Justice Latchford is presiding at the fall assizes, which opened here yesterday. The only case of importance is the Hicks' perjury case, in which Mr. Henry Hicks, ex-reeve of Colborne, is charged with perjury in connection with his evidence at the Brimacombe murder case here last spring. W. F. Davidson, K.C., Toronto, and W. F. Kerr, Cobourg, is defending Mr. Hicks.

THIRTY YEARS OF DISFIGURING ECZEMA CURED

"Ever since I was a little girl, thirty years ago, I had suffered tortures from eczema in one of its worst forms. The disease runs in my family, and mine was of a scaly and most disfiguring kind. The eczema formed in round rings, and then scales all over my face and limbs. I have been smothered from head to foot. I was born in Leamington, which is famous for its sulphur baths and pump waters, and one would think that after taking the treatment there regularly as I did, the disease would long ago have been cured, but it was not. I attended the ——— Hospital for years and years, so you will see I gave it a fair trial. Everyone in the town knew of my case. My face was disfigured very badly. A doctor told me that I should never get rid of it. I spent pounds in doctors' bills, and I attended several hospitals but nothing did any good. "Then one day an uncle of mine recommended the Cuticura Remedies. I took his advice, and commenced to use the Cuticura Soap. To my astonishment an improvement at once set in, and my hair, which had been a complete mass of scales and scurf, soon began to look in splendid condition. Then I bought a box of Cuticura Ointments, and this cleared my skin wonderfully. In a few weeks' time all traces of the scaly eruptions had completely disappeared. Now my skin is clear and healthy, and thanks to the Cuticura Remedies I am completely cured of eczema. All my neighbours were astounded. The Cuticura Remedies are worth their weight in gold, and one tablet of Cuticura Soap goes further than four cakes of cheaper soaps. It has brought happiness into my home." (Signed) Mrs. Butler, 17, Francis Rd., The Cotterridge, King's Norton, Birmingham, Eng., July 26, 1910.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, but those who wish to try them without charge may do so by sending to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., 82 Columbus Ave., Boston, U. S. A., for a liberal sample of each, post-free, with 32-p. skin book.

A TRUE LITTLE CANADIAN

A Short Story.

(Gina M. Fairlie, in the Presbyterian).

"Dago—just plain dago—that's all she is," said the boys in the school yard, regarding the small stranger, contemptuously.

Rachel Oblonsky faced them with all the fervour of her Jewish blood and all the defiance her nine years could muster.

"Ain't," she asserted, proudly, "I go to be Canadian."

"Go to be! Ha, ha!" laughed the boys, gleefully. They did not often have such a fresh new victim to torment. "Why, you can't even speak English."

Rachel's eyes blazed. In the city, in the school on Elizabeth street, they called her the best English scholar there. Oh, it was a beautiful school that! She wished her father had never left the city to come to this lonely, cruel place. In Elizabeth Street school, too, you weren't Italians or "dagoes," Jews or "sheeneys"—you were just pure Canadian, and you loved Canada and the King and the flag, and you worked and studied hard, hard, that you might make good Canadians. Canada had done so much for you—given you peaceful homes—there were no cruel soldiers here as there were in Russia to ransack your homes, prod you with their sticks and knives, and—kill your baby sister—Rachel shut her eyes tight, she wanted to forget that awful night. There were no persecutions here—at least there weren't in Elizabeth Street school—they took you on your merits there; but here in this little town, where there were so few foreigners, it was going to be different. It looked as if the persecutions might be beginning all over again.

"But—but—I can to speak English!" The words came bursting out, fairly tumbling over themselves. "And—and—I can to read—and write—and—and to count," she concluded eagerly. She just wished she could show these taunting boys and those girls in the background just how she could count—they might change their opinion of her then. She had a fine head for figures, the teacher in the old school had told her, and there was not a boy or girl of any age in the whole Ward who could beat her. Rachel wondered rather breathlessly if she could beat them here. But she shrank back at the boisterous, mocking laughter that greeted her outburst. It wouldn't be any use anyway, she reflected despairingly, they'd never believe any good of her—the curse of her race was upon her.

"Well, anyway," called out one very small boy, "you may be able to read and write and 'figger,' and you may belong to our school, but you're not going to take part in our First of July celebratin to-morrow; so you can just get out till it's over. It's only for real Canadians, and you're no Canadian—you're just a foreigner and nothin'—nothin' but a heathen," he concluded, scathingly.

Rachel's eyes blazed again. "Ain't—ain't to be a heathen," she cried. "I go to be a Hebrew Christian—that's what!"

"Well, that means a Jew, doesn't it And, you can't be a Jew and a Christian both, so you must be a heathen. And we don't want any old heathens, or foreigners either, in our patriotic procession; so there!"

Rachel still faced her mocking accusers undauntedly. "But, the Christ Himself," she explained, proudly, "was a Jew. He belong to the House of David—of God's chosen people Israel."

There was a horrified "O-o-oh!" followed by a sudden strange silence. Why! Why! That thought had never entered into their heads before. It was true what this child of Israel said, that the Christ they worshipped—the Christ who gave them the name of Christians had belonged to the "despised race," and that the Jews were indeed His "Chosen people."

They gasped, and as they thought about the strange thing, the school bell roused them with its clamour.

Inside, they had only time for lessons, but little Rachel Oblonsky, sitting in a lonely seat apart, had time to pull herself togeher again. Perhaps—and at the thought Rachel's heart beat faster—perhaps she might even to-day have a chance to show them——

"Third class in arithmetic," called the teacher.

Rachel sank back regretfully. She was only in the second book—her chance had not come yet. Some day soon she would be in the third class, she'd better find out if it would be hard Then her eyes opened wide. Why, the third class stumbled and stammered over questions that she could work in——

She drew an audible breath of ecstasy. The teacher turned at the sound. Rachel's eager face caught and held her—there was an appeal behind it, she knew.

"Do you think that you could do this sum, Rachel?" was the unbelievable question she asked.

Rachel clasped her hands together tightly. "Oh, please, mees, I could to multiply quick, quick, and I could to add like this." Her arm flung out like a flash.

The children snickered, but the teacher only smiled encouragingly. "Come away up to the front, then, and show us what you can do." She felt just a little bit sorry for Rachel. She was such a strange little girl in a strange land.

But Rachel didn't mind, not even when she saw the scornful glances and heard "dago," "sheeney," and "butter-in" follow her up to the platform.

The teacher began marking slowly on the blackboard—she'd let poor little Rachel down easy—a long single column of figures.

"Oh," said Rachel, disappointedly, "I could do three—four rows all to once."

Then down went the figures on the board thick and fast—three columns deep—four columns deep—and still Rachel's answers followed just as thick and fast.

The children sat up now, interested and amazed. The teacher laughed again—this time it was such a pleased laugh—and her chalk flew faster and faster. Rachel Oblonsky might not be able to speak good English, but there wasn't a child in the school who could beat her at sums, anyway. Why, she was a prodigy!

"I couldn't add as quickly myself," said the teacher, breathlessly, throwing down the chalk she had exhausted, and beaming on Rachel. "We'll try some multiplying now." And again long rows of figures went down, multiplied by two, three, four, and five other figures, and almost before the last one confronted her, there flashed out Rachel's answer.

The children now regarded her with awe. Such knowledge was so uncanny that they even forgot themselves to the extent of giving a few feeble claps of approbation as she shyly tip-toed back to her seat. Whereupon Rachel's little heart was filled almost to bursting with gratitude and affection. Oh, it was a beautiful country after all—Canada—whether you were a Jew or a Christian, a Russian or a pure Canadian. Rachel's mind wandered off into far fields—thinking great things, planning great things, hoping great things, but it jumped back to earth again, when the teacher began a patriotic talk—because to-morrow's Dominion Day.

Rachel liked patriotic talks—they'd had lots of them in Elizabeth Street school, where they tried first and foremost and always to make you into good Canadians. She liked the little shivery feelings they gave you down your back, even if you were an exile in this strange land. She loved the flag—the country—that had given them shelter.

There, the teacher was carefully unfolding the silken folds of one now. The red, the white, and the blue glimmered and shone as the sunlight struck it. The children regarded it pridefully. It was their very own flag, given to them several days before by the Daughters of the Empire, and it was to be carried to-morrow at the head of their patriotic procession.

Then the teacher told them the story of the flag and what it stood for. Of the token it was, of their loyalty to King and country, of the heroes who had died for it, of the men and women it called to them to be—the flaming red to be brave, the royal blue to be true, and the snow white to be pure.

Hushed and awed the children listened, especially when they were told of how this flag of their own had been given to them as a trust, to reverence, and to cherish, and to keep ever before their eyes the ideals it stood for.

Suddenly, there rang out a strange, ominous, arresting sound—the voice of a deep-toned gong.

But the teacher's face was white, and the silken flag in her hand fluttered unheeded to the floor. She knew it wasn't fire drill. A pungent odour was in the air, and already through the closed door of the cloak room there floated a tiny spiral of smoke. It must be in there or the classroom below.

The children nearest the door had already disappeared, and in the hall below could be heard the rush from the lower classrooms, and the shrill frightened sound of childish voices. The bigger boys and girls looked startled. No one had ever shouted before at fire drill. What was the matter with this one?

The teacher was counting still, urging them on with a white anxious face. "Left right, left, right! Quick! Quick! If you see smoke, don't be afraid, children," her voice called after them into the hall. "Keep right on, be brave!"

Rachel Oblonsky followed blindly with the rest, bewildered, amazed. She did not know yet what all the fuss was about, but she felt danger in the air—fear—and a sense of some impending disaster.

Out into the open yard they filed, crowded now with panic-stricken children. "Fire! Fire!" the bigger ones shouted, and the panic grew.

Down the street sounded the wild clang of the fire reels, and the rush of galloping horses, and frantic teachers, and still more frantic older scholars swept the little ones out of the line of danger, as the great red wagons and the foaming horses dashed up outside, while wild-eyed, distracted parents came rushing from every direction. But the teachers reassured them. "Every child was out," they told them decidedly.

Already a tongue of flame had appeared at one of the upper windows and a dense cloud of smoke came rolling from one of the lower ones. Rachel knew now what the matter was. Thus suddenly—she remembered! She saw again the flutter of red, white, and blue silk to the floor, the sudden rush from the room—the teacher following them close. There she was now across the yard, holding a group of riotous boys in check—and no flag! It must be still lying—the flag of their country—the flag of her country—dishonoured, neglected, and forgotten on the floor of the upper classroom.

Through the crowd Rachel darted, without a moment's hesitation—a little unnoticed figure in the excitement. There was a door on the side farthest away from that perilous flame. It was open—no smoke even—and the child flew through it and up the stairs.

At the top, however, a smouldering blast of smoke struck her. But Rachel was undaunted. "A trust," the teacher had called the flag. That meant something to be taken care of—with your life if need be. The others had forgotten, so because she was a little Canadian, too, she must take the charge.

The school on Elizabeth Street taught you other things besides reading, writing, and arithmetic, so Rachel knew that the safest place in a fire was her hands and knees—faster, faster! There! There was a door. Was this the one?

She stopped, stupefied, bewildered. Through it, at the far end of the room, her stinging eyes saw a tongue of flame. The black smoke grew thicker. Even drawing herself flatly along the floor, Rachel could scarcely breathe. Outside she could hear the swish of water and the firemen's shouts. They must have the ladders up against the wall now. If she could only make a wild dash, snatch the flag and fling it from the window, it at any rate would be safe. But the room was so wide, so strangely dark. Could she ever cross it, could she——

Then suddenly the strained watching crowd outside got a further shock. At the smoke-draped window of the upper classroom there appeared for a moment a little, wild-eyed, dark face, and a little blackened arm flung forth—to sail away on the wind—a silken Canadian flag.

A horrified cry went up as the little face disappeared, but it was only for an instant. A big fireman appeared from behind, blocking the window, a ladder was run up and the little unconscious heroine of the flag was carried carefully down into the wondering crowd.

"Who is she?" they questioned, curiously.

"Where did she come from?"

"Was she left behind, or did she really go back for that flag?"

Rachel's teacher pushed her way to the child's side. She remembered her enraptured face as she told the story of the flag, and she thought she understood.

The black eyes opened wildly. "The flag! I got to get it! No one else go—it my country, too—I—"

The teacher lifted her gently and tenderly. One hand and arm were scorched, but that was all. To-morrow Rachel would be as well as ever again.

"You saved the flag, dear," she said, "don't you remember? You were brave and true to the trust when all the rest of us forgot."

Rachel's eyes sought her teacher's eagerly. "I Canadian now-" she asked, pleadingly.

"Oh, I could to cry for that, I feel so good," said Rachel, and her eyes closed ecstatically.

They had the First of July celebration next day, in spite of the burnt schoolhouse, which wasn't so badly damaged after all. Some people called it a thanksgiving celebration, but the boys and girls still thought of it only as patriotic, and they kept it loyally. The rescued flag, with a dark stain in one corner, showing the danger it had come through, was carried at the head of the procession. One of the big boys carried it, of course, for the pole was heavy, but the cord that stretched its silken glory out to view was held by a little girl with a dark, eager face and bandaged hands—little Rachel Oblonsky—who had worthily proved herself a loyal and true Canadian!

The Feeble, Wasted Nerves Were Restored and Revitalized by

Nervous prostration is a terrible disease to all who understand its symptoms. At times the sufferer feels comparatively well, but with slight exertion the dreadful helplessness returns and all strength and vitality seems to leave the system.

This letter from Mrs. Martin very well describes the terrible conditions in which many a sufferer finds herself. She also tells how she regained health and strength by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after all other treatments had failed.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition from nervous exhaustion and prostration. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. The weakness was so great that I could not so much as sweep the floor without fainting, but the nerve food helped me after the doctors failed. It has done wonders in building up my nervous system. I can do my own housework now and washing, and feel that this great medicine has been a God-send to me. I think it is the best of medicines."

LIGHT OF THE FIREFLY

The statement that the light of fireflies and other phosphorescent animals is produced without any sensible degree of heat has often been repeated without any information as to the quantity of heat that would be required to produce a similar amount of light by artificial methods. This information is supplied by Professor McIntosh. He says that a temperature approaching 2,000 degrees Fahrenheit would be necessary to make a light equivalent to that emitted by an ordinary firefly. The enormous waste of energy in all industrial methods of producing light is a matter of common knowledge, and the example of the firefly remains unimitated by man. The very simplicity of the mechanism employed by nature in phosphorescent animals is baffling. — Harper's Weekly.

HASTINGS ITEMS OF INTEREST

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, NOV. 4.—A very sad accident, which has cast a gloom over the entire community, occurred on Monday evening last, when an employee of the tannery, named Stanford, went down to death in the waters of the Trent. It appears that he and a companion were out in a boat when, unfortunately, he dropped into the water and sank to rise no more. Search was at once made for the body, which was found about one hour after the accident. Deceased was a native of England, and leaves to mourn his loss a widow and three small children, who have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement.

The funeral of the late Mr. J. Faux took place on Monday from the home of his son-in-law, Mr. T. Lynch, to the Westwood Cemetery for interment. Deceased had been ailing for about two weeks, and death was due to pneumonia. He leaves to mourn his loss, besides his widow, two sons and one daughter.

At the evening service in the Methodist Church on Sunday Rev. Mr. Anderson preached a temperance sermon, dealing with the objections raised to the Local Option by-law, which is so much talked of at the present time. The reverand gentleman's arguments were very forcible and to the point, and showed, without doubt, that the by-law would be of great benefit to our town.

Mrs. Thistlewaite and daughter, Annie, of Peterborough, spent the week-end with friends in town.

Miss F. Tyler has been in Campbellford visiting friends.

Mr. W. Huycke, of Peterborough, spent Sunday at the home of his brother, Mr. L. T. Huycke.

Miss Annie Christie, of Peterborough, has been the guest of Miss Gladys Stevenson, town.

Mrs. Gibson is visiting her friend, Mrs. A. Huycke.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson, of Belleville, spent a few days at the home of his sister, Mrs. B. Shaw.

Mr. and Mrs. Walton and daughters, of Peterborough, have been visiting with Mr. and Mrs. V. German.

Mr. Walton rendered a solo in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening, which was highly appreciated.

Mr. and Mrs. Ab Brown, of Norwood, spent Sunday with the former's sister, Mrs. J. Buck.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Thompson, of Seymour, have been guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Humphries.

Mrs. J. Collins, of Otonabee, spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Beamish.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilson, of Toronto, have been in town visiting friends

Miss Blanche Humphries, of Bellevue, has been visiting under the parental roof.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Oakman spent Sunday with friends in Peterborough.

Miss Ella Tate spent Saturday and Sunday in Peterborough.

Mr. C. Plant was in Norwood on Sunday.

The many friends of Miss Ethel Stinson are pleased to see her so far recovered as to be able to drive out.

A pleasing event took place on Tuesday evening last at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. Davidson, when their eldest daughter, Mar, was united in marriage to Mr. J. Clysdale, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties. After the ceremony and customary congratulations, the bride led the way to the dining-room, where a sumptuous repast was laid, and much enjoyed by all. Mr. and Mrs. Clysdale have a host of friends who will follow them with best wishes through life.

Another aged resident of Asphodel has been called away in the person of Mrs. John Lynch, relict of John Lynch, who died just five months ago. Deceased was 74 years of age, and has been ailing for a number of years. The funeral was held on Saturday morning to the church at Hastings, and from thence to the R.C. Cemetery for interment.

An accident, which might have caused the death of Mr. B. I. Gibson, occurred on Saturday morning. Mr. Gibson, by some means, lost his footing and fell into the water, and was only rescued in time to save his life.

We are sorry to learn that our popular druggist, Mr. Bingham, is confined to his home through illness.

HORSE'S LEG SWELLED

Animal Was Too Sore and Lame to Work—Quickly Cured by "Nerviline."

"I have had a long experience in treating horses, and I can safely say that I know of no liniment for strains, spraine, and swelling that is so useful around the stable as Nerviline." Thus writes Mr. Joshua E. Murchison, from his home, Crafts Hill P. O. I had a fine young mare that wrenched her right fore leg, and from the shoulder down she was stiff, sore, and swollen. I applied Nerviline, and it worked like a charm; in fact, that mare was in shape to work a day after I used Nerviline.

Christmas Goods

MONTREAL, NOV. 6.—If the eyes of all the good little girls and boys of Montreal could have been permitted to peep into the capacious boxes and packing cases which formed a considerable portion of the huge cargo of the Allan Line Victorian which reached here yesterday from Liverpool, it is sure that Santa Claus and his mystical reindeer would have figured largely in many peaceful dreams of last night.

For the boxes contained nothing more or less than several tons of toys from huge Dutch Noahs' Arks with their scores of painted animals, to big dolls four feet high and dressed by the very best French and German stores. Then there were regiments and regiments of toy soldiers, dolls' houses from Switzerland, sleighs and miniature railway equipment some of which could be operated by their own electricity and others by their own steam, toy drums and trumpets, big and small, mechanical toys in hundreds and parlor games by the thousand.

The great essentials of the Christmas dinner were not lost sight of either, for the liner carried some hundreds of tons of foodstuffs, including English mince pies, pastry, sweets, cakes, plum puddings, jams, jellies, biscuits, spices and preserved fruits.

About Colds

When the knowledge that colds and coughs are infectious becomes general, they will go out of fashion. Such knowledge comes slowly, but it is known that the way to get rid of the scourge is to guard against infection.

Nansen and his men while in the Arctic region for three years did not have colds. Even in those terrible expeditions, when their clothing, saturated with perspiration, froze upon their bodies, so that it took an hour to thaw them out, there was no "cold to catch." When they got back to civilization they all caught cold.

The Island of St. Kilda, forty miles beyond the Hebrides, gives curious confirmation of the contagion of colds. Every time a ship stops there all the inhabitants, including the infants at the breast, have acute colds. More than two hundred years ago, Dr. Johnson and Boswell called it "stranger's cold." The remarkable thing about it is that as soon as the cold has run its course there would be no more till another ship comes.

"The cat is sneezing, we shall all have colds," shows that the cat has picked up the bacilli in her nocturnal rambles and is proceeding to distribute them to the household.

Doubtless the most frequent cause of colds among children, from five to fifteen years of age, is adenoids. Heredity has some influence, but a damp and cold climate, and unhygienic surroundings are the exciting causes. The nasopharynx forms the roof of the throat, when the mouth is widely opened. Hidden by the tonsils it can only be seen by the aid of reflected light of a laryngeal mirror. In the healthy throat it is a spongy mass one-eighth of an inch thick on the posterior wall; but when there is a catarrhal condition, either acute or chronic, it becomes swollen and prevents the free passage of air through the nose so that mouth breathing is necessary, and the mouth must be kept open in order to breathe. Sometimes adenoids cover the opening to the Eustachian tube, causing deafness.

In the condition known as "the adenoid face," the face lengthens, the nose is pinched with loss of power in the nostrils, the upper teeth become prominent from the effort to breathe, the lips are swollen and thick, and the general aspect of the child vacant. The voice is muffled, often stammering and stuttering, which is cured by the removal of the adenoids.

TREATMENT FOR COLDS

Belief that colds are infectious, lessens their number. Belief that they are the result of drafts, and cold increases the number, because it makes us afraid of fresh air and ventilation. To-day no house is complete without its out of door sleeping room.

Lack of exercise, absence of fresh air, and over-heated rooms are all contributing causes to lower the vitality so that there is no longer the requisite resistance to fight off the microbes of cold. We catch cold easily because our vitality is low and our vitality is low because we neglect fresh air, sunshine, and out of door exercise.

Having taken every precaution against taking cold, and failed, the best method of getting rid of it is the sweating process. Hot mustard foothath with hot drinks, as ginger tea, or hot lemonade. A small tub is set in a warm corner near enough to the patient's bed so that he will not get chilled in reaching it. Put several tablespoons of ground mustard in the water. Add hot water as hot as can be borne for twenty minutes; wrap up in blankets while patient is being rubbed dry. A Dover powder, five to ten grains of quinine, with a laxative and the patient will be able to go to work the next day. If the weather is bad stay in bed for a day or two. Cayenne pepper is a good addition to the quinine. When the cold causes congestion of the nasal passages, so that breathing is difficult, from swelling of the mucous membrane, very great relief is found in the use of a solution of adrenalin chloride. It can be bought in a 1 to 1,000 solution in ounce bottles, and should be kept in the dark. Boil water, add a half teaspoon of salt to the quart. Add the adrenalin in the proportion of one to ten. Use the solution in an atomizer or on i awab made on a toothpick wound with absorbent cotton, two or three times a day. Liquid allolene with five grains of menthol to be used between times will help the healing and soothing work. Keep the bowels free and avoid getting chilled. Deep breathing of fresh air will sometimes abort a cold, and is useful in every stage of a cold. Usually those who are always having colds are the flabby ones who coddle themselves constantly.—Woman's World for November.

FOWL FOR MARKET

From Farm and Dairy.

A representative of one of our largest Canadian produce houses, when talking with an editor of Farm and Dairy recently, mentioned the value of properly shaping fowl before sending them to market. He told us of a consignment of fowl that they had sold to a Jewish retail merchant in Montreal. The fowl were in fair flesh, but no attention has been paid to pressing them into shape, and the merchant refused them, saying that they were inferior.

The appearance and value of dressed poultry can be greatly increased by being a few hours on a shaping board such as the one shown. It gives the fowl a square, plump appearance that is attractive to customers.

The birds were taken back to the packing house, thawed (as they had been frozen), put on a shaping board, frozen again and returned to the merchant. He thought he was receiving first-class poultry.

Much of the fowl that appears on the market can be improved 100 per cent in appearance, and in some cases 50 per cent in value, by properly pressing the fowl after they have been plucked. An arrangement such as seen in the illustration on this page, which can be easily made by any one, is a good style of pressing board.

As soon as the bird is plucked the wings are snapped in, the legs drawn in close to the side and the bird laid on its back on the pressing board. An ordinary building brick is then laid on the bird's breast. Birds, even if only in medium flesh, when treated in this way, present a square, plump appearance that is attractive to customers.

Farm poultry raisers would do well to follow this plan of improving their birds' appearance before sending them to market.

The snow will soon be flying. It is high time that we poultry men were getting ready for winter conditions and winter eggs. The point of first importance is the selection of the pullets with which we intend to fill the laying quarters this winter. To lay a profitable lot of eggs the pullets must be early hatched and well grown. We have found that if there is a month's difference in the age of the pullets there will be two or three months difference in the age at which they start to lay. We always keep the early hatched pullets and market the rest.

Have you adopted the open front house yet? We have, and with good success. Light, air, dryness and freedom from drafts are the essentials of a good poultry house. Warmth was at one time added to this list, but that idea is out of date. Wire netting on the front of the house is much more satisfactory both for the health of the birds and the number of eggs they will produce than double sash windows.

With an open front house we have to give the birds every opportunity to work. A good supply of litter should be on hand. Six or seven inches of cut straw, shavings or leaves on the floor in which to mix the grain will keep the birds hustling, warm and healthy.

THE EASIEST WAY THE BEST

Life is too short to waste in mixing wet mashes for fowls, especially when we can secure so much better results from dry mashes. How much easier it is to dump a mixture of crushed oats, a little bran, cracked corn, and cracked wheat into a self-feeding hopper once a week than to mix a wet mash once or twice a day. In addition to the mash in the hopper we scatter whole corn and wheat in the litter, mixing it in with a rake. This keeps the birds busy. Sweepings of clover leaves and seed from the barn floor, or better still, alfalfa hay, is also appreciated by the birds.

And lastly, how about the supply of grit? A box of sand that can be got very readily before the ground freezes, comes in nicely. Cracked oyster shell, broken pottery and old mortar also make good grit.

GOOD RECIPES

From Farm and Dairy.

CREAMED OYSTERS

To one quart of oysters take one pint of cream or sweet milk; thicken with a little flour, as for gravy; when cooked pour in the oysters with liquor; pepper, salt and butter the mixture. Have ready a platter with slices of nicely browned toast, pour creamed oysters on toast and serve hot.

BAKED CUSTARD

Beat four eggs slightly, add one-half cup of sugar and one-fourth teaspoon of salt, pour on slowly four cups of scalded milk, strain into a buttered mold, set in a pan of hot water. Sprinkle with nutmeg, and bake in a slow oven until firm.

FIG PUDDING

Half pound suet, one pound figs, chopped; one pound bread crumbs, half pound sugar, one egg, one nutmeg, half teaspoonful of baking soda; grease the tin mould well; boil three hours tied in a cloth; it requires milk enough to moisten it; one cup of flour; to be eaten with wine sauce.

WINTER SPONGE CAKE

Take four eggs, two cups of sugar, two coffee cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, two-thirds of a cup boiling water, and lemon to flavor; add the water last; pour into a pan and place into a well-heated oven. This, though apparently very thin, will come from the oven a most delightful cake.

FRUIT CAKE

Two pounds of raisins, stoned, two pounds of currants, one pound of butter, one pound sugar, one and one-quarter pounds of flour, ten eggs, one wine glass of brandy, one wine glass of wine, one tablespoon of cloves, one tablespoon of allspice, two tablespoons of cinnamon, one nutmeg, one teaspoon of sweet almond-meats blanched and cut in slices, two ounces candied lemon, two ounces citron; a little molasses improves it, nearly a teacup; flour the fruit, using it out of that weighed out for the cake; put a half teaspoonful of soda or one teaspoonful of good baking powder with it on the fruit; bake three hours slowly.

HASTINGS ITEMS OF INTEREST

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, NOV. 4.—A very sad accident, which has cast a gloom over the entire community, occurred on Monday evening last, when an employee of the tannery, named Stanford, went down to death in the waters of the Trent. It appears that he and a companion were out in a boat when, unfortunately, he dropped into the water and sank to rise no more. Search was at once made for the body, which was found about one hour after the accident. Deceased was a native of England, and leaves to mourn his loss a widow and three small children, who have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement.

The funeral of the late Mr. J. Faux took place on Monday from the home of his son-in-law, Mr. T. Lynch, to the Westwood Cemetery for interment. Deceased had been ailing for about two weeks, and death was due to pneumonia. He leaves to mourn his loss, besides his widow, two sons and one daughter.

At the evening service in the Methodist Church on Sunday Rev. Mr. Anderson preached a temperance sermon, dealing with the objections raised to the Local Option by-law, which is so much talked of at the present time. The reverend gentleman's arguments were very forcible and to the point, and showed, without doubt, that the by-law would be of great benefit to our town.

Mrs. Thistlewaite and daughter, Annie, of Peterborough, spent the week-end with friends in town.

Miss F. Tyler has been in Campbellford visiting friends.

Mr. W. Huycke, of Peterborough, spent Sunday at the home of his brother, Mr. L. T. Huycke.

Miss Annie Christie, of Peterborough, has been the guest of Miss Gladys Stevenson, town.

Mrs. Gibson is visiting her friend, Mrs. A. Huycke.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson, of Belleville, spent a few days at the home of his sister, Mrs. B. Shaw.

Mr. and Mrs. Walton and daughters, of Peterborough, have been visiting with Mr. and Mrs. V. German.

Mr. Walton rendered a solo in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening, which was highly appreciated.

Mr. and Mrs. Ab. Brown, of Norwood, spent Sunday with the former's sister, Mrs. J. Buck.

Mrs. Edmison, of Toronto, has been spending a few days with her son, Dr. B. Edmison.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Thompson, of Seymour, have been guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Humphries.

Mrs. J. Collins, of Otonabee, spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Beamish.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilson, of Toronto, have been in town visiting friends.

Miss Blanche Humphries, of Bellevue, has been visiting under the parental roof.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Oakman spent Sunday with friends in Peterborough.

Miss Ella Tate spent Saturday and Sunday in Peterborough.

Mr. C. Plant was in Norwood on Sunday.

The many friends of Miss Ethel Stinson are pleased to see her so far recovered as to be able to drive out.

A pleasing event took place on Tuesday evening last at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. Davidson, when their eldest daughter, Mar. was united in marriage to Mr. J. Clysdale, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties. After the ceremony and customary congratulations, the bride led the way to the dining-room, where a sumptuous repast was laid, and much enjoyed by all. Mr. and Mrs. Clysdale have a host of friends who will follow them with best wishes through life.

Another aged resident of Asphodel has been called away in the person of Mrs. John Lynch, relict of John Lynch, who died just five months ago. Deceased was 74 years of age, and has been ailing for a number of years. The funeral was held on Saturday morning to the church at Hastings, and from thence to the R.C. Cemetery for interment.

An accident, which might have caused the death of Mr. B. I. Gibson, occurred on Saturday morning. Mr. Gibson, by some means, lost his footing and fell into the water, and was only rescued in time to save his life.

We are sorry to learn that our popular druggist, Mr. Bingham, is confined to his home through illness.

HORSE'S LEG SWELLED

Animal Was Too Sore and Lame to Work—Quickly Cured by "Nerviline."

"I have had a long experience in treating horses, and I can safely say that I know of no liniment for strains, sprains, and swelling that is so useful around the stable as Nerviline." Thus writes Mr. Joshua E. Murchison, from his home, Crofts Hill P. O. I had a fine young mare that wrenched her right fore leg, and from the shoulder down she was stiff, sore, and swollen. I applied Nerviline, and it worked like a charm; in fact, that mare was in shape to work a day after I used Nerviline.

Nerviline is a Trusty Liniment

Christmas Goods

MONTREAL, NOV. 6.—If the eyes of all the good little girls and boys of Montreal could have been permitted to peep into the capacious boxes and packing cases which formed a considerable portion of the huge cargo of the Allan Line Victorian which reached here yesterday from Liverpool, it is sure that Santa Claus and his mystical reindeer would have figured largely in many peaceful dreams of last night.

For the boxes contained nothing more or less than several tons of toys from huge Dutch Noahs' Arks with their scores of painted animals, to big dolls four feet high and dressed by the very best French and German stores. Then there were regiments and regiments of toy soldiers, dolls' houses from Switzerland, sleighs and miniature railway equipment some of which could be operated by their own electricity and others by their own steam, toy drums and trumpets, big and small, mechanical toys in hundreds and parlor games by the thousand.

The great essentials of the Christmas dinner were not lost sight of either, for the liner carried some hundreds of tons of foodstuffs, including English mince pies, pastry, sweets, cakes, plum puddings, jams, jellies, biscuits, spices and preserved fruits.

About Colds

When the knowledge that colds and coughs are infectious becomes general, they will go out of fashion. Such knowledge comes slowly, but it is known that the way to get rid of the scourge is to guard against infection.

Nansen and his men while in the Arctic region for three years did not have colds. Even in those terrible expeditions, when their clothing, saturated with perspiration, froze upon their bodies, so that it took an hour to thaw them out, there was no "cold to catch." When they got back to civilization they all caught cold.

The Island of St. Kilda, forty miles beyond the Hebrides, gives curious confirmation of the contagion of colds. Every time a ship stops there, all the inhabitants, including the infants at the breast, have acute colds. More than two hundred years ago, Dr. Johnson and Boswell called it "stranger's cold." The remarkable thing about it is that as soon as the cold has run its course there would be no more till another ship comes.

"The cat is sneezing, we shall all have colds," shows that the cat has picked up the bacilli in her nocturnal rambles and is proceeding to distribute them to the household.

Doubtless the most frequent cause of colds among children, from five to fifteen years of age, is adenoids. Heredity has some influence, but a damp and cold climate, and unhygienic surroundings are the exciting causes. The nasopharynx forms the roof of the throat, when the mouth is widely opened. Hidden by the tonsils it can only be seen by the aid of reflected light of a laryngeal mirror. In the healthy throat it is a spongy mass one-eighth of an inch thick on the posterior wall; but when there is a catarrhal condition, either acute or chronic, it becomes swollen and prevents the free passage of air through the nose so that mouth breathing is necessary, and the mouth must be kept open in order to breathe. Sometimes adenoids cover the opening to the Eutaschian tube, causing deafness.

In the condition known as "the adenoid face," the face lengthens, the nose is pinched with loss of power in the nostrils, the upper teeth become prominent from the effort to breathe, the lips are swollen and thick, and the general aspect of the child vacant. The voice is muffled, often stammering and stuttering, which is cured by the removal of the adenoids.

TREATMENT FOR COLDS

Belief that colds are infectious, lessens their number. Belief that they are the result of drafts, and cold increases the number, because it makes us afraid of fresh air and ventilation. To-day no house is complete without its out of door sleeping room.

Lack of exercise, absence of fresh air, and over-heated rooms are all contributing causes to lower the vitality so that there is no longer the requisite resistance to fight off the microbes of cold. We catch cold easily because our vitality is low and our vitality is low because we neglect fresh air, sunshine, and out of door exercise.

Having taken every precaution against taking cold, and failed, the best method of getting rid of it is the sweating process. Hot mustard foot-bath with hot drinks, as ginger tea, or hot lemonade. A small tub is set in a warm corner near enough to the patient's bed so that he will not get chilled in reaching it. Put several tablespoons of ground mustard in the water. Add hot water as hot as can be borne for twenty minutes; wrap up in blankets while patient is being rubbed dry. A Dover powder, five to ten grains of quinine, with a laxative and the patient will be able to go to work the next day. If the weather is bad stay in bed for a day or two. Cayenne pepper is a good addition to the quinine. When the cold causes congestion of the nasal passages, so that breathing is difficult, from swelling of the mucous membrane, very great relief is found in the use of a solution of adrenalin chloride. It can be bought in a 1 to 1,000 solution in ounce bottles, and should be kept in the dark. Boil water, add a half teaspoon of salt to the quart. Add the adrenalin in the proportion of one to ten. Use the solution in an atomizer or on a swab made on a toothpick wound with absorbent cotton, two or three times a day. Liquid alloloine with five grains of menthol to be used between times will help the healing and soothing work. Keep the bowels free and avoid getting chilled. Deep breathing of fresh air will sometimes abort a cold, and is useful in every stage of a cold. Usually those who are always having colds are the flabby ones who coddle themselves constantly.—Woman's World for November.

FOWL FOR MARKET

From Farm and Dairy.

A representative of one of our largest Canadian produce houses, when talking with an editor of Farm and Dairy recently, mentioned the value of properly shaping fowl before sending them to market. He told us of a consignment of fowl that they had sold to a Jewish retail merchant in Montreal. The fowl were in fair flesh, but no attention has been paid to pressing them into shape, and the merchant refused them, saying that they were inferior.

The appearance and value of dressed poultry can be greatly increased by being a few hours on a shaping board such as the one shown. It gives the fowl a square, plump appearance that is attractive to customers.

The birds were taken back to the packing house, thawed (as they had been frozen), put on a shaping board, frozen again and returned to the merchant. He thought he was receiving fresh poultry.

Much of the fowl that appears on the market can be improved 100 per cent in appearance, and in some cases 50 per cent in value, by properly pressing the fowl after they have been plucked. An arrangement such as seen in the illustration on this page, which can be easily made by any one, is a good style of pressing board.

As soon as the bird is plucked the wings are snapped in, the legs drawn in close to the side and the bird laid on its back on the pressing board. An ordinary building brick is then laid on the bird's breast. Birds, even if only in medium flesh, when treated in this way, present a square, plump appearance that is attractive to customers.

Farm poultry raisers could do well to follow this plan of improving their birds' appearance before sending them to market.

TRUE, TRUE

E. N. Brown, president of the National Railways of Mexico, discussing in New York, a railroader who was always out of work, said:

"He is too quick with his tongue—that's his trouble. He has a ready wit that he is too apt to use upon his boss."

Then, with a laugh, Mr. Brown uttered this epigrammatic and true saying:

"Repartee has lost as many men their jobs as it has made others their reputations."—Washington Star.

"Fruit-a-tives" not only cured my headaches, but completely cured me of all indigestion, and restored me to perfect health again." W. J. McCOMB.

ANONYMOUS ANNOYERS

In every city, town and even village in Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom, and doubtless in other countries outside the personal knowledge of the writer there are anonymous annoyers whose efforts run the gamut of false telephone calls, letters, telegrams, death notices of living persons, goods ordered to be sent to the homes of victims and thousands of other nuisances that figure in the well spiced story of abnormal current events.

The nuisance has become so insufferable in some places that societies have been organized to trace the culprits and the data that has been gathered shows that various causes are assignable for the peculiar mental condition that manifests itself in such acts.

The boy who pulls a door bell and runs away or the youth who sends in a false fire alarm might be thought actuated by the same sentiment which animates all anonymous annoyers. There seems to be a common spirit of mischief, a desire to see the wheels go around. But superficial likenesses are apt to be deceptive. What is a prank for a child becomes a crime for an adult or a token of mental weakness. In some cases it is a passing aberration, in others a fairly reasoned motive of obtaining "satisfaction" for a real or fancied injury. Most cases have their own individual peculiarity, and should be judged separately with a view of treatment, whether by hair brush and slipper, legal process or medical care.

The town of Montclair, New Jersey, the choice and favored home of affluent New Yorkers, has lately had a most singular experience of the nuisance. Physicians would be called up on the telephone at various times and requested to pay immediate professional visits at certain houses. It might be two o'clock in the morning and a wild storm raging. The doctor, nevertheless, obeying the call of duty, would hustle into his clothes, snatch up his bag, drive to the house — and learn that his services were not required. Everybody would be sound asleep in the house of the supposed patient. The medico, always short on sleep and hoaxed out of a few hours' much needed slumber, would use language unauthorized by the code of Galen.

THE MONTCLAIR MYSTERY

It was a woman's voice that sent the fraudulent message over the telephone wires. She was evidently a person of intelligence and wide acquaintance among the citizens of Montclair. She pretended to be servant, sister, mother-in-law, or other connection of the imaginary patient. Her voice, however disguised, was reminiscent to the physicians. This suspicion was helpful at times in avoiding annoyance, but it did not settle the problem.

It was painful to suspect and dangerous to accuse without absolute proof. One of the chief victims, Dr. John H. Young, clearly recognized the nuisance on the wire the other evening—that is, he knew the voice was that of the annoyer. Asking her to wait a moment, he ran to another telephone, learned from Central that he was being called up from a railroad station, and telephoned to the police to send an officer to arrest a woman using the telephone at the railroad station.

Thus was captured the anonymous annoyer. She proved to be a respectable, college bred spinster, both friend and patient of the doctor she had annoyed, and who had her arrested. She was put under bonds to keep the peace. In the opinion of Dr. Young, who wished to have her leniently treated, she was mentally unbalanced.

TROUBLEMAKER USUALLY A WOMAN

"Doctors are especially subject to the attentions of the anonymous nuisance," said Dr. W. J. Robinson, president of the American Society of Medical Sociology, and author of "Never Told Tales." "There are a number of my colleagues who suffer both from letters and false telephone messages. They are called out of bed to attend cases in distant parts of town, only to find themselves hoaxed. The condition has become so serious for some of my friends that they absolutely refuse to answer a strange call; they will attend only their own patients and after recognizing the voice of the person who summons them.

"The anonymous troublemaker is usually a woman. Men are not inclined to such small practices. Very often the cause is a grudge of a patient who thinks she has not been cured or has been overcharged or has not been promptly attended by the doctor. Again, there may be a purely pathologic condition. The desire to annoy and to gloat upon the idea of how the doctor will feel when he discovers the imposition is like the mischievous instinct of the small boy who pulls door-bells.

"Among adults we might regard troublemaking as a remnant of savage ancestry, lack of sympathetic imagination and rudimentary development of the social instinct. It is a sort of 'moral' perversity and a low grade of humanity which delights in causing pain to others. Among the cases distinctly pathological are those due to sexual aberration. It would be impossible to say what proportion of cases are due to small-mindedness, malice or disease.

PHYSICIANS ANNOYED BY WIRE

"The physician is more often annoyed by wire than by letter. This is because a telephone is a more natural way of communicating with a doctor and because there is less chance of detection than in writing. Writing can be traced, even typewriting. However, there is one form of typed anonymous letter which is impossible to trace. This is a carbon copy. The letters being more or less blurred do not show the significant peculiarities which identify ordinary typed letters as being written on one particular machine.

"An anonymous letter that is the product of a downright insane person, or at least one afflicted with certain forms of insanity, shows in its chirography as well as contents the state of the author. In his work, 'Mind and Its Diseases,' Dr. W. H. D. Stoddart remarks that writing is one of the latest requirements of the human race and therefore the first lost in brain disease. A sample letter by an asylum inmate is about as follows:

"'My dear wife, my dearest wife, dear wife, wife, my dear, sweet wife, my dearest wife, wife, as sweetest, as, wife, dearest wife.'

WIDE RANGE OF DEVILISHNESS

"There is a much wider range of devilishness than the recent Montclair instance. The letters that come to me, directly or indirectly, have to do largely with unspeakable crimes and attempts to debauch youth. Many infamous letters are sent to young women who advertise in the newspapers for employment. These are signed with fictitious names, and the writer seeks to meet his victim. We have four such writers now in the federal prison at Atlanta. We have made more than thirty-five hundred arrests of all kinds since the society began its work, and have seized what would amount to fifteen freight cars full of obscene matter.

"A frequent cause of the anonymous letter is revenge; another cause is jealousy. Some one tries to break up a home, to torture a wife or husband. Sometimes a husband separated from his wife will traduce her on postcards sent to her relatives. He writes on a postcard so that neighbors may read and his slander be more widely circulated."

ONE THING HORSES CAN'T DO

"It's a funny thing," said the old animal trainer, "but you can't train a horse to walk on his forefeet, because he ain't built that way. Take the dog or cat animals and they'll not only walk on their forefeet but they will go up and down stairs with their hind legs in the air. It's a little harder to teach them than walking on the hind feet but it's merely a matter of patience and knowing how, but get a horse off his hind legs and you have a lame horse. Dozens of trainers have spoiled from one to 20 horses apiece trying for the trick, but the nearest anyone ever came to it was an English rainer, who had a jackass who could say up for a little while, but even the Jack was strained and soon had to be destroyed. Horses taken into upstairs theatres will go up the steps as agile as cats, but when they come down they have to be backed down. That's one reason why horses used in hill work break down so quickly. It's not the long, hard pull uphill; it's the holding back going down."—New York Sun.

TO PRESERVE THE HEALTH

BY WILLIAM MULDOON, The World's Foremost Physical Conditioner.

It is really alarming when we come to consider the rapid increase in the number of cases of neurasthenia.

The medical profession is overwhelmed by the demand for assistance from these unfortunate victims. It is all due to the fact that people do not appreciate the necessity of being economical with their nervous energy. There is a great variety of ways to waste their vital spark, and the present fads, customs and habits of living are indeed extravagant, both with money and nervous energy. It is bad enough to be a spendthrift, with your money, but that is not serious. If you are capable and smart you will be able to accumulate more money, or get along without any; but when you become extravagant and wasteful to an extent that bankrupts you with your nervous energy, then you are a poor helpless wreck, physically well, mentally exhausted.

The body demands and will have the few little fragments of energy that are left, and the mind must starve. You think you think, but as a matter of fact, you forget everything that you should think of, and your mind wanders on every subject and everything, and will not, even by accident, concentrate on the right thing. That horrible, exhausted, worn-out feeling that neurasthenia sufferers have is not real, for they have done nothing to exhaust; that is, it is not physical, for they have done no physical work that would exhaust. They are filled with fear, suspicious of all things being wrong, and never satisfied that anything is right, and are discontented no matter where they are or what they are doing. They become an inopportune "It" and do everything at the inopportune time. I say "It" because any one is an "It" who cannot think.

Wastefulness is Cause

Now the cause of this is their own wastefulness. They have wasted their nervous epergy, for nature has given everybody a sufficient store of nervous energy to carry them along with perfect comfort, happiness and usefulness. If a person is useful (just as useful as it is possible to make themselves to everybody and everything) that person is happy and contented.

The person who is continually acting, striving to make other people believe that they are something different, something better, greater, smarter in every way than what they really are, that is a tremendous nervous train, and is wasting the nervous energy. If that mind and energy were spent in doing something good, useful, and to assist other people in making life easier and more happy, they would get their reward in a new store of vitality which would come from happiness and contentment.

The glutton who thinks of nothing but satisfying the bodily appetites and passions, looking for something to stimulate and increase both these animal qualities in his nature and then going to the extreme of satisfying both, after that has been done, there is a demand upon his nervous energy for every particle his body contains, and he is an exhausted wreck. As long as a little rest will enable him to accumulate more energy he will go through the same proceedings again until nature can stand the abuse no longer; and then, like a flash of lightning out of a clear sky, finds himself in that most wretched of all conditions mentally—a neurastheniac.

Fast Eating Harmful

Next to intoxicants and tobacco, the most dangerous enemy is fast eating and over-eating. I call it eating, but as a matter of fact with that class of people it might more properly be called swallowing, for they seldom masticate their food. They haven't got time; they just shovel it in with both hands and swallow it; if it sticks in their throats they wash it down with plenty of fluid.

There is no question of doubt in the mind of any person who knows and is observing that four-fifths of the illness of people past middle age has been brought on by over-indulgence and over-taxing the various organs of the body to dispose of the tremendous and unnecessary quantity of food. If they would eat but a moderate amount of food, keep it in their mouths until it has been well masticated and insalivated, and then swallow it, one-half the form of digestion has taken place and the work for the stomach, also for the intestines, is easy. A sufficient amount of food to sustain one's strengh and to keep healthy and strong, vigorous mentally and physically, is very little indeed after one has passed forty years of age; usually about one-third, or perhaps one-fourth of what the aver ge person eats is sufficient. If one will only try it for one month, and do it moderately, he never will go back to the old habit of eating just to satisfy the appetite, or for the sake of indulging in an old habit which was formed as a boy.

One should never take a stimulant to obtain an abnormal appetite. If a person does not feel like eating, he should go without food; as a matter of fact, one could go several days without food and be all the better for it. Very often when one feels badly, not quite up to the mark, if said person would go without a few meals for twelve or twenty-four hours, drink a pint of hot water upon retiring, and a glass of hot water again upon getting up in the morning, he will be far better off than the person who finds himself in that condition and goes to the doctor for a drug, or to the bartender for a little of his assistance.

Considering that one has exhausted from 50 to 60 per cent. daily of his nervous energy trying to digest and dispose of the enormous quantity of superfluous food, it will be seen how easily he could have cut down the expense of nervous energy to 25 per cent. and not only saved this energy, but saved time and expense of unnecessary food and the time to devour it.

It is the fashion among neurasthenics to lay their troubles to overwork in business, or to some little unusual shock they have received through a business disappointment or failure, or, perhaps, domestic troubles, death, etc.—when as a matter of fact, they could have stood all that, and it would have strengthened and broadened their minds to meet with such difficulties, and with double that amount of work and trouble they would have been able to stand up under it and grown stronger and more useful had they lived properly in other ways. They do not place the blame where it belongs. Ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it belongs to the social side of their life and not to the business side.

Hard Work is Necessary

The moral of all this is that one should work as hard as he likes and as hard as his position in life demands; it never harmed anybody, but when work is through then the dangerous period has arrived. He should be guarded in what is done from that time until work begins again the next day. If to-day's work is done well, thoroughly, correctly, there will be no comeback on anything that has been done. It is well done, and it can be dismissed from the mind. And when the day is finished there is a feeling of satisfaction that at least the duty for the day has been done; then it is not necessary to look backward, and nothing will come back to-morrow to be completed that was neglected to-day.

IS NOW CHANGED

Time was when the insane asylums of the prairie states were filled with farmers' wives. Isolated, self-centered, their minds were forced to feed upon themselves—melancholy brooded over the home and many a road ran from sod house to mad house, says Woman's World for November.

Without diversion—cut off from communication with the great, vivid, eager world—their youth and courage broken on the wheel of drudgery—it was the pioneer women who paid the heavy price to Progress.

The eyes of the young mother were haunted with dread of the inevitable hour when the city would call across the barrens and seduce son and daughter from her side. The menace of a deserted old age, of a winter lived alone, hung over the very cradle.

But to-day this is changed. The curse of solitude is lifted. Isolation has fled before the co-operative telephone. The automobile has made the next county line a back-yard fence. Rural free delivery, the bearer of the daily newspaper, and low priced periodicals, makes all the earth a neighbour. The mail order catalogues are perambulating department stores and their pages are show windows of the fashions, so that she too may now go shopping daily, with the added advantage of staying home all the while.

The gasoline engine draws the water and cuts the wood, turns the churn, operates the cream separator, the washing-machine, and the ringer. It grinds the feed and performs all the back-breaking burdens which once made the bride a hag at thirty and poisoned boys and girls with hatred for rural life.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

We received the news the other day that one of the prettiest and most charming girls of our acquaintance was about to announce her engagement.

"I must say I'm disappointed in Gertrude," said the one who brought the news.

"Why?' we asked.

"Why to think she's going to marry him."

"What's the matter with him? I thought he seemed like a nice, clean chap when I met him and he certainly is good looking, and they say he has good prospects."

"Oh, yes," conceded the one who brought us the news, "I know all that, but what I mean is that he's been born and brought up right there in that little town and she's known him all her life.

"With all her education and her opportunities for meeting people, I thought Gertrude would marry some one from a distance, some one more out of the ordinary."

What a queer point of view.

And yet what a common one! And incidentally not inherently modern. Listen to this from Middlemarch:

"Ever since that important new arrival in Middlemarch Rosamond had woven a little future of which something like this scene was the necessary beginning. Strangers whether wrecked and clinging to a raft, or duly escorted and accompanied by portmanteaus, have always had a circumstantial fascination for the virgin mind against which native merit has urged itself in vain. And a stranger was necessary to Rosamond's social romance which had always turned on a lover and a bridegroom who was not a Middlemarcher."

Apparently this prejudice against finding lovers in one's townsmen, one's neighbours whose lives one knows to be honest and straight, whose habits one knows are comfortable to ones' own, and whom one has cared for in a fine friendly way all one's life, is as old as feminine nature.

And as foolish.

I am always glad when I hear that two people who have been good friends all their lives find their friendship merging into love, because I think there is so much more than the ordinary probability that they are going to be happy.

You see, there are so many less disconcerting surprises awaiting each of them. There are so few unexpected corners in temperament and disposition to which each will have to get accustomed. They have seen each other in the daylight of friendship before ever they entered the moonlight of love and have each that much better chance of knowing what they are taking "for better or for worse till death us do part."

"But such a love affair is so unromantic," you complain.

Ah, my dear, that just shows that you don't know what romance is. It seems to me that the highest, finest romance is not that of circumstance or situation, of strange coincidence or love at first sight. The most wonderful romance, to me, is the romance of a beautifully complete mating, the romance of a love so well grounded—so deep, tender, true and so well grounded in friendship—that it lasts. If I were a great artist and were asked to paint a picture to be called "Romance," I think I should paint two old folks with the love light still in their eyes.

BEAUTIFYING STATIONS ALONG THE C. P. R. THE PRIZE WINNERS

The floral department of the C.P.R. has its busy hive of workers just as the heavy and exacting traffic management has its own, for, from the floral department twice each year goes out daintily packeted garden seeds and bulbs which, later, are made to enliven and to ornament the dull places of common earth. Twice each year come in "returns" in the shape of reports concerning this work and the interest shown by the various agents and foremen, that the correspondence files prove how much human interest is being engendered by the growth of a little flower—and this very often in places where Nature has most sparsely granted her favors.

The floral department provides seeds and bulbs, the station agents "between whiles" planting and watering, training and coaxing the buds which later, as blossoms, give so much real enjoyment to the one who does the work as to the passer-by. Perhaps this seemingly inconsequential thing, the planting of a flower, has brought the great Transcontinental Road more real advertising than the millions spent in ink. People passing by mark the tiny garden spot, so lovingly tended by busy hands and, passing on, they carry with them in "What a beautiful spot!" the perfumed memory of those infinitesimal gardens of the wild.

The floral department of the C.P.R. is not an altogether new one. Twenty years ago one of the agents of the company "planted a little flower." To-day the company keeps on planting flowers, not for the actual cash returns this most unusual departmental work bring in, but for the greater gain, the human joy and satisfaction it gives the one who plants and the one who sees the little flower. From a single packet of garden seeds, planted in 1901, the amazing additional packets of seeds and bulbs has grown to over thirty-three thousand. Where twenty years ago one tiny patch of bloom illuminated the drear surroundings of "the depot," now more than five hundred are found in a floral link which may be said to bind the Continent together.

The prize-winners of 1911 hail from Woodstock, N.B.; Sherbrooke, Que.; Rossport, Ont.; Portage la Prairie, Man.; and the grand prize went to Agassis, B.C., where a station man's wife (mother of thirteen babies) stood an easy first. Other minor prizes have been bestowed as second and third class rewards, but the great thing is that a great corporation like the C.P.R. should acknowledge the ethics of beauty as well as business.

Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R.V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for woman's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. Medicine dealers sell it. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute in order to make a little larger profit.

PIG FEEDING

From Farm and Dairy.

Extensive pig feeding experiments with many feeds in various mixtures at the Maryland Agricultural College have led to the following conclusions:

1. Pigs allowed silage at will made faster and more economical gains than those having ground fodder mixed with their feed.

2. Young hogs made faster gains upon corn meal and skimmilk than upon shelled corn and skimmilk, but if cost of grinding was subtracted the difference in profit was small though still in favor of corn meal as against shelled corn.

3. Pigs fed a mixture of grains soaked for 24 hours made both faster and cheaper gains than either pigs fed the same feed mixture dry, or those having it given freshly mixed with water.

4. Pigs fed for a period of 56 days on a ration consisting of shelled corn, wheat middlings and skimmilk grew faster than those having chopped alfalfa substituted for part of the middlings in the above ration. When the test was continued, rejecting two sick pigs from the lot without alfalfa, the pigs getting alfalfa gave the better results.

5. The substitution of wheat bran for one-fifth the weight of hominy chop increased the value of the ration but hominy chop alone gave better results than a mixture of three pounds hominy chop to two pounds bran.

6. Soft coal in unlimited quantity seemed not to be harmful to pigs in confined pens. Soft coal, wood charcoal and a tonic mixture ranked according to value as correctives in the following order: (1) tonic mixture, (2) wood charcoal, (3) soft coal. The lot of pigs having no corrective made smaller gains than any of the other lots, but produced pork more cheaply than the lot on soft coal.

"There could be no better medicine than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My children were all sick with whooping cough. One of them was in bed, had a high fever and was coughing up blood. Our doctor gave them Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and the first dose eased them, and three bottles cured them," says Mrs. R. A. Donaldson, of Lexington, Miss. For sale by all dealers.

On Saturday evening the annual celebration of Guy Fawke's night was carried on by a number of the young people. Not being, properly, Nov. 5th, the usual ardent enthusiasm was somewhat lacking. However, the children were greatly in evidence and their costumes were very original and amusing. The time-honoured custom of burning "Guy" was the last feature of the night's entertainment, but owing to a scarcity of boxes, of which the funeral pyre usually consists, the unfortunate effigy had a rather brief cremation.

Mr. Russel Nettleton, formerly of the staff of the Bank of Toronto here, was the week-end guest of Mrs. N. J. Clarke.

Mr. Jackson, B.A., of Toronto, was in town on Sunday and addressed the congregation of the Methodist church on Sunday evening in the interests of Temperance and Moral Reform, under the direction of the Ontario Alliance. Mr. Bailey addressed the members of the Presbyterian church on the same subject, and Rev. Mr. Kennedy, those on Rev. J. Line's circuit.

Mr. Wm. Balfour was in Lindsay on Monday.

Mr. Clifford Robinson of Hastings, spent Sunday at his home here.

The anniversary services of Christ Church, held on Sunday, were largely attended. The Rev. Mr. Nind of Bowmanville preached at all the services, and his able discourses were much appreciated.

Special music was rendered by the choir.

Mr. Ernie Kennedy of Lindsay, was in town on Saturday.

Miss Bertha Nicholls was home over the week-end.

Recent improvements have been made in the front of Mr. T. A. McPherson's store. Side windows and a new front entrance have ben put in. The interior has also received a fresh coat of paint.

TO PREVENT COLDS

The fall is the season for "catching colds." Many of them can be avoided by the exercise of care and prudence, and in no matter do care and prudence yield better returns. The following on "How to Avoid Colds" contains many good hints:

A. Colds are catching, mostly from others, therefore—

Avoid people who have colds.

Avoid people who have recently had pneumonia, (within two years.)

Avoid crowds.

Avoid hot places.

Avoid badly ventilated places.

B. Colds can be caught from one's self, therefore—

Keep the mouth, nose and tonsils clean.

Avoid gorging with food or drink.

Avoid alcoholics.

C. The germ is a factor, but the human body is also, herefore—

Avoid getting overwarm or overcold in the entire body or any part thereof.

D. Colds canot be caught when resistance is high, therefore build up heat-making powers by—

Moderate eating.

Sleeping out.

Cold baths.

Exercising, especially in the open air, also on rainy or snowy days.

E. If a cold has been cocntracted—

Do not spit carelessly.

Do not sneeze or cough carelessly.

Destroy all nose and mouth secretions.

F. If the attack is accompanied by aches and fevers, avoid pneumonia by—

Going to bed.

Taking a purge.

They stood on the ccurb at the busiest corner on Chestnut street. He wore a wrinkled tow linen affair that that generally advertises a traveller in a day coach, and on his hat was the thick dust of another country. Add rugged grey whiskers and you have the follow whose picture in the comic papers is labelled "Si." His wife was with him, very much so, for they held each other hand in hand with a tight clutch. They were waiting for the tide of traffic to thin out enough to let them across. But every time they attempted it a trolley car seemed to bear down on them. Several times they were stampeded back to the curb, and they became convinced that the motormen were trying to mangle them under the wheels.

Suddenly the hawk-like eye of the farmer discerned a chance. Tugging at his wife, he said:

"Come on, Sairy, here's a motorman ain't lookin'." — Philadelphia Star.

The prison turnkey found the two cellmates deeply engrossed. One pored over the market reports of a newspaper and figured on the margin with a pencil. His cellmate sat expectant.

"Bill," said th emathematician at last, "you could make $34 a night stealin', pigs in Iowa."—"Success Magazine."

He walked up to the counter of the great universal emporium facing the well-known and largely-patronized A—— Hotel, and stammered something about lace to the man behind the counter.

"Lace, sir," said he salesman. "Certainly, sir. We have the largest stock in the city. Will Valenciennes lace do you? Jones! Valenciennes forward!"

"But I only—" began the shopper.

"Or perhaps some point lace? Our lace trade revolves very largely on the variety. Smith! Lace forward!"

"Well—er"——

"We have every variety, sir; don't you worry. We shall be able to suit you."

"I know, but——"

"Here is the Valenciennes. Not what you require? Then what lace would you like, sir?"

"I want a bootlace, please!"—"Tit-Bits."

Miss Annie Ivory, who has been visiting in Toronto for the past month returned on Wednesday.

Mrs. T. J. Parsons returned home last week after a pleasant visit with her son, Mr. A. Parsons of Toronto.

Mrs. D. Magee was in Lindsay on Wednesday attending the Fishburne-Wetherup wedding.

Miss McIntyre of Bowmanville, is the guest of her cousin, Miss Margaret Fee.

Miss Emily Cornwall returned this week from Muskoka, where she was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. French.

Miss Hazel Brooks is visiting friends in Lindsay.

Mrs. McCrae and Miss Ella McCrea are visiting relatives in Toronto.

Miss Lena Weir was the guest of her brothers over Sunday.

On Saturday evening the annual celebration of Guy Fawke's night was carried on by a number of the young people. Not being, properly, Nov. 5th, the usual ardent enthusiasm was somewhat lacking. However, the children were greatly in evidence and their costumes were very original and amusing. The time-honoured custom of burning "Guy" was the last feature of the night's entertainment, but owing to a scarcity of boxes, of which the funeral pyre usually consists, the unfortunate effigy had a rather brief cremation.

Mr. Russel Nettleton, formerly of the staff of the Bank of Toronto here, was the week-end guest of Mrs. N. J. Clarke.

Mr. Jackson, B.A., of Toronto, was in town on Sunday and addressed the congregation of the Methodist church on Sunday evening in the interests of Temperance and Moral Reform, under the direction of the Ontario Alliance. Mr. Bailey addressed the members of the Presbyterian church on the same subject, and Rev. Mr. Kennedy, those on Rev. J. Line's circuit.

Mr. Wm. Balfour was in Lindsay on Monday.

Mr. Clifford Robinson of Hastings, spent Sunday at his home here.

The anniversary services of Christ Church, held on Sunday, were largely attended. The Rev. Mr. Nind of Bowmanville preached at all the services, and his able discourses were much appreciated.

Special music was rendered by the choir.

Mr. Ernie Kennedy of Lindsay, was in town on Saturday.

Miss Bertha Nicholls was home over the week-end.

Recent improvements have been made in the front of Mr. T. A. McPherson's store. Side windows and a new front entrance have ben put in. The interior has also received a fresh coat of paint.

TO PREVENT COLDS

The fall is the season for "catching colds." Many of them can be avoided by the exercise of care and prudence, and in no matter do care and prudence yield better returns. The following on "How to Avoid Colds" contains many good hints:

A. Colds are catching, mostly from others, therefore—

Avoid people who have colds.

Avoid people who have recently had pneumonia, (within two years.)

Avoid crowds.

Avoid hot places.

Avoid badly ventilated places.

B. Colds can be caught from one's self, therefore—

Keep the mouth, nose and tonsils clean.

Avoid gorging with food or drink.

Avoid alcoholics.

C. The germ is a factor, but the human body is also, herefore—

Avoid getting overwarm or overcold in the entire body or any part thereof.

D. Colds canot be caught when resistance is high, therefore build up heat-making powers by—

Moderate eating.

Sleeping out.

Cold baths.

Exercising, especially in the open air, also on rainy or snowy days.

E. If a cold has been cocntracted—

Do not spit carelessly.

Do not sneeze or cough carelessly.

Destroy all nose and mouth secretions.

F. If the attack is accompanied by aches and fevers, avoid pneumonia by—

Going to bed.

Taking a purge.

They stood on the ccurb at the busiest corner on Chestnut street. He wore a wrinkled tow linen affair that that generally advertises a traveller in a day coach, and on his hat was the thick dust of another country. Add rugged grey whiskers and you have the follow whose picture in the comic papers is labelled "Si." His wife was with him, very much so, for they held each other hand in hand with a tight clutch. They were waiting for the tide of traffic to thin out enough to let them across. But every time they attempted it a trolley car seemed to bear down on them. Several times they were stampeded back to the curb, and they became convinced that the motormen were trying to mangle them under the wheels.

Suddenly the hawk-like eye of the farmer discerned a chance. Tugging at his wife, he said:

"Come on, Sairy, here's a motorman ain't lookin'." — Philadelphia Star.

The prison turnkey found the two cellmates deeply engrossed. One pored over the market reports of a newspaper and figured on the margin with a pencil. His cellmate sat expectant.

"Bill," said th emathematician at last, "you could make $34 a night stealin' pigs in Iowa."—"Success Magazine."

He walked up to the counter of the great universal emporium facing the well-known and largely-patronized A—— Hotel, and stammered something about lace to the man behind the counter.

"Lace, sir," said he salesman. "Certainly, sir. We have the largest stock in the city. Will Valenciennes lace do you? Jones! Valenciennes forward!"

"But I only—" began the shopper.

"Or perhaps some point lace? Our lace trade revolves very largely on the variety. Smith! Lace forward!"

"Well—er"——

"We have every variety, sir; don't you worry. We shall be able to suit you."

"I know, but——"

"I want a bootlace, please!"—"Tit-Bits."

ITS DEARER NOW.

Railroads Want More For Carrying the Mails.

Ottawa, Nov. 8—The most important application which came up at yesterday afternoon's session of the Railway Commission was the consideration of the question of remuneration to be paid railway companies for carrying the Canadian mails.

The original contracts with the railways were nearly all made years ago, that of the Canadian Pacific Railway being executed in 1886, and with the Grand Trunk Railway much earlier. Since then, the railways claim the increase in mails has been one of about 300 per cent., while the train service has increased 400 per cent. Their remuneration, they consider, should increase along the same scale. A large amount of the country's money is thus involved.

When the case was called, Mr. F. H. Gisborne of the Justice Department asked for a postponement until Jan. 23, which was granted.

To Have Free Hand.

London, Nov. 8.—A determination to allow Canada an entirely free hand in dealing with the U. S. in matters concerning the Dominion was indicated yesterday by Sir Edward Grey's answer to a question regarding the naval activities of the U. S. on Lake Michigan.

Rowland Hunt, Unionist member for Shropshire, suggested that the making of a naval station there might be a breach of the Rush-Bagot treaty, and wished Ambassador Bryce instructed to ascertain the facts.

The Foreign Secretary refused to do so without communicating with the Canadian Government, who were most directly concerned and whose interests were chiefly affected. He added: "I propose to leave to the Canadian Government the initiative and thereby show our desire to act in harmony, sympathy, and co-operation with them."

More Breaches of Law.

Toronto, Nov. 8.—Penalties amounting to approximately $700, with six cases still to be tried, were imposed at Owen Sound yesterday, the result of convictions under the Liquor License Act. The defendants' names are as follows:

John Alexander, Patterson House, two cases, selling $125 each. Total, $250.

Daniel Holmes, Ross House, two cases, selling, $125 each. Total, $250.

Henry Turcott, Comely House, one case, selling, $125.

Capt. J. Corbett, Colson House, one case "keeping for sale," $20.

Harry O'Neil, Albion House, one case, "keeping for sale," $20.

The case of Ernest O'Neill was adjourned till to-day and the six other cases standing for trial will be proceeded with at once.

Met Heavy Gales.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—The Sardinian arrived in port yesterday morning after a "record" voyage of seventeen days out from London. All of this time, with the exception of one day spent at Havre, the ship struggled onwards towards Montreal, buffeted by tremendous gales.

The seas, however, were so high that ordinary speed was impossible. Seas broke over the ship repeatedly, and the passengers had a miserable trip below decks. They were too ill and too few for a concert, and on the two Sundays at sea there were no religious services. The first day's run was 89 miles, the best 247, but on several occasions the log only registered 125 to 150 miles in 24 hours.

The ship withstood the furious storm well, and emerged from it with but one lifeboat smashed.

Other ships arriving lately bring passengers telling similar stories of unusually violent weather.

Nobel Prize For Chemistry.

Stockholm, Nov. 8.—It is announced that the Nobel prize for chemistry has been awarded to Mme. Marie Sklodowska Curie of the University of Paris.

Mme. Curie is the chief professor of sciences in the University of Paris. She was the co-discoverer with her husband, Prof. Pierre Curie, of radium, and in 1903 shared with him half of the Nobel prize for physics, the other half being awarded to Prof. Antoine Henri Besquerel. Each of the five Nobel prizes, awarded annually, amounts to $40,000.

Recent announcement was made of the success of Mme. Curie in producing polonium, "a new element possessing a radio-activity superior to radium."

Stabbed the Bridegroom.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—Maddened by jealousy at the sight of the bridegroom dancing with his bride at the Heisimmel's wedding at No. 2 Valiant street Monday night, E. Taffan is alleged to have driven a knife up to the hilt into the arm of his newly wedded host. The wedding festivities were at their height when the happy party was rudely broken up by an assault upon the head of the household, for which Taffan was arrested.

Taffan pleaded not guilty before Judge Leet in the arraignment court yesterday morning and was remanded for en quete on the ninth.

Forced Out of Ministry.

Providence, R.I., Nov. 8.—Because of the criticism resulting from his marrying Col. John Astor and Miss Madeline T. Force at Newport, on Sept. 9, Rev. Joseph Lambeth has resigned as pastor of the Elmwood Temple (Congregational) of this city, and will leave the Ministry to go into business. Although the church has not as yet accepted his resignation, Mr. Lambert says that he will insist upon it doing so. His retirement will be considered by the church at a meeting on Nov. 16.

Constipation

is an enemy within the camp. It will undermine the strongest constitution and ruin the most vigorous health. It leads to indigestion, biliousness, impure blood, bad complexion, sick headaches, and is one of the most frequent causes of appendicitis. To neglect it is slow suicide. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills positively cure Constipation. They are entirely vegetable in composition and do not sicken, weaken or gripe. Preserve your health by taking

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills

"I was Crippled, could hardly walk and had to Crawl down stairs at times on my hands and knees. My doctor told me I had an acute attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I was in the hospital for weeks, but was scarcely able to walk when I left it. I read about bought a bottle and began to get better from the start, and for the past six months I have had scarcely any pain and am able to walk as well as ever." J.H. SANDERS, P. O. box 5, Rockaway, N. J.

Few medicines are of any benefit for rheumatism, but Mr. Sanders tells plainly what Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine did for it. One ounce of salicylate of soda added to one bottle of Nervine makes an excellent remedy for rheumatism, which is now known to be a nervous disease and therefore subject to the influence of a medicine that acts through the nerves, as does

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Sufferers from rheumatism seldom fail to find relief in the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine, with salicylate of soda.

Sold under a guarantee that assures the return of the price of the first bottle if it fails to benefit. At all Druggists.

SIGNS AND SAILING.

Strange Belief Regarding the Result of Naming Ships.

The adventurer upon the ocean has ever been possessed of a temperament incomprehensible to landsmen by reason of his belief in signs and happenings considered to be omens of good or evil. Although many superstitions died out with the advent of steam into marine affairs yet there are many curious beliefs still prevalent.

All are aware of the ill-luck which is said to belong to the ship whose name has been changed, but it may not be so generally known that a belief prevails among seafaring men that the vessel whose name ends in A rests also under an evil spell. Indeed, it would almost seem that the latter superstition is not wholly unfounded, if we consider but a few of the disasters at sea in our own times wherein the ill-fated ships have borne names which ended with the first letter of the alphabet.

For instance, cites The London Globe, H.M.S. Victoria, sunk in the Mediterranean, is still fresh in the memory of Englishmen. Other well-known instances are the Stella, lost off the Channel Islands; the Arequipa, ashore on the west coast of America; the Cobra, a destroyer which broke her back in the North Sea on her maiden voyage, and the Sardinia, burned in harbor at Malta.

The fate of the last named vessel, in the light of the two superstitions already mentioned, may be fairly said to have been preordained, for in addition to her name ending with the letter A, she had during her career borne at least one other, viz., Gulf of Corovado. Needless to say, many ships have been wrecked whose names did not bear the unlucky final letter, and there are hundreds afloat which do possess it, and in which it is safer to travel than on the railway.

Brewer as Novelist.

Mr. Temple Thurston, whose dramatised novel, "Sally Bishop," was recently presented at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, was originally intended for a brewer, and did, in fact, enter his father's brewery at the age of fifteen. The first intimation Mr. Thurston had that his son was really seriously inclined in the direction of authorship was the sight of a review of a small volume of poems which were published at young Thurston's expense. The sequel is, perhaps, best told in the author's own words: "My father called me into his presence and told me to take a month off, during which time I was to satisfy him as to my literary capabilities. During that time I wrote a lot of miscellaneous matter, including 1,700 lines of verse, which I read over to my father. After that," adds Mr. Thurston, somewhat ambiguously, "he did not say a single further word about my going back to the brewery."

The Wickedest City.

There is no doubt about it—Irkutsk is the wickedest city in the world! One would hardly come to Irkutsk for a rest cure. With a population of 120,000 persons crammed into a couple of square miles on a bend in the Angara river, it produces 500 murders a year, with an average of one arrest for each fifty killings. And for each ten arrests there are but five convictions. This is not buncombe; it is a transcription from the city's criminal records. In one day not long ago there were twenty-two murders and attempted murders within the city limits.

Irkutsk is pretty gay at nights now, but the citizens look back enviously to the zenith of its career to the days of the recent Japanese war. Then champagne and wines were often cautiously transported free of freight charges from St. Petersburg and Moscow in steel cars labeled "powder"—cars militant with painted imperial eagles and Cossack guards.

"That scientist is a coward."

"How so?"

"He made the statement that woman's foot was going larger, and when I challenged him to name the woman he refused."—Houston Post.

Struck By Auto.

Toronto, Nov. 8.—Edward Beers, 57, Parliament street, is in the General Hospital as the result of backing into a motor car owned and driven by Dr. James McCormack, 113 Spadina avenue, in Carlton, near Parliament street, at 10.20 last night.

The doctor took the injured man to the hospital, where it was found that two ribs were fractured.

Dr. McCormack's car was struck by another, owned by Mrs. A. Evoy, 148 Bolton avenue, Sunday afternoon as it stood in front of his house.

NEW PUBLIC SCHOOLS WILL BE NAMED "KING GEORGE" AND "QUEEN MARY"

Necessary Steps Are Being Taken by the Board of Education to Obtain Proper Plans and Suitable Locations---Regular Session Was Held Last Night---Reports Submitted in Regard to $16,000 Which Has Been Expended on Improvements to the Various School Buildings---A Dining Room Needed for the Domestic Science Department.

It took the Board of Education just fifty-five minutes to wipe the routine business off the slate, last night, at the regular monthly meeting. The business was light and of a routine nature, with the result that the School Board galloped through it in a hurry.

The following reports, which are of interest, were received in the order as given:

Building Committee's Report.

Your Special Committee beg to report that the City Council have granted the request of the Board for the sum of $85,000.00 for the purpose of purchasing sites and erecting schools in the East and West Wards.

Your committee are, therefore, taking the necessary steps to obtain proper plans and suitable locations. As soon as the plans are completed and locations decided on, they will be submitted to the Board for approval.

Your committee would recommend that the new School in the East Ward be named "The King George' and the one in the West Ward "The Queen Mary."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DR. M. A. MORRISON,
Chairman.

Report of Property Committee.

Your Property Committee beg to report that the $16,000.00 granted by the City Council for permanent improvements enabled them to carry out the following:

King Edward School.—The third storey of this school, which was unfinished, has been completed, and one room is now occupied by pupils, the other rooms are ready for use, with the exception of the desks. An auxiliary heating system has been installed and is ready for use.

This school is now a thoroughly equipped 12-room building.

Central School.—A new heating system has ben installed in the old Collegiate building and is now in use.

The main building received extensive additions and repairs. Two vestibules were added, one on the East and the other on the West side. These contain the stairs leading to the various class rooms and as a result the halls have been widened and made lighter.

New hard-wood floors were put down in the halls and class rooms throughout the building. The old wooden walks and platforms were removed and have been replaced by cement ones. After the wooden walks had been torn away it was deemed advisable by your Committee to alter the original plan and make the cement walks wider than at first decided upon, with the result that the change has made a most decided improvement.

This school building is now one of the best in the city as the improvements, together with the ventilation system installed have made it practically a new building.

A retaining wall was built on the west side of the old Collegiate building, and the walls to the South and East of the central building have been thoroughly repaired with cement.

The improvements, as outlined, are of a substantial and permanent nature and your Committee in carrying them to a completion, have earnestly endeavoured to keep within the appropriation granted for this purpose.

Your Committee, during the summer vacation, had considerable improvements made to the South Central, Queen Alexandra and East City schools. At the South Central and Queen Alexandra schools cement walks were constructed. Several class rooms in the South Central school were painted, and a partition was placed in one of the East City buildings, for the purpose of accommodating an extra class.

Your Committee trust that the improvements and repairs, as carried out by them, will meet with the approval of the Board.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. FAIR, Chairman.

Report of Supervision Committee.

Your Supervision Committee beg to report that, as authorised, we have secured the use of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium and services of the Instructor for the pupils of the Collegiate Institute for the term of five months, from November 1st, 1911, for the sum of $500.00, payable $100, monthly.

THE METHOD OF MILK DELIVERY MADE OPTIONAL

Property Committee Decided Last Night That Lacteal Fluid May be Delivered Either in Bottles or in Cans---Bottle Clause Repealed.

The milk by-law came in for some discussion at the hands of the Property Committee last night, and at last, the question is settled, in this manner: That the milk vendors of the city shall deliver the milk as their customers or customers want it. The Committee, in considering the question, were evenly divided in their opinion, on the matter, and as they considered that the public citizens were in a like manner divided in opinion the only satisfactory way to please everybody, was to have it, as stated. The vendors, however, will have the privilege of delivering it either in bottle, or in cans, as they choose.

"Will the milk be delivered in cans or in bottles?" queried Ald. Duncan, chairman.

"In cans!" shouted three or four of the Aldermen, while the rest kept quiet, and afterwards were asked their opinions.

"Leave it as it is," said Ald. Morgan. "Those who want it in bottles, can get it that way, and those who want it in cans can have it so, and those milk vendors who want to deliver it in bottles may do so, and as a result everybody will be satisfied."

Ald. Brown thought that as far as the milk delivering was concerned, it was only a small question in comparison, with the keeping clean of the cows, and the articles in which the milk was handled. He stated that he knew lots of places where the cows were not kept in a clean state, and that the owners were very unclean in their manner of handling the milk, and he thought that this was of more importance, even than delivering the milk.

Ald. Bradburn: "There should be something done to stop these men from deliberately dumping milk from one can to the other on the street, where all sorts of germs can blow into the milk."

Ald. Morgan: "I don't see that there is very much danger if he dumps the milk from one can to another in his vehicle. I would rather take milk from a vendor who dumps milk from one can to another than from one who takes a bottle away from a house infected with scarlet fever."

The discussion ended there and it was decided to leave the matter optional.

Sentinel Says Bi-Lingual Schools Are The Issue

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., NOV. 8. — The Sentinel, the organ of the Canadian Orange Order, is out to-day with a front-page article in heavy black type calling on all Orangemen and the Protestant and English speaking people of Ontario to abolish bi-lingual schools, which, it claims, are a menace to the province. The Sentinel says: "The supreme question in Ontario politics is the abolition of bi-lingual schools. Will your candidate vote to abolish them? Make him tell you."

PLAYED SAME GAME ON TORONTO PEOPLE

Alfred Jarry, Who Fooled a Number of Peterborough People Making Purchases and Failing to Produce the Necessary Collateral Has Been at the Identical Pranks in Queen City.

TORONTO, NOV. 8.—A man who gave his name as Alfred Jarry, a miner from Cobalt, and who arrived in the city a week ago, left suddenly yesterday afternoon. A number of people are looking for him, and in particular is a young woman to whom he was wedded last Wednesday. Before her meeting with Jarry, about ten days ago, she was Miss Edith Ridley and lived with her mother at 227 Richmond street west.

She became acquainted with Jarry, and in less than two days a marriage license had been secured and they were married. She had never seen nor heard of the man before, but his tales of wealth in the Porcupine gold fields, his promise of a mansion on Foxbar Road, together with her dreams of diamonds to wear and automobiles to ride in and everything else that wealth could command, made her arrive at a quick decision.

A marriage license was secured and the couple departed for the residence of Rev. U. D. Morrow, at 5 Sussex Avenue, where the ceremony was performed. Jarry was dressed in a rough suit, none too recently pressed, wore a soft shirt, without collar and explained that he had just got off a train and did not have time to dress suitably for the occasion. After the knot had been tied, Jarry handed the parson a cheque for $2 on the Imperial Bank, but asked him to not present it for a couple of days, as his account had not yet been transferred from Webbwood.

The couple went to the Richmond street rooming house where the bride was living with her mother and had the best those modest quarters could afford. The wines served consisted of a bottle of beer and a bottle of porter, but the bride was still dreaming of a luxury to come and was so happy as if the table had been supplied with the rarest vintages.

The next day Jarry went to the McLaughlin Motor Car Company and purchased two machines a limousine for his wife and a touring car for himself. He gave cheques and again asked that they be not cashed for a couple of days. The cheques he gave first were on the Traders Bank at Webbwood, but he later changed them to the Imperial Bank in Toronto. From the garage he went to Eaton's and purchased about $1,500 worth of diamonds and a number of expensive rugs, giving cheques in payment. He then went to a wholesale grocery establishment and ordered a carload of provisions to be sent to his mine in Porcupine. None of the stuff he purchased did he attempt to take away with him, and in every case he asked that presentation of the cheques be delayed.

His story was that his uncle had died a short time ago and left him a valuable mine in Porcupine, the name of it being the Jarry Mine. He went to the firm of Watson, Smoke, Chisholm and Smith, and arranged with Mr. Smoke to be his solicitor. He had a will drawn up, giving everything to the woman he had just married and told Mr. Smoke that he had an abundance of money but made no display of wealth. He had in the meantime, through a real estate agent, purchased a house at 52 Foxbar Road, the price of which was $12,000 and another house in Parkdale for $6,000. For these cheques were also given. One was to be for his mother-in-law and her mother and he with his bride were to occupy the other one.

He left home yesterday telling his wife that he would be back soon. He also had appointments with a number of people with whom he had been dealing and to whom he had given cheques, but kept none of them. His wife not being able to locate him, asked his solicitor and a number of other people with whom he had been dealing but returned to her room on Richmond street with a broken heart. She said he had a grip when he left the house and thinks that he has abandoned her.

Peterborough people will remember with regret that Jarry played similar pranks here a few weeks ago when he purchased a house, contracted to have it filled with $1,500 worth of furniture, fooled a number of other citizens and then took his departure without paying a cent to any one. He got nothing out of the game, but the amusement, but that seemed to be sufficient.

$25.00 FINE IMPOSED

Man Who Pleaded Guilty to Supplying Liquor to a Blacklister is Assessed This Morning

WILL GO TO GAOL

When Police Magistrate Dumble called the roll at this morning's session of the court, the first to stand at attention was Percy Parkinson, who appeared on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. "Guilty," he said, as the usual question was asked. "Did you put the money away to pay your fine before you got drunk?" asked His Worship. "Yes," said the accused, and he handed over the usual $2. Alex. Yorkston stood up in line on order and was charged with supplying liquor to a blacklister (Floyd McMaster), at the same time knowing that the latter was on the list, thereby violating the Liquor License Act. He pleaded guilty. $50 is the maximum and $25 the very lowest I can impose," said Mr. Dumble. "$25, with twenty days to pay it."

"I can't pay it in that time," put in the accused. Then Detective Newhall stated that Yorkston was in hard luck, having just got over an attack of the fever, and with a wife and family to keep, but the penalty was not altered.

A milk vendor was arraigned on a charge of being drunk on the 30th ult and abusing his wife. He was allowed to go. The defendant's wife gave evidence to the effect that on the night of the 30th, one week ago to-day, the accused threatened to shoot himself and also brandished a razor and in a sort of drunken frenzy he struck her a couple of times in the face. He did not appear to remember any of this however, and after timely advice was given by the magistrate, the case was dismissed.

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, ONT., NOV. 8.—On December eighth and ninth in Toronto will be held an important conference of the railway, farmers and cattle shippers with the Dominion Railway Commission with regard to increased facilities for shipping cattle. It is understood the new schedule submitted by railways provides for special and lower rates, but seeks to limit railway liabilities for damages in case of accidents.

STILL TRYING TO STRAIGHTEN CROOKED PILLAR PROBLEM

Property Committee Had Another Discussion Over This Feature of Public Library Building Last Night.

NOT SETTLED YET

At a meeting of the Property committee held last night, the crooked pillars of the Public Library were again in the limelight. This subject has become such a common one now, that the committee seems to regard the matter as a necessary part of the business of every meeting. However, last night marked the beginning of the end of the trouble, at least that was the opinion of the aldermen. It came in for a great deal of discussion as usual, and the contractors, Messrs. Belcher and Blackwell were present. The result of the evening's consideration of the matter was, that it will be left over for a day or two, when a special meeting of the committee will be called and the contractors and architect will be present along with their counsel, and the matter be threshed out. This conclusion was arrived at, upon the motion of Ald. Morgan, seconded by Ald. Graham.

During the course of the evening, some interesting information on the subject was divulged. A suggestion had been under consideration for some time, to the effect that the pillars could be remedied by plastering, or by putting on rolling stones, and in consideration of this, Ald. Bradburn said: "Suppose we put on the rolling stone business on the pillars, who will pay for it?"

Ald. Duncan, chairman—"The Rutherford Bros."

Mr. Belcher—"The Rutherford Bros. are not altogether to blame."

Ald Graham—"Well, anybody can see that that the pillars are crooked."

Mr. Belcher—"Well I stood at the top, and was unable to see any crook in them."

Ald. Morgan— "Is it correct that they had to use a special kind of brick?"

Mr. Belcher—"Yes. At first we tried to get the white, or cream brick, which was supposed in the first place to be the kind to be used, but failing to get this in Toronto, the red brick was used."

Chairman—"They claim they were stopped by you for a while."

Mr. Belcher— "They were stopped because they were unable to get the right kind of brick, and then when they started again, they went wrong, because they had reached the part where they had to make the bulge, and they did not have the right kind of brick."

Chairman—"Would you recommend to pay the men?"

Mr. Belcher: "I think you should, to be honest about it; they have taken a lot of abuse about it, and in the first place they took the job cheap."

Mr. Belcher—"We would have used

ST. CATHARINES, NOV. 8.—A letter intended for J. H. Kratz, containing a cheque for one thousand dollars, being a returned deposit from the Dominion government on a tender, was wrongfully addressed Katz, and was delivered by the post office to one Max Katz, who quietly deposited the same to his credit, later drawing it all out and leaving town. The Dominion police are on his trail.

BALFOUR RESIGNS

Leader of Conservatives in British House of Commons Has Given Up His Position

A BIG SURPRISE

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 8.—A. J. Balfour has resigned the leadership of the Conservatives in the British House of Commons. The announcement came to-day as a thunderbolt in political circles, although it was known that for a long time there has been an insurging against Balfour's leadership. Recently there have been serious rows in the party caucuses. Balfour entered Parliament in 1874. He is 63 years of age and was the last Conservative Prime Minister of Britain. Austin Chamberlain, Bonar Law, "The Canadian," and F. E. Smith, K.C., are mentioned as Balfour's successor.

NIGHT SCHOOL

No person who is without a practical business education should hesitate to avail himself of the night classes of the Peterborough Business College. These classes are for those who work during the day, and desire to learn while they earn. Students are instructed individually, and they may take the subjects they wish. A business education is at a premium in this practical age and ambitious young people may increase their earning ability by attending these evening classes.

SCHOONER IN DISTRESS

Special to The Examiner:

KINGSTON, NOV. 8.— Practically all navigation has been held up here for thirty-six hours, but stauncher crafts ventured out this morning. The schooner "Acacia", laden with coal, drifted down the river with a hole driven in her hull. The crew worked heroically at pumps and eventually brought her into port here.

ITALIANS DEFENDED

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., NOV. 8.—The Times correspondent in Tripoli writes rather defensively of the alleged massacres by the Italian troops, saying that these Italians who searched the houses and killed all living, human beings inside them, had just seen whole regiments of their riflemen caught between the fires of the enemy in front and the people in the houses to the rear, which had apparently surrendered. They had seen their comrades hacked to pieces and badly wounded by the Arabs' cavalry. These Italians also were insufficiently officered.

Is your husband cross? An irritable, fault finding disposition is often due to a disordered stomach. A man with good digestion is nearly always good natured. A great many have been permanently cured of stomach trouble by taking Chamberlain's Tablets. For sale by all druggists.

WHARMON PLEASED

Columbus, O., NOV. 8.—Governor J. Wharmon, who may be the Democratic candidate for President next Federal elections, expressed himself as simply elated at the result of yesterday's State elections. He says it augurs well for the success of the Democrats in the next Presidential campaigns. In New York State, however, latest returns confirm the fact that the new State Assembly will be overwhelmingly Republican.

$6,000 Spent

HALIFAX, N.S., NOV. 8.—The publication of the estimate of the quantity of liquid consumed at the Borden banquet here has been causing a great deal of comment. The Chronicle (a Halifax journal), gives an estimate of 480 quarts of champagne and 400 bottles of port and sherry, 300 bottles of whiskey and a 100 bottles of light wines, and says that six thousand dollars was spent in eating and drinking. The Chronicle says the Tories will be able to remember the Borden banquet as the biggest drunk ever held in Halifax.

BYE-ELECTIONS

Special to The Examiner:

HALIFAX, NOV. 8.—In the Provincial bye-election, Hon. Odance, Liberal, will not be opposed in Annapolis county, but Duff in Lunenberg and Wall in Digby, both Liberals, will have opposition. Z. Wicker will be the Conservative candidate in Lunenberg.

Miss Seward In Germany

A letter from Harry W. Field to Mrs. A. V. Collins, Mount Forest, dated Oct. 8th, says, in reference to the work of Miss Gladys Seward:

"You will be glad to know that Mrs. Biggar has given her daughter to Gladys at 3 marks a lesson; also I got her for a fine concert singer to play her accompaniments and this lady is going to give Gladys her little boy to teach. This will bring her in 12 marks a week. Another person wants to study with one of my pupils, and I got her for Gladys. I think this will bring in Gladys 98 marks a month and she needs 120 to 130, so she is not doing badly. She will play the Beethoven G. major in December. I am going to Berlin on Saturday to see about Gladys playing there."

LEAVING FOR WEST

The many friends of Mr. Bert Canniff, formerly of Peterborough and son of Mr. Jas. Canniff of this city, will be glad to learn of his success. Mr. Canniff is spending a week at his home here before leaving for Calgary, where he has secured a splendid position. The Berlin News Record says:

Mr. B. F. Canniff, who for the past year has been the city editor of the News Record, left this morning for Calgary, Alta., where he has accepted a lucrative position as managing editor of the Western Canada Publishing Co., proprietors of several live monthly trade journals. Since being identified with newspaper work in Berlin he has made many friends both in business and social circles, who while regretting his leaving will extend him every wish for success in the west's journalistic field.

After the last "form" had been sent down on Saturday, the members of the Record staff gathered in the composing room, where he had been ascertaining the correctness of position in his last display "head" on the g. f. j., and tendered him a little surprise. It took the form of a presentation of a fountain pen and an address, the latter embracing the hearty wishes for success from his fellow employees and their appreciation of his service with them.

Best explained to the boys that the western fever had got a hold on him and how he had often seen it in an "interview," but now that he was to see the new country he regretted losing his fellowship.

At the Banker's Home, Waterloo, the boys made him the recipient of a fine pipe.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 8, 1911

IT IS WORTH WHILE.

Our evening contemporary sneers at Mr. Hall for devoting an entire evening to the discussion of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and thereby impressing upon the electors of West Peterborough the urgent necessity of remodelling and extending its provisions, so that the injured workman and his family may receive full and ample compensation without the expense of a law suit. Our contemporary's stand that the Workmens' Compensation Act is unworthy of discussion, for a whole evening, is quite on a par, and in accord with, the policy of the Whitney government, which has been for seven years studiously, if not offensively, ignoring the rights in this regard of the mechanics and workingmen of the province. That is why Mr. Bancroft, speaking on behalf of the District Labour Council of the City of Toronto, said:

"Premier Whitney for months did nothing but insult the District Council. What we want to do, is to turn him out for his past negligence and insolence to this council."

That is why Mr. Hall didn't think it was a waste of time to devote a whole evening to the discussion of the Workmen's Compensation Law, to the exclusion of other subjects. It is worth while discussing.

TUBERCULOSIS.

Sir James Whitney in his ponderously airy way, waves off the danger of tuberculosis, and consequently takes little interest in, and has little sympathy with, the curative and palliative propaganda of treatment, now so largely confined to private enterprise. But tuberculosis is a sad fact in Ontario. The annual report of the Provincial Registrar-General, contains a table showing something instructive to those who have responsibility in this matter. In the census years since 1871, the deaths from tuberculosis in Ontario have borne the following ratios: 1871 they were .64 per thousand of the population, and 15 per cent. of the total deaths; in 1881 the deaths from tuberculosis were 1.27 per cent. of the population, and 10 per cent. of the total deaths; in 1891 the deaths were 1.12 per thousand and 11 per cent. of the total deaths; in 1901 the tuberculosis death rate per thousand was 1.50, and the percentage of deaths, as compared with other diseases, was 11 per cent.; in 1909—the figures for the last decennium are incomplete — the ratio of deaths from tuberculosis per thousand was 1.06, and the percentage of deaths, to deaths from other causes, was 7 per cent. It is to be remarked that a sensible decrease is to be noted in the number of deaths from tuberculosis in both the ratio per thousand and in the percentage of deaths compared with other diseases, in the past nine or ten years. This is significant, from the fact that this period corresponds pretty well with the more active, more systematic and scientific means adopted to bring into operation curative treatment or the disease. Aside from other evidence, this shows that tuberculosis is a disease that yields to measures looking to cure or mitigation of its deadly virulence. This fact should encourage those interested in the work; should be an inspiring hope to the afflicted, and should intensify the sense of responsibility of those in authority. The efficiency and general effect of the curative measures that have proven themselves to be good, are greatly lessened by the expense that at present prevents thousands of those with limited means, from seeking cure or relief. It therefore becomes the duty of the state to provide more generous government assistance for the establishment and maintenance of consumption sanitaria, and other means of dealing with the "white plague." Sir James Whitney should take notice.

The Orange Sentinel now puts up the claim—"I dont is"—that is, won the great Borden victory in Ontario.

AFTER THE SURPLUS.

It is observed that Premier McBride of British Columbia, and his Treasurer are at Ottawa in the interest of "better terms"—a slice of the surplus—an increased subsidy to the Province of British Columbia. It is also to be observed that prominent and obscure, Conservatives, are insisting upon the beauty of returning the present Whitney Government to power, because it would have "more pull" with a Conservative Government, in power at Ottawa. The vicious character of the principle involved is outstanding; it is quite on a par with the frank and forcible answer of the late Sandfield Macdonald, to a deputation asking for some right, for Strathroy, which, by the way, sent an Opposition member to the Legislature—"What the h—l has Strathroy done of rme?" It cannot certainly be seriously contended that the policy of the Dominion Government shuld be a kissing-goes-by-favour policy. Any claim the Province may have upon the Dominion Government is not strengthened or weakened by the fact of the political complexion of the provincial government. Right is right, independently of politics. Only machine politics can make any difference; it is only by collusion that, having both Governments of the same politics can make any difference, whether the question is application for increased subsidy, or for other purposes. The principle of "interlocking" Dominion and Provincial administrative, or, other functions, is a negation of the doctrine of local self-government. Provincial autonomy is as important in the Confederation domain as Dominion autonomy is in the Imperial domain.

At any rate, the independence of the provinces of the Dominion is good, Liberal doctrine. At the inception of the Ontario Provincial railway the Ross Government applied to the Laurier administration for aid for the railway. After mature consideration it was decided that it would be a mistaken policy and establish a bad precedent, to grant the request. If this policy were adopted by the Dominion, and Ontario were given help to build a provincial railway, the same concession could not be refused the other provinces under similar conditions. This position was recognized as sound, and that Ontario, as the largest contributor to the Dominion revenue, would do better to build her own railways, than to have to contribute to the building of provincial railways in the other provinces. The evils that would come from the free overlapping and "interlocking"—as Mr. Borden uses the word—of Dominion and Provincial administrations would more than neutralize any temporary financial advantages that might accrue.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be three score and ten on Nov. 20th.

Italy might better have a single eye than a Tripoli to territorial aggrandizement.

The British manhood suffrage bill will be introduced next session. It does not include votes for women.

The rate of infant mortality is on the increase in Ontario. In 1909, one out of every 8 children born, died in the first year of life.

In the social sense of the word, Sir James Whitney is not a 'good-mixer'. It is different when he comes to want to tangle up Provincial with Dominion politics.

British trade is still healthy. The October statement of the Board of Trade shows an increase of 33¾ millions—14 million—imports, and 29¾ million exports.

The latest report of the provincial Registrar-General is just issued giving the vital statistics for the year ended, 1909. The number of births in the province decreased, as compared with the pervious year, by 2,090. A decreasing birth rate of nearly 25 per cent. does not fully explain the decrease of Ontario's population in the last decade. It remains for the Department of Agriculture in the Whitney government to give further explanation.

DO YOU WANT IT, MR. BECK?

(Toronto Star.)

Since Sir James Whitney announced that it was his design, if successful in the coming elections, to do away with the Hydro-Electric Commission and set up a Department of Power, under a Minister, we have not heard that Hon. Adam Beck has appeared on a public platform to express his delight at the so-called promotion which is thus held out to him in prospect.

If Mr. Beck will take the platform and tell the people whether he is in favour of the change which the Premier suggests, we feel sure a great many of us will listen for what he has to say with real interest.

At first glance it looks as if the intention were to honour Mr. Beck by giving him a portfolio, thus elevating him in political rank to an equality with Hon. James Duff, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Hon. W. H. Hearst, and the other sure-enough members o the Cabinet.

But would it be a promotion? Does Mr. Beck feel that the intention is to arrange for his coronation or his execution?

At present, as the chairman of the commission, Mr. Beck's authority is personal and large, and his enthusiasm carries the public power enterprise along. He sits in a room with Col Hendrie and Mr. McNaught and decides to do what needs to be done. If he becomes Minister of Power would his policy have to be submitted to a board presided over, not by his own sympathetic self, but by the Premier? At present, on any point, he has to convince Mr. McNaught that he is right. After the change, would it be necessary for him to convince Hon. W. J. Hanna instead? Would he have to contend with Sir James to see which can win the approving nod of Hon. James Duff in a vote at the council board?

It is to be hoped that Mr. Beck, who is not a timid man, will speak up and tell us what he is thinking about.

We cannot perceive from here just whether Mr. Beck is coming or going. Does he like the proposed change? Does he want to be put through the political transformer? In asking him to step up, is his power to be stepped up or stepped down? What will be the effect on his voltage? Having power to have a portfolio, is he henceforth without a portfolio, is he henceforth to have a portfolio without power? We do not know. But Sir James knows, and Mr. Hanna knows, and perhaps Mr. Beck knows.

The people and the municipalities which have invested heavily in the power enterprise would like to know, too.

PROVINCIAL LIBERAL POLICY.

(Ottawa Free Press)

The inaugural address to the people of Ontario, issued by Mr. N. W. Rowell, is framed in the best spirit of Liberal thought and faith, and should appeal to the electors as a platform worthy of support. Mr. Rowell realizes that if a Liberal party is to succeed, it must be progressive, and therefore he asks endorsation of a platform which is really progressive and constructive and not like too many political platforms, merely critical of the opposing party.

A most striking feature of the platform is that calling for a more vigorous control of the trusts and combinations of capital, the prohibition of contributions to election campaign funds by any corporation, and the appointment of a public prosecutor as in England ot assure the independent enforcement of the election law. This is a "Liberal" plank in the truest sense. It aims right at the roots of a pernicious influence that seems to have been getting stronger and stronger in Ontario during the last few years. There have been times when it looked as if the law department of the administration was but the tool of the capitalist and the political boss. And as for the enforcement of the election law it has been frequently a farce. The Liberal party would cut out the canker.

Taxation reform will be popular, despite the opposition of Sir James Whitney, while the proposed creation of a department of colonisation and immigration will fill a long-felt need and must result in the more rapid development of our northern country.

Those who have had dealings with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway will welcome the proposed reforms in connection with that undertaking. It has long been a matter of complaint that the men who do business with that railway have no means of address for their grievances and if Mr. Rowell can place the road in the same category as the other railways in Canada (except the Intercolonial, which should also come under the Railway Commission), he will have done well for the business world.

The need of Civil Service reform in the administration of the provincial government will be one of the first matters to be considered by the new leader and his followers, and the success of the Commission idea in the Federal service will give an impetus to Mr. Rowell's proposal for its adoption by the province.

The decision to take more time for the consideration of the problems of the liquor traffic is probably a wise one. It may not satisfy the more aggressive of the moral reformers, but it is better to make sure that a policy is workable than to take one up hurriedly, only to have to amend it later. The intention to abolish the handicap upon local option placed there by the Whitney Government by insisting upon a three-fifths majority, is a distinct step forward, and will be pleasing to reformers.

When, added to these proposals, we have a policy involving the public ownership of public utility corporations, a scientific policy of forestry, and a steady intelligent handling of the agricultural problems of the Province, it must be admitted that the party leaders have given the Liberals good fighting ground.

It is a matter for regret that so short a time is to elapse before the electors will be called upon to pass upon the new platform, but there is ample food for thought and discussion in the month or so which lies between now and election.

CORPORATION INFLUENCE IN THE DOMINION GOVERNMENT

A Well-Known Barrister and Conservative Worker of Toronto Treats of the Matter

The people of Canada must have been amused, when reading the patronising and hypocritical speech delivered by Mr. White, at Lansdowne, in the county of Leeds, a few days ago, to learn that "he had been honoured greatly beyond his deserts by the invitation of the Conservative party of Leeds county to become their candidate," and also to learn that Mr. White "had entered the Conservative party by the door."

Mr. White was not invited by the Conservatives of Leeds to become their candidate. The selection of Leeds county was arranged for Mr. White as a matter of political expediency, because he could not secure a safe seat anywhere else, and was arranged in part by a man named George Taylor, M.P., ex-Conservative Whip, and the recent sitting Conservative member for Leeds in the House of Commons, who ought to be ashamed of himself for his performance. Taylor was elected by the people of the county of Leeds to represent them in the House of Commons, and not to secure an easy job for himself for life in the old man's home, the Senate, at Ottawa, immediately after his election to the House of Commons, as the representative of the people of Leeds. Not content with resigning in favour of Mr. White, he brazenly points out to the people of Leeds that they will be represented in the Senate by him, and in the Commons by White, and that he, Taylor, will still control the patronage and will see that Leeds gets a goodly share of it. With the promise of a Senatorship in his pocket and the aid of patronage, he urges the people of Leeds to elect his successor, Mr. White. The sooner the Conservative party rids itself of political time-serving heelers of the Taylor stamp the better it will be for the whole country.

As to Mr. White entering the Conservative party by the door, he was very careful not to say by which door he entered, whether by a side door or a back door. Sir John Macdonald never opened nor left open any door of the kind by which White entered. As to the precedent of what Sir John did this will be dealt with later. The writer denies that Mr. White is a Conservative at heart, and I voice the sentiment of many thousands of Conservatives when I tell him that he will never be looked upon as a faithful and loyal Conservative, but merely as a political tool and time-server. When he did assume to ally himself with the Conservative party he did so by the back door entrance of political expediency, by waiting until the election had been fought and won and then the interests he represents, well knowing there would be no opposition, and having already secured the portfolio of Finance for Mr. White, set about arranging to obtain a safe seat for him. The notorious Boss Tweed of New York once said: "You may elect which ever candidate you please to office, if you will allow me to select the candidates." In Canada the financial and corporation bosses say to the electors: "You may elect the Minister of Finance, or the Minister of the Interior, or the Minister of Militia, if you will allow me to select the candidate who is to be the Minister of Finance, or Minister of the Interior, or Minister of Militia." As one great statesman has truly said, the character of the men nominated and the influences to which they owe their nomination determine the character of government.

In this connection I would like to draw attention to what The Toronto News says of the new Liberal leader, Mr. Rowell, in its issue of November 1. Referring to his selection as leader, Mr. Willison in an editorial enlightens the public as to Mr. Rowell's ability in the following language: "... he is wholly without actual political experience, and has always been a confirmed partisan," and then goes on to show how he supported what he, Willison, spoke of as "the rotten Ross and Laurier Governments." As a matter of fact, Mr. Rowell advocated the prosecution of those guilty of corruption in both Governments. How does this language apply to Mr. White? He is a three-months-old corporation politician, and supported the same "rotten Ross and Laurier Governments." Of course I suppose there is no necessity for Mr. White to serve an apprenticeship in the House of Commons, or to have any political experience. The position of Minister of Finance is one of such importance that there is no necessity whatever to learn anything about it. The fact that Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Hon. W. S. Fielding and their able predecessors served years of apprentice ship in public life and in Parliament before being qualified for Ministerial positions is of no consequence in the case of Mr. White. The "interests" considered there was not one among the whole number of Conservatives elected on September 21, 1911, qualified to fill the position to their liking, and so all those good old staunch Conservatives who had borne the burden and heat of the day for years on the Conservative side in the House of Commons and in the party, men who have spent their whole lives working for the country and the party, were passed over and a stranger and political adventurer was suddenly thrust to the front as a Minister of the Crown over their heads. The smile that came over the faces of "Doctor" Flavelle, L.L.D., White, Lash, Walker, Arthur Hawkes and the other plotters after they had accomplished their purpose can be better imagined than described.

The special interests, corporation and financial dictators must be driven out of politics in this country as they are being driven out in the United States. As ex-President Roosevelt truly says, "Every special interest is entitled to justice, but not one of them is entitled to a vote in Congress, to a voice on the Bench or to representation in any public office." The issue in the next Dominion election in Canada is well settled now. It will not be clouded by discussions on the tariff, expenditures, or railways; it will simply be the question of corporation rule and rule by a free people. The issue is clear and clean-cut; there can be no mistake about it. Which shall rule this country — the corporation and financial interests or the free and independent electors of Canada?

THE WINTER EXHIBITIONS

Seed grain growers should avail themselves of the opportunity for advertising afforded by the winter exhibitions at Guelph (December 11-16) and Ottawa (January 16-19.) In the general class prizes of $1, $2, $3 and $5 are offered for two-bushel lots of seed grain representing seed for sale. In addition to that, through the Ontario Fairs Association, large prizes are offered to winning competitors in the field crop competitions. In oats, for instance, ten prizes are offered, from $3 to $25. Young street, York county, divides the districts for showing at Guelph or Ottawa.

This season there is bound to be a big demand for seed grain at good prices. The hot wave which passed over Ontario while the grain was filling caused a lot of it to shrink, and plump, well-filled grain will consequently be at a premium. This is shown by the price of barley.

As these fairs are attended each year by an increasing number of visitors, they give a splendid opportunity for buyers and sellers to meet and arrange their deals. Members of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association should be alert and put up strong exhibits. As soon as fall work is well enough advanced, farmers should get their seeds ready. It would be well to apply at once to A. P. Westervelt, or E. D. Elderkin, Parliament Building, Toronto, for the prize lists.

SPLENDID ADDRESS BY REV. JOHN KOLESNIKOFF

Russian Preacher Speaks at Annual Thank Offering of Women's Missionary Society of the Murray St. Baptist Church

INTERESTING RECITAL

The Women's Missionary Society of Murray street Baptist church held its annual Thank-giving service last evening.

Despite the adverse weather conditions, a large number attended, and listened with marked attention to an interesting address delivered by the Rev. John Kolesnikiff, a Russian Missionary in Toronto. The rev. gentleman gave an account the difficulties and sufferings he and experienced for Christianity. He has been in gaol no less than nine times in Russia and has been an exile from that country for twenty years. He is a splendid linguist, preaching the gospel in Russian, Polish, Macedonian, Bulgarian and Servian. Mr. Kolesnikoff, who was once a minister in Odessa, has now been in Toronto four years. In the address delivered last evening, comprising mainly his conversion and teachings, he said:

"For some years I was a student. When I became married, a friend came to my house one day (5th Dec., 1881) and my wife, who was somewhat of a hard character, refused him admittance. As he was a friend, I said he must be admitted and he entered accordingly. I was reading a book. He looked at it and said it was good for nothing, and, showing me a New Testament, asked me if I had read it. He then started to explain something to me of this book, but it was not interesting until we came to the 4th chapter of St. John, the 5th and 6th verses: "I am the Truth; I am the Way; I am the Life," and he remarked that there was no other truth, no other way, no other life. Then we were converted.

When our conversion became known we were put in gaol for two days; that is what we paid to accept the New Testament. When we came back to our home we found it broken up and we had to buy new furniture and effects.

I was thrust in gaol one day among seventeen young men who had been sent there for thieving. At first they beat me and, then asked me why I was there. I told them "For the gospel."

'Are you a preacher then,' they asked.

'Yes,' I answered, upon which they said: 'Preach the gospel to us.' I did so, and when the time for my release came, they were all converted.

"I was preaching in a small village one day," continued the speaker, "when a girl of 14 years came to me and asked to be baptized. I could not baptise her at so tender an age, but eventually she was baptized, and when it became known the police arrested her. Upon her refusing to tell who baptized her, the police actually hung her, and the government did not interfere."

You see how hard it is for Russians to be converted. We have lots of trouble to encounter from the people, as well as from the police. How thankful we should be for the freedom we have in Canada. On my first appearance in Toronto, four years ago, no less than six hundred persons gathered in the short space of five minutes. The result was that twenty-four young men stayed with me and thus the mission commenced. At the present day there are Russians, Servians, Poles, Macedonians and Bulgarians, and each is taught in his own tongue.

GERMS SPREAD IN SKIN

Eczema, Psoriasis, and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch, and what seemed a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing disease with its years and years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble, but have never—never seen such remarkable cures as those from D.D.D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D. D.D. or why not drop a line to the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. P.E., 49 Colborne St., Toronto.

We know that D.D.D. will help you.

An Orange Audience Hears Views On Nationalism And Bilingualism

At a meeting following an oyster supper by Carleton Purple Lodge, L. O. L., No. 602, in the Mount Denis (near Toronto) Methodist church, on Monday night, Rev. John Coburn of Zion Methodist church, Toronto, who described himself as "a Conservative and not ashamed to say so," is reported by the Toronto Star as speaking as follows, regarding Nationalism and Bilingualism; and the applause that was given his speech indicated that his audience was in sympathy with his remarks:

"The bilingual issue," he said, "is the greatest before the people of Ontario to-day. One of the greatest dangers that threatens our Provincial life is French domination. I am a good Conservative, and not ashamed to say so, but I am sorry at several things I see. To begin with, I regret to see the extent of the surrender which R. L. Borden appears to have made to the Nationalist element. We voted out one Government because they appeared to be pandering to the Roman Catholic and French influence, and we don't want a similar Government now that we have made a change. Mr. Borden has a great chance, and it is within his power to give us a Government entirely free from French rule. If he does not, we will hold him accountable at the bar of public opinion."

In regard to Provincial politics, Mr. Coburn said he was sorry that the elections were going to be held before the Merchant report was made public.

"Before we return the Whitney Government to four years more of power," he said, "we would like to know exactly what it is going to do with this question. We are told to trust the Government. We must see to it, however, that we support no man who cannot be relied upon absolutely to oppose to the death the bilingual schools. If a man were my own brother and a candidate for the Legislature, and if I did not feel he could be depended upon in this way, he would not get my vote. The country is watching us to-day. The cry of the whole Province is for freedom from these unworthy schools.

"It is not in the interests of the little French children themselves to be brought up in a school where they don't learn English. We are willing that the French should keep their language, but if they want to teach it for instruction in schools, let them pay for it themselves. The language to be taught at the expense of the Government must be English.

"What this matter means to our party," said Rev. Mr. Coburn in conclusion, "must not be considered by us at all. The duty to country stands above all party allegiance."

HUNTING PARTY HAS GREAT SUCCESS—SHOT 8 DEER

A letter dated Nov. 6th has been received from the Shawagana Hunt Club, and states that the men are having a splendid time, and great success, having up to Saturday shot eight deer, including two large bucks. One buck, shot by Mr. J. Metheral, weighed over two hundred pounds. Mr. S. Ray killed a large buck on Saturday. The letter states that last week two inches of snow fell, but it did not stay, and so far the weather has been remarkably fine. The party went up to Shawagana a week ago last Saturday, going in a car supplied by the C.P.R. The whole camping apparatus was taken in the car, the latter being transferred, and taken directly to the place where the hunters detrained. Shawagana is on the new line of the C.P.R., near Parry Sound, on the Georgian Bay, and the hunting district is in the immediate vicinity.

There were twenty-two in the party.

HOME ON FURLOUGH

Miss Agnes Dickson, who will address a woman's meeting in St. Andrew's School on Thursday, 9th inst., is home on a furlough, after seven long years, spent in missionary work in China. Miss Dickson was one of the first Secretary's of the Y. W. C. A. in Peterborough, a position she held up to the time of her departure for foreign lands.

Miss Dickson was connected with the Y. W. C. A. when the members of the Association met in a few rooms over one of the business houses on George street, but before she severed her connection with the work here, she started the stone rolling that gathered in the finances with which the present beautiful edifice was built.

As Miss Dickson will be in the city one night only, an opportunity will be given to all her friends and those interested in her work, to meet with her at the close of the meeting Thursday evening, when a reception will be given. All ladies in the city are welcome.

SLEPT SIX WEEKS

When the strange case of the Iowa woman who had slept constantly for 43 days was reported, many people who could not sleep at all wished that they might have a similar experience.

You would be surprised to know how many people there are right around here who hardly ever get more than two or three hours' sleep at night, owing to bad health, general weakness and worn-out condition. Miss Lonisa Ludwig, Newark, N. J., who went through all this has written a letter saying:

"Having felt weak, tired and badly rundown, with little appetite, and inability to sleep well, I began to take Vinol which I had heard was the best remedy for that condition. It has done me great good by building up my strength, improving my appetite and enabling me to sleep soundly."

If you are worn out and weak and want new strength so you can eat well, sleep well, and be well, Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy is what you need, and we guarantee it to satisfy you. rolling stones in the erection of the pillars, but at that time they asked an unreasonable price, and the Mayor was opposed to the rolling stones then."

Ald. Morgan—"We should not handle the matter at all. It is up to the architect to deliver the job to us complete."

Ald. Bradburn — "Did you notify them that the columns were not according to the specifications."

Mr. Belcher—"Yes."

A letter was read, which Mr. Belcher sent the contractors notifying them that the specifications had not been carried out.

Ald. Bradburn— "I feel like Ald. Morgan in the matter. We are through according to that letter. I think we had better let them go and see what they can make out of it."

Ald. Morgan—"We have no right to worry when we have a City Solicitor and two Architects. If I had my way, I would have them finish the work and hand it over to the city complete."

Mr. Belcher—"I think the job is well done, in fact I would not do it again for the money."

Ald. Morgan—"We look to you and Mr. Blackwell in the matter."

Ald. Bradburn—"I think the only satisfactory way this matter can be settled, is to have a special meeting called, and have the Rutherford Bros. and the contractors present, and have a talk on the matter.

This was agreed upon.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY

"My boy Frank seemed weak-chested, and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was required to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

Infantrymen Will Meet

A special meeting of the Infantry Association of the Third Division will be held in the Grand Union Hotel, Ottawa, on Nov. 15th, at 8 p.m., to discuss matters of importance to the Infantry of Canada and decide upon a policy to submit to the Hon. the Minister of Militia and his staff at the conference, to be held on the 16th, 17th and 18th insts.

All infantry officers in the Third Division, either active, reserve or retired, are requested to attend.

TO CLEAN UP THE MARKET

At a meeting of the Property Committee, which was held last night, there were present: Ald. Duncan, chairman, and the following aldermen: Messrs. Bradburn, Graham, Morgan, Brown, and the City Solicitor; also Messrs. Belcher and Blackwell, contractors, who were present in connection with the Public Library matter, which appears in another column of this issue.

The matter of collecting the seats from the parks in the city, the lights from Victoria Park, the smallpox tent and its fixtures, etc., will be stored for the winter. The exact place was not decided. It was suggested that a large shed be built for storing the different articles belonging to the city, for the winter. It was estimated that the cost of such shed, would be at least $100.00, and it was the opinion of Ald. Duncan, that they should put another $500.00 to it and build a smallpox cottage, if they intended to spend any money in that line at all. Nothing, however, was done in the matter, other than the Chairman was authorized to see that the above mentioned articles be stored for the winter.

The matter of the pig pens at the market came up again, and it was decided that the City Clerk put a letter on file for the incoming Council to take the matter up, as elections for the new council will be over before the market year is out, and they could not very well do anything in the matter until that time.

Ald. Bradburn thought that it was simply a shame and very unfair to the storekeepers around the market, to have a pig pen stuck up there, especially in the summer time.

Mr. T. McGrath, former Tax Collector, will be asked to hand in any plans of the city that he has in his possession.

A communication was read from the Peterborough Canoe Co., stating that they had recived a notice from the City Trust Commissioners notifying them that the piece of land at the end of King street, and along the water front, had been sold to the C.P.R.. They also stated that they had received a like communication from the C. P. R., notifying them that they had purchased the land. The Canoe Co., requested that the City lease them a piece of land at the end of the street, and leave room for a little lane way at the end of their factory. No action was taken in the matter.

There has been a change recently at the G.T.R. station. Mr. Hugh Cruikshanks, the baggageman, has resigned to take up a position as letter carrier, and Mr. Harry Weir has been appointed in his stead.

Attached to the regular C.P.R. train from Toronto to-day at noon were two coaches filled with natives of Sunny Italy. They were bound for points East.

The new C.P.R. siding running to the Peterborough Canoe Company is rapidly nearing completion.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

COUNTESS DE SWIRSKY.

Unique, artistic and altogether charming was the programme of classical dances given at the Grand Opera House last night by Countess Thamara de Swirsky, the famous Russian danseuse. Incidentally, the performance served to give Peterborough people an opportunity of seeing, for the first time, descriptive or interpretive dancing. Unfortunately the audience was small, but they were enthusiastic, and Mlle. de Swirsky was apparently not perturbed by the slimness of the attendance, as she danced as if her heart was in her work. Indeed, an outstanding feature of the evening was the joy and abandon with which the charming little dancer executed her different numbers. She gave you the impression of dancing for her own enjoyment, as if the audience was only incidental. Her programme was varied and always fascinating. For some reason or other no programmes were distributed among the audience, and the performance lost, perhaps, a little interest on that account.

Countess de Swirsky's numbers opened with a series of Russian dances which were followed by a magnificent programme of Grecian and Oriental dances. Probably the most enjoyable was her exquisite portrayal of "La Dance d'Anitra" from Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite in which her lithe, youthful body lent itself to the spirit of the music in a manner that showed perfect understanding of the composer.

Countess de Swirsky was assisted by a splendid special orchestra, whose magnificent playing was a treat in itself.

Officers Elected

The annual meeting of the A.S.K. class of Knox Church was held in the Sunday school room last night. About twenty members were present, including the teacher, Mrs. Keith. The following officers were elected: President, E. Williamson; vice-president, R. Smith; secretary, W. Taylor; treasurer, W. Johnston; press correspondent, R. Robertson. This was followed by several speeches from those elected.

Arrangements are being made to put on a mock trial at an early date. It will embace a breach of promise case and will call for a cast of twenty. The arrangements are in the hands of a committee of four, and a rehearsal will take place on Tuesday night next. It will be a month or two before the event will be presented to the public.

DANNY MURPHY

At any time Danny Murphy, the right fielder of the World Champion Athletics, fails to call the turn, the pitcher makes him look bad. And any time that Murphy calls it, the opposing outfielders have an opportunity of displaying their ability as sprinters.

For this Danny Murphy is one of the most remarkable men that ever swung a war club.

Murphy doesn't decide whether to swing at a ball or let it go by as it nears him. He knows when the pitcher winds up whether he will swing or allow it to go for a ball.

When he guesses right, it's a fierce swallop. And when he guesses wrong he is made to look bad, for Dan swipes whether the ball is wide or not.

Some of the umpires of the American league were discussing this habit of Murphy's, and among them was Billy Evans, who is considered one of the smartest of the bunch.

"You know, this Murphy is a wonder," said Evans.

"He is," agreed Robert McRoy, the secretary of the league, who was among those discussing the right fielder.

"Don't make any difference who is on the slab, Murphy picks the ball he will hit at before it is ever started on its way to the plate. He is one of the few fellows in the game who do that."

Everybody agreed that they knew a lot of fellows who did it, occasionally, when the circumstances almost made it necessary for the pitcher to groove the ball. But all agreed with Evans that Murphy was about the only one they knew of who made a practice of doing it.

"And Murphy certainly has got it down to a fine point. Seems to me that he is uncanny in that respect," said Evans.

"I have worked behind the bat when he was up. As the pitcher started to wind up, and when it made no difference whether the catcher heard or not, for it was too late for him to call for something else. Murphy would say, 'Well, I'll certainly pickle that one.'

"And he always swung. That is, when the ball was anywhere near the plate. Of course, if it was apparent that the ball would be out of his reach, he didn't go after it.

"That's the reason he gets such a powerful swing on the ball. You see most of those fellows up there and they are chopping at the ball. They wait until the ball is right upon them. Then they take a short swing, just chop at it. In that way they do not get the haymakers that the fellows who swing hard do. But they do not fan as often, either.

"Murphy refuses to bat like that He makes up his mind before the ball starts, and then he swings or doesn't swing.

"It is a battle of wits when Murphy is up. For the opposing pitchers have discovered his system; and all the while they are trying to outguess him, handing him a straight ball when he figures it will be a curve, tossing him a curve when he is looking for a fast one. They are trying to sneak over a strike when he has figured it will be a ball, and keeping the sphere on the corners when they think he is ready to swing.

"Murphy has made that system pay. But whether it is good or not is a mystery to me."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

MR. McILROY ADDRESSED CONVENTION

At the fifty-sixth annual convention of the American Association of Passenger and Ticket Agents, held in St. Paul, Minn., Mr. W. McIlroy, local C.P.R. ticket agent, made the following address, representing the Canadian Ticket Agents' Association:

It affords me much pleasure to be present at this meeting as a delegate from the Canadian Ticket Agents' Association, and on behalf of that association I thank you for the invitation. I feel the responsibility which our association has imposed upon me to appear before such an important body of passenger and ticket men, but as I expect to be a general passenger agent myself some day in the future, appearing here before you to-day will be a good experience.

Our association held its annu meeting last year in Quebec, at the famous Canadian Pacific hotel, the "Chateau Frontenac." There was a large attendance, lively discussions on various subjects pertaining to the ticket business, and a royal good social time. Several interesting and instructive papers were read. The subject of free transportation over United States railroads to members of the Canadian Ticket Agents' Association who are not wholly employed in the ticket business was again brought up and discussed, and I have been requested to bring the matter before you again.

When commissions paid to agents on tickets sold by them over foreign lines were cut off some years ago, it was followed by the ruling of the Inter-State Commerce Commission that none but ticket agents wholly employed in railway business should secure free transportation over United States lines. All the members of our association who come under the ban by the above ruling are successful business men in the smaller towns throughout Canada. Now, these men are paid commissions for selling tickets by the railway they represent; they sell coupon tickets over foreign lines, both in Canada and the United States; they can get transportation over foreign lines in Canada at least once a year through the secretary of of our association, but they get nothing from the United States lines.

Mr. President and gentlemen, the Canadian Ticket Agents' Association want to come to the United States and familiarise themselves with the railways and the wonders of this great country, but we are "barred out" as a body by the ruling of the Inter-State Commission. Is there no remedy? Could it not be arranged for free transportation once a year, for the annual meeting, to all the members of our association? I solicit your earnest endeavours on our behalf.

I have nothing further to report of particular interest to you from the meeting in Quebec, but I would like to throw out a suggestion here, that at some future time it would be a splendid thing to have a joint convention of the General Passenger and Ticket Agents, the Travelling Passenger Agents, the American Passenger and Ticket Agents, and the Canadian Ticket Agents' Associations, and would suggest Peterborough, Ont., Canada, as the point of meeting.

I thank you for your patience in listening to an understudy like myself.

ZAM-BUK CURED HIS SORES

Cures Also Chapped Hands and Chilblains.

Mr. Chas. Hardy, of 558 Home Street, Winnipeg, says: "My eldest son has proved the value of Zam-Buk and we would not be without a supply in the house. He had both ears so badly frozen that we became alarmed for fear they should have to be amputated. His ears were swollen to several times their usual size, and were very much discoloured. Large blisters formed and then these burst and painful sores on both ears resulted. The sores mattered, scales formed and the boy suffered terribly.

"The preparations which we at first used were found next to useless, in fact the wounds grew steadily worse, so we then tried Zam-Buk and found a great improvement in one or two applications.

"We continued with this herbal balm until the scales and foul matter were cleared away thoroughly, and healing began. In a week from first using this excellent balm the lad's ears were almost well again. In three weeks you would never have known his ears had been frozen, so well had Zam-Buk brought about healing."

Here is but one illustration out of scores how superior Zam-Buk is to other salves. It also cures chapped hands, chilblains, piles, inflamed sores eczema, ringworm, scalp sores, ulcers, scalds, and all skin injuries and diseases. On account of its purity and its herbal composition it is the ideal balm for babies and young children.

Encouraging Reports Were Presented by the Officers at the Business Session Yesterday Afternoon.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Protestant Home Board was held in the Board rooms of the Home last evening, with all the members present. Rev. Mr. Pogue read a chapter from the Bible and led in prayer, after which the reading of reports, and other general business was proceeded with.

Mrs. Rogers occupied the chair, and conducted the proceedings in a capable manner. After the reading of reports, ballots were passed around for the electing of officers for next year, but Ald. Edgar, who was present, moved that the present Board be re-elected by acclammation. This motion was seconded by Rev. Mr. Pogue, and carried.

Special mention was made of the splendid work performed by the matron at the Home during the last year. She received the thanks of the officers for the economical manner in which she had conducted the affairs at the Home. All the inmates were well fed, and yet the general expenses were comparatively low. Visitors are welcomed at the Home at any time they wish to call.

S. G. ROBINSON, Treasurer.

Secretary's Report.

The Secretary's report was read by Miss Helen Denison, and was as follows:

This past year has been a most eventful one in the history of the Home, marked, as it is, by the Incorporation of the Association, and the commencement of the long-wished-for new building.

The number of inmates for the year has been 23. Of these, 2 have died; 9 have been discharged for various reasons; and 12 are still with us.

The work of the Home itself has been carried on most satisfactorily; the matron and her assistant proving themselves most faithful and capable in the discharge of their very exacting duties.

At the Christmas season a large amount of outside relief was given. A new feature introduced this year was the invitation given to a number of poor children to attend the annual Christmas tree. Gifts were provided for them through the kindness of some of our members, and were much appreciated. As usual, the old people fared very well, and came in for a large number of gifts from various kind friends. The presence of the Rev. Charles Carpenter, who acted as Santa Claus, and Mr. Devey, and some of the choir boys of St. John's church, added much to the success of the occasion.

In January, it was decided to call a meeting of some of the representative men of the city, to consider the steps to be taken in connection with the proposal made by the City Council. This meeting was held on January 10th, 1911, when the City Solicitor submitted the proposal from the Council that the Association should become incorporated, and that the Board should add to its number, representatives from all the city churches. At the same meeting it was decided that the Endowment Fund, as it stands at present, should be kept intact and used for the running expenses of the Home.

In pursuance of the policy outlined at this meeting, a petition for incorporation was drawn up by the Solicitors of the Association. This petition was signed on April 4th, by the members of the Board, who, therefore, became Charter members. After some delay the petition was granted, and letters patent were received on May 3rd, 1911, which raised the Association, after forty-eight years of quiet, hard work, to the dignity of an incorporated body, able to hold property in its own name. As this change obviated the necessity of having Trustees, a vote of thanks was sent to the former trustees, His Honour Judge Roger, Dr. Halliday and Mr. J. B. McWilliams.

The formal agreement between the City and the Home was signed on August 29th, 1911.

Notices were sent to the various clergy of the City, asking them to appoint representatives from their churches, which has been done in almost every case.

The first general meeting as an incorporated association, was held on May 9th, 1911, in the Board room of the old Home. At this meeting the by-laws, as drawn up, were adopted, a Corporate Seal decided upon, and the directors and officers elected.

The directors are as follows:

For three years—Mrs. Birdsall, Mrs. J. B. McWilliams, Mr. J. A. Aylmer.

For two years—Mrs. Roger, Miss Nicholls, Mrs. R. S. Davidson.

For one year—Mrs. Hazlitt, Mrs. Robert Neill, Miss Mary Brown.

The Mayor and the Chairman of the Finance Committee are also ex-officio Directors.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Mrs. Roger.
1st Vice-President—Miss Nicholls.
2nd Vice-President—Mrs. Birdsall.
Treasurer—Miss Sara G. Robinson.
Secretary—Miss Helen Denison.

The City Council, in accordance with their agreement to give a site and ten thousand dollars, had asked the Board to meet them and choose a site. This was done on April 12th, and a lot on the north side of Anson street was decided upon.

The draft plans for the new building were drawn up by Mr. Sandford Smith, architect, of Toronto, whose connection with the family of the late Sheriff Hall, the donor of the present property, gave him an added interest in the work. These plans, having been approved by a general meeting of the Board, Mr. Smith was asked to prepare the working plans and specifications, and to let the contracts for the various parts of the work.

These were let as follows:

The bulk of the work to J. G. Graham for $19,985.00; heating to R. J. G. Sutherland, $2,495.00; lighting, Adamson & Dobbin, $2,322.00.

The building is now progressing rapidly, and is hoped it will be ready for occupation in the early spring.

The work of raising funds for the same has been in the hands of Mrs. Robert Neill, and has been splendidlycarried on, but as is usual, in all such work, has been most arduous.

The cordial thanks of the Board are tendered to all who have taken an interest in the Home. Chief among these we must mention the doctors of our staff, who freely give their services in looking after the inmates. Special mention must also be made of Miss McCalla, and her Bible class, and the Salvation Army, whose weekly visits are much appreciated. On Sunday afternoons most enjoyable services are held by laymen from the various churches.

An entertainment recently held, and which was much enjoyed by the old people, was that given by Mrs. Webb's Bible class. All these kind acts do much to brighten the lives of the old people under our care, and are much appreciated by our Board.

We also desire to thank the press of the city for their unfailing courtesy and kindness in publishing anything which may help in the work of the Association, and who most kindly donate copies of their daily papers.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

HELEN DENISON,
Secretary P. P. H.

RED

It's the Red Blood Corpuscles That Proper Food Makes.

An Ohio woman says Grape-Nuts food gave her good red blood and restored the roses of youth to a complexion that had been muddy and blotchy. She says:

"For 10 years I had stomach trouble which produced a breaking out on my face. The doctors gave it a long Latin name, but their medicines failed to cure it. Along with this I had frequent headaches, nervousness and usually pain in my stomach after meals.

"I got disgusted with the drugs, stopped them and coffee off short, and quit eating everything but fruit and Grape-Nuts, with Postum for my table beverage.

The headaches, stomach trouble, and nervous weakness disappeared almost like magic, which showed that when the cause was removed and good food and drink used nature was ready to help.

My blood was purified and my complexion became like a young girl's while my weight was increased from 90 to 120 pounds in a few months—good, solid firm flesh, where it used to be soft and flabby.

"I recommended Grape-Nuts and Postum to one of my friends who was afflicted as I had been. She followed my advice and in a short time was restored to complete health and in about 8 months her weight increased from 100 to 148 pounds.

"Our doctor, observing the effect of Grape-Nuts and Postum in our cases, declared, the other day, that he would hereafter prescribe these food products for gastritis." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

NEW PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Sept. 13th, regarding the providing of a gymnasium, which was referred to your Committee, we beg to report that the Chairman of the Committee accompanied by the Chairman of the Board, waited on the Minister of Education, with the result that the interview was satisfactory both to the Board and to the Minister.

Your Committee have considered the rearrangement of the Entrance Scholarships and recommend as follows:

1.—That the Board accept the generous offer of Mr. J. Hampden Burnham, M.P., viz., a gold watch, to be awarded to the city pupil taking the highest aggregate number of marks at the entrance examination of 1912.

2.—That Dr. Burnham's two prizes of $5.00, each, in gold, be awarded to the boy and girl taking the highest number of marks, excepting, however, the winner of the watch.

3.—That the other prizes be awarded to the other pupils in order of merit.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DR. M. A. MORRISON,
Chairman.

Report of Committee on Appointments.

Your Committee on Appointments beg to report as follows:

As authorized, your Committee advertised for a Specialist in science, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. J. E. Hodgson, but although we advertised twice, we were unable to secure a capable teacher until the 1st of January next.

After careful consideration your Committee recommend that Mr. A. H. Hutchinson, B.A., of Whitby, be appointed, duties to start 2nd of January, 1912, and salary to be according to schedule.

Mr. Hutchinson is at present Science Master in the Whitby Collegiate Institute, and in the opinion of your committee, he is a very capable man.

Respectfully submitted,
W. H. HILL, Chairman.

These reports were adopted.

POULTRY SHOWS AS EDUCATORS

Th amateur poultryman can get much valuable information and experience by attending poultry exhibitions at the fairs and poultry shows, simply by using his eyes and ears, for there is much to be seen and heard, even though the number of birds shown is small. A careful study of the various exhibits, in comparison with your own fowls at home, will show up the weak and strong points of your own, and you will be better able to plan for future matings. And if you want to test your own knowledge and judgment, go from coop to coop and decide where you would place the ribbons, if you were the judge; and after the ribbons are placed, see how nearly your opinion is like that of the judge. Where you differ from him, go carefully over the birds and discover, if possible, the reasons for the judge's decision. If you cannot quite understand, ask some friend who has been in business longer, and he may be able to explain. As a last resort, a courteous request to the judge himself will likely bring you the desired information, and with it you will get a more definite idea as to the standard requirements than could be produced in any other way.

If you will enter some of your own birds, your interest will be intensified, and, because you are on the alert, everything will mean more to you, with the result that you will get much information that will be worth much to you.

IF YOU WIN

If you should succeed in winning one or more prizes, it will afford you a lot of satisfaction, and you will be encouraged to keep on with your poultry work. But if you do not win, be a good loser; do not fume, and fret, and scold, nor accuse the judge of ignorance or unfairness. He has seen more birds than you have, and understands the weak points better than you do, and in the majority of instances, at least, his words are correct. Keep as quiet as possible, and thus avoid emphasizing your defeat. People usually talk about the winners, and very seldom about the losers, unless they are foolish enough to make themselves conspicuous by their loud ind disagreeable faultfinding, which is sure to react upon those who give way to such an exhibition of temper.

APPLY THE STANDARD

The way to get the most good from any show is to go as well prepared as you can, by a careful study of the standard, applying its requirements to your own fowls for months before show time, consulting with other fanciers to get their judgment, and when you reach the show room, be wide awake and see in what your birds differ from others, and try to judge them as impartially as if they belonged to a stranger; and when the awards are made, go thoroughly over the exhibits again, for the purpose of getting such additional information as will help you in your future breeding work.

A few such visits each year will not only serve to keep up your interest in poultry, but will be of invaluable use in keeping you on the right track as to breeding. Do not neglect the poultry shows; they are great educators.—W. W. Cox in the Poultry Review.

We have a style to fit every fancy and suit every purse. All that's latest---all that's good.

This is headquarters for people who want the best when they buy.

PETERBOROUGH COUNTY GIRLS MARRY EARLIER

Study of the Statistics in the Annual Report of Marriage Registration Shows That They Embark on the Sea of Matrimony at a Younger Age Than the Men---Methodists Lead in the List of Marriages.

Peterborough County girls marry considerably earlier than do the male portion of the community, according to the 40th annual report of the registration of marriages issued by the Ontario Government. The figures given for 1909 are interesting. They show hat only seven youths between the ages of 15 and 19 were married in Peterborough County, while during the same period there were over ten times as many—72 to be exact—girls of that age who embarked upon the seas of matrimony. In the next period, from 24 years to 29, it is found that more men than women are married, and this is true of the other periods. In Peterborough County in 1909 there were eight men between the ages of 50 and 70 married, while there were but three women. Following are the figures:

	Groom.	Bride.
15 to 19 years	7	72
20 to 24 years	104	120
25 to 29 years	117	85
30 to 34 years	44	26
35 to 39 years	32	17
40 to 44 years	9	5
45 to 49 years	13	7
50 to 54 years	2	0
55 to 59 years	2	2
60 to 64 years	2	1
65 to 69 years	2	0

In regard to the religion of the contracting parties it is seen that the Methodists are in the majority, the figures being as follows:

	Groom.	Bride.
Anglican	58	60
Presbyterian	84	60
Methodist	126	125
Roman Catholic	49	56
Baptist	13	17
Congregationalist	1	0

Incidentally the figures for the City of Peterborough in regard to th marriages for each month explode the theory that leafy June is the most popular knot-tying month. In 1909 at least September weddings were more numerous than those in the first month of summer and Christmas, and wedding bells rang jovially in December, as there were 22 marriages in that month.

The statistics are as follows:

Peterborough—January, 11; February, 9; March, 12; April, 14; May, 13; June, 27; July, 11; August, 18; September, 29; October, 17; November, 17; December, 22.

The Dairymen's Annual Meeting

The annual district dairy meeting for the county of Peterborough will be held in Norwood on Wednesday, Nov. 22nd. The meeting, which will commence at two o'clock, is under the auspices of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, and the Dairymen's Association of Eastern Ontario, Mr. Henry Glendenning, Manilla, president D.A.E.O., and Mr. G. G. Publow, Kingston, Chief Dairy Instructor for Eastern Ontario, will address the meeting.

Mr. R. W. Ward of Forbord, District Dairy Instructor, will be present and report upon his work during the past season. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, Director for the District, will occupy the chair at the close of the meeting and a director will be nominated to represent the district for the ensuing year.

The great value of this meeting to the dairy farmer cannot be overestimated, and every farmer and farmer's son, who has the interest of his calling at heart, as well as its monetary success, should not fail to be present.

OBITUARY

MRS. JOHN SANDY.

In the death of Mary Ann Ellery, relict of the late Mr. John Sandy, who passed peacefully away early this morning at 280 Stewart street, another of Peterborough's most highly respected of citizens is lost to the city.

Mrs. Sandy had been suffering more or less from heart trouble ever since August last, and her end which came this morning whilst in sleep, was therefore not altogether unexpected.

The deceased lady was born in Cornwall, Eng., and after her marriage to Mr. John Sandy, came to Canada in or about the year 1856, locating in Bowmanville. She eventually came to Peterborough and has now been a resident of the city for about fifty years. Mrs. Sandy, who had reached the advanced age of eighty-three years, possessed a naturally kind and gentle disposition and was deeply beloved of all those who were fortunate enough to know her. That she was always assiduous in any task which she may have undertaken is evidenced in the fact that it is only during her recent failing health and advanced age that her usual activity has declined.

She is survived by four sons, John and Henry of Manvers, Samuel of Rochester and Frank, the G.T.R. station agent at Peterborough.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon. There will be service at the house (260 Stewart street) at 2 o'clock; after which the funeral cortege will proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment at 2.30.

TALENT CONCERT

Unique Programme Under Auspices of George St. Ladies' Aid

The Talent concert under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society on the George street Methodist church last night was a most gratifying success from all points of view, combining as it did a large attendance and an unique and enjoyable programme. A feature was the presentation of a "mock" Ladies Aid meeting by the members of the Aid, which was the cause of much amusement and which gave the ladies an opportunity to demonstrate their sense of the humorous, this portion of the programme containing many amusing references to people and events in connection with the church. Needless to say, the audience appreciated the point in these allusions.

Rev. Mr. Couch occupied the chair, and the concert was opened by the singing of "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" and a prayer by the pastor. The most enjoyable programme was as follows:

Chairman's remarks.
Mock Ladies' Aid meeting.
Violin solo—Mr. Wilson.
Reading—Mrs. Pettit.
Solo—Mr. Miles.
Piano duet—Misses Robertson and King.
Reading—Mrs. Pettit.
Solo—Joe Zepp.
Violin solo—Mr. Wilson.
Reading—Mr. Winch.
Instrumental—Miss McGill.
Solo—Mrs. Renwick.
Reading—Miss Symonds.
Vocal solo—Mr. Shoemaker.

During the intermission in the programme a very successful sale of home-made candy was conducted, the booth being in charge of Mrs. Devins, Mrs. Lindsay, Miss Morrow and Miss Fife.

The members of the Ladies' Aid Society are to be congratulated upon the success that attended their efforts.

CHANTILLY POTATOES

Prepare some nicely seasoned, light, mashed potatoes and mound on a plater. Beat one-half cup soft cheese, grated and seasoned with salt and paprika. Pile lightly on to the potato and set on the top grate of the oven until the surface is nicely browned. Be sure that the oven is very hot.

FROM THE PRACTICAL FARMER

Just common cows satisfy common men.

Quality should always be the first aim in the dairy, as elsewhere.

Don't expect the butter maker to make first-class butter from second-class milk.

Now is the time to figure out and work out comfortable winter quarters for the cows.

This is the time to fatten off the cull ewes and poor breeders. See how many you can weed out.

Keep the buck in good condition, so that he will be active and vigorous during the breeding season.

If bran is to be bought, now is the time to lay in a supply for next winter's feeding. It is lower now than it is apt to be later on.

It doesn't pay to keep old sheep; they are more subject to disease and may ruin the whole flock. Anyway, they "know too much."

A hungry or uncomfortable cow cannot be expected to overflow the milk pail, even though she has a pedigree that reaches across the sea.

Many horses are foundered by being brought in hot and left to stand in a cold draft, or hitched to a post to stand, unblanketed, facing the chilly wind.

As the breeding time approaches, apply red paint to the brisket of the buck, and you can keep a record of the lambing season of each ewe as they are marked by it.

It does not always follow that a horse is not thirsty when he declines to drink when first led to water. You might want to glance about after being continued in a dark stall all day.

Green corn, stalks and all, is a good starter for the fattening hogs, but it must not be their entire ration. A little dry feed, as old corn or barley, is indispensable in keeping up their strength and regulating their bowels.

It takes no small amount of bovine energy to carry about a heavy poke. There is much more economy in building good fences than in fastening cord wood to your cattle. You will notice that animals which are obliged to carry a poke are invariably in poor conditions.

It isn't wise to allow the colts to follow the mares up and down the field while working. They are easily spoiled this way, because they will keep going until their muscles are tired out. Their bones being soft, such treatment will make large joints and put them out of shape.

The feed troubles are, for this year, a thing of the past with the man that has a silo. There is no more handling of clumsy corn bundles, no shocks to straighten up, no fodder to stack, no stalks to clean out of the gutter or drop. The field was all cleaned off, and ready for ploughing when the silo was filled, and the cows will have good feed of the same kind, and in the same place every day, from the time that snow falls until grass grows.

TIT-BITS

A machine has recently been patented in London for treating old hardwood blocks, by which it is claimed that the life of the blocks can be considerably extended. The machine, it is stated, removes automatically at one operation all foreign substances adhering to the wood of the old blocks, taking off the burred edges, and sawing away used or uneven surfaces to any thickness. Blocks to the number of 1,000 can be treated each hour, and after treatment the blocks are suitable for relaying.

The Tremendous Onslaught Has Made no Impression

Notwithstanding the steady run that has been made on the big $65,000 stock at Fair & Co. Limited since the sale started, the impression made has been scarcely perceptible. So extensive was the amount carried regularly in every line, that the choice is still practically as complete as when the big sale started. This is what makes the

MAMMOTH RETIRING SALE

such a satisfactory event from the people's point of view.

FATE OF HANKOW

Story of Burning of the City Finally Gets Out

MISSIONS ARE PROTECTED

Hankow, Nov. 5.—(via Wuhu, Nov. 9.)—The City of Hankow has been destroyed by fire over two-thirds of its extent. The lowest estimate of the loss is $50,000,000. Four hundred thousand people are destitute. Hundreds of half-burned bodies lie among the ruins. Many of them are the bodies of women and children.

The customs house, the postoffice, and the American missions have been spared.

The city has been looted, the Imperialists taking a hand in the pillage. Imperialist officers tried to check this work, and executed a number of the soldiers. Refugees were deprived of their loot on entering the British concession, cart loads of valuable furs, silks and jewelry being seized. It is suggested that the Red Cross receive the proceeds.

On Friday afternoon the consuls appealed to the Imperialists to cease burning the town. A proclamation, which was issued immediately, declared that the rebels were responsible for the fires and ordered that these be checked. The following day new fires started in various quarters.

The David Hill Memorial School for the Blind, connected with the Wesleyan Mission, has been looted, while, in contrast, all the mission property in Wu Chang, which is held by the revolutionaries, has been protected.

On Nov. 3 there was considerable gunnery practice, beginning before daylight. The Imperialist battery behind Hankow moved to the southwest, in belated fulfilment of the promise to shift the line of fire from the concessions. This battery and another stationed on the plains engaged in a heavy duel with Han Yang Hill. The Wu Chang forts used powder occasionally and joined in the defence of Han Yang.

A few hundred of the revolutionists are still in Hankow. Sniping riflemen on opposite sides of the Han River fought all day Saturday, and there has been similar fighting yesterday, but steadily decreasing in volume. There is much open revolutionary talk among the Imperialists.

Foreigners who have not been given the opportunity of witnessing the engagements except at a distance, are hearing horrifying stories of brutality. The Imperialists have hanged men, and, failing to strangle them, tortured them to death, prodded them with bayonets or crushed them to death with stones. The outrages against women cannot be told. Red Cross bearers have been killed or wounded. Soldiers on both sides have slaughtered their wounded enemies.

It was ascertained that Yuan Shi Kai is in the neighborhood but he is keeping his presence hidden. It is suspected that he went aboard a British gunboat, and it is reported that he has been interviewing republican leaders secretly.

A thousand revolutionary soldiers from Hu Nan reached Wu Chang on Monday. At Ichang and other river ports the Republicans are collecting the customs dues. Secret societies, it is reported, are gaining control in Sze Chuen. The mobs at Kia King are violent.

The revolutionaries commandeered a British tug, which was proceeding up river with two lighters of coal. It was suspected that the coal was destined for Admiral Sah's fleet. A British gunboat made a demand for the captured boats, which were afterward restored by the revolutionists.

Two thousand trained soldiers have arrived from the Poyang district, Kiang Si. A night or two ago the forts sunk an Imperialist gunboat, which was seeking to pass down the river, accompanied by torpedo boats. The latter escaped.

Prince Mentally Upset.

Pekin, Nov. 9.—It is semi-officially stated that the Regent Prince Chung is incapable of connected thought, and that the nobles are unable to agree upon a definite line of action.

According to consular reports the Government is losing the few remaining centres south of the Yang-Tse Kiang.

Nanking has gone over to the revolutionists in consequence of the Government's instructions to the viceroy at Nanking that he should not further resist the rebels.

The Tartar general Tuan Fang demurred, but his force of 4,000 Manchus was insufficient for the defence of the city. (This probably official version does not agree with the direct despatches from Nanking yesterday, which describe fighting there.)

Proclamation Issued.

Shanghai, Nov. 9.—The military government yesterday issued a long proclamation calling upon all Chinese to join in the life and death struggle, and exhorting the population of the lower provinces against disorders and to everywhere regard the rights of foreigners.

The proclamation further promises the abolition of many taxes hitherto imposed by "the 5,000,000 nomadic tribe which 200 years ago was supported by the liver and brain of 400,000,000 descendants of Han."

Hydro Profitable.

Galt, Nov. 9.—The figures for October, compiled by Reeve F. S. Scott, chairman of the fire and light committee, show that the aggregate saving to users of electricity under Hydro-electric rates was $986. The average cost of the power works out to seven cents per k.w., being five cents less than the rate charged by the old company. Mr. Scott states that the department will show a profit.

Perjury Charge Thrown Out.

Cobourg, Nov. 9.—Mr. Justice Latchford in dismissing the grand jury yesterday who brought in a report of "no bill" on the three counts of the indictment of the charge of perjury against Mr. Henry Hicks, declined to receive any presentment from them.

There is considerable speculation as to whether any further action will be taken on the matter by the prosecution. Mr. Hicks left later in the day for his home in Colborne. He is 76 years of age and quite feeble.

Set Her Clothes Ablaze.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Her clothing ablaze and unconscious from exhaustion and suffering upon privation, an old woman was found by the firemen yesterday morning in a shack on St. Catharine road, owned by the Jesuit Fathers. Rescued in the nick of time and revived, she acknowledged that she had built a fire, but added that she had been cold and without food for three days.

Mrs. Vermilya Taken Ill.

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Mrs. Vermilya, accused of poisoning Policeman Bissonette, became seriously ill in jail yesterday afternoon. She was stricken with a severe nausea, and it was feared that, in spite of numerous guards, she again had attempted her life by poisoning.

I.C.R. and Railway Commission.

Halifax, Nov. 9.—The council of the Halifax Board of Trade yesterday discussed the placing of the Intercolonial Railway under the railway commission as proposed by the Montreal Board of Trade. A resolution was adopted that this would be inadvisable.

MACKAY IS CHOSEN

Late Liberal Leader Has the Trust of Owen Sound

CONSTITUENCY FOR ROWELL

Owen Sound, Nov. 9.—At the Liberal convention held here yesterday Hon. A. G. MacKay was the unanimous choice, and he will take the field in opposition to Mr. G. M. Boyd, the Conservative candidate. No other name was placed before the delegates. Addresses were delivered by James E. Keenan, Owen Sound; C. W. Proud M.P.P. for Centre Huron, and A. G. MacKay.

The latter's address dealt chiefly with the charges contained in a writ issued against him some time ago. He also attacked the Government's Hydro-electric policy, and their course in dealing with the province's educational problems.

Briefly he touched upon a few of the instances where the Whitney Government had failed to live up to expectations. There was the miserable bungling of educational affairs, the unfairness of the assessment laws, the bilingual difficulties, and the unfairness in the distribution of Niagara power.

At the close of his address Mr. MacKay said: "It has been said that I cannot consistently be a temperance advocate because it is known that I have not been a total abstainer. I now make you the promise from the public platform that henceforth, so long as I am in public life, I will ever be an absolute and teetotal abstainer."

Mr. Proudfoot, M.P.P. for Centre Huron, expressed great regret that Mr. MacKay had felt that he should resign the leadership. He said that for the greater part the present Liberal provincial platform was composed of policies advanced and fought for by Mr. MacKay while he was leader. He ended by severely arraigning the course of the department with regard to the liquor license law, and particularly in local option towns. As Mr. MacKay had advised, he thought the only solution was to take the whole affair out of the hands of politicians and place it under a commission.

Seat for Mr. Rowell.

Woodstock, Nov. 9.—At a meeting of the North Oxford Reform Association here yesterday it was decided to accept the resignation of Dr. A. MacKay, M.P.P., who, during the last two or three days has been urged upon to vacate his seat in this riding in favor of N. W. Rowell, leader of the Opposition.

After the meeting it was stated that a mass meeting would be held on Saturday, Nov. 11, when a new candidate will be nominated. It is easy to predict that N. W. Rowell will be the chosen one.

Previous to the meeting, Dr. MacKay, who has represented the riding of North Oxford since the last election, made the following statement:

"It can be considered no secret that I have been asked to vacate my seat in North Oxford. The Opposition considers that North Oxford is a safe seat to offer to Mr. Rowell. They asked me to give way to him, and I have consented to do so, subject to the approval of the Liberals of North Oxford. The matter is being considered by the executive committee this afternoon, and if they endorse the proposed arrangement everything will be satisfactory to me."

Woman Struck by Car.

Toronto, Nov. 9—Mrs. Sarah Haines, 65 years of age, who lives at 163 Claremont street, is in the Western Hospital in a serious condition, suffering from internal injuries sustained at 7.55 last night, when she was struck at Manning avenue and Arthur street by eastbound Dundas car No. 1.548.

Mrs. Haines was crossing south of Arthur street when, being deaf, she did not hear the approaching car as it was struck. She was attended by Dr. McKay who sent her to the hospital in the police ambulance.

THREE NOW IN BOX.

McNamara Jury Is Cut Down by Two Men.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 9.—Three out of five veniremen balked at being sworn as jurymen in the McNamara murder trial at the opening of court yesterday.

Byron Lisk, mill owner, William F. Clark, retired farmer, and Sam Mendenhall, orange grower, were the men who objected.

"Rise and be sworn gentlemen," said the court. Lisk and Clark both started explanatory protests, which the judge cut short. Mendenhall sat still. Across the room sat his wife and the family physician, who had told the court that Mendenhall's mother probably could not live. His father died two months ago.

"Do you affirm, Mr. Mendenhall?" asked Clerk Monroe.

"No," said Mendenhall, "I swear when there is occasion for it. There is none now. I have a reasonable and fair excuse."

"Your excuse will have due consideration," said the court. Mendenhall then took the oath. Immediately after, by agreement of counsel, the court took them into his chambers, one at a time, and heard their excuses.

The court excused Clark because of ill-health, and Mendenhall because of his mother's illness. Lisk was retained. This left three jurors in the box. Byron Lisk, Robert F. Bain and F. D. Green.

BALFOUR RESIGNS

British Leader of the Opposition Pleads Advancing Age

FOLLOWERS PUT HIM OUT

London, Nov. 9.—The Unionist party is to swap horses while crossing the home rule stream. Arthur J. Balfour at an emergency meeting of the City of London Conservative Association yesterday afternoon announced to his constituents his retirement from the leadership of the Opposition.

Impaired health, increasing age and the desirability of the leadership passing into younger hands, were the reasons which he gave for this step in a speech which was marked by much feeling. But no one doubts that the increasing attacks against him by the ambitious younger Conservatives, particularly the tariff reformers, were the principal factor in inspiring his decision.

While a number of influential Unionists and would-be leaders, notably Austen Chamberlain and F. E. Smith, have been demanding the retirement from the leadership, few believed that Mr. Balfour would drop the helm in such an important stage of the party's fortunes.

The announcement was a sharp surprise to all parties and made an immense political sensation. No sooner was Mr. Balfour's withdrawal known than reports were circulated that Lord Lansdowne, leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords, who shared in the attacks, would accompany his colleague to the background. But Lord Lansdowne issued a denial of this last night.

Mr. Balfour will remain in the House of Commons, although he would be elevated to the peerage if he so desired. While he, as ex-Premier, was recognized as the leader of the whole party, the leadership will now be divided, his successor sharing it with Lord Lansdowne. That successor doubtless will be the Right Hon. Walter Hume Long who represents The Strand. A caucus has been called for Monday for the purpose of choosing a new leader. Mr. Long commands the confidence of the older and younger elements of the party.

Advanced tariff reformers favor Austen Chamberlain, and Sir Edward Henry Carson, Dublin University, and F. E. Smith, Walton division of Liverpool, cherish ambitions for Mr Balfour's shoes.

Mr. Balfour was received in audience yesterday afternoon by the King and informed His Majesty of his decision. During the course of his speech before his constituents he said: "I desire to leave the position of heavy responsibility which I hold before I can be suspected of suffering from that most insidious of all diseases—that disease which comes upon those who, without losing their health or intellect, nevertheless get petrified in the old course they have pursued whose authority grows because they have been so long in public service, or are great men of science, or eminent men of business, but who cannot deal with the problems which in the changing world are perpetually arising with all. Freshness and elasticity are desirable in those who have got to conduct great concerns.

"No man knows himself when that hour arrives. I am vain enough to hope that I have got reached that period, but it would be miserable if I ran the margin too fine."

Mr. Balfour deprecates the reports of party dissension. There were always grumblers when the party was out of power. He believes it to be in normal condition and declared that the country was fast tiring of sweeping radical legislation. The party, he said, would soon return to power.

Many Conservatives contend that the question of his health was the only reason for Mr. Balfour's retirement. Some members of the Halsbury Club, which was reputed to be working for that object, point out that the club adopted a resolution of confidence in Mr. Balfour and Lord Lansdowne only last Monday. They say that leading members threatened to resign if Mr. Balfour's retirement was made a plank of the club's program.

The Liberals and the adherents of the Irish party join the Unionists in regretting that the House of Commons debates will lose a great share of interest when the figure, to whom followers and opponents alike conceded intellectual pre-eminence, is no longer in the forefront of the battle.

Dissatisfaction with Mr. Balfour as leader has long been growing among the tariff reformers, who criticized his apparent lack of conviction on that issue, and gained great impetus when he advised the House of Lords to swallow the veto bill.

Merger Is O.K.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—The public utilities commission yesterday examined the charge entered by Senator Beique against the proposed merger of Montreal Street Railway and allied corporations, and decided that after a full investigation of financial arrangements they found nothing whatever to justify interference on the part of the Quebec Public Utilities Commission.

AFTER SUFFERING YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Fox Creek, N.B.—"I have always had pains in the loins and a weakness there, and often after my meals my food would distress me and cause soreness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better, and I can walk with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it, as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers."—Mrs. WILLIAM BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N.B., Canada.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

The Fires Of Trial

A Short Story

"How did it happen?", asked the doctor sternly, and the hard lines of his weary face deepened as he looked from the bed to the figure standing passively beside it. It was a sad sight, and his head was quickly averted, used as he was in his practice among the poor to seeing dreadful things. For on the poor bed lay a little twisted form, terribly disfigured, writhing in agony and moaning in a way that was heartrending to hear. Receiving no answer to his question, unless the slow shudder which passed over the mother's rigid form could be interpreted as such, the doctor said again curtly: "How did it happen, Mrs. Weston?"

She raised her gaunt white face, withdrew her gaze as if with a strong effort from the sight which she could not endure, yet was forced to look upon, and met his eyes with the stony calmness of despair. But suddenly as he waited impatiently for her answer, her unnatural composure broke down utterly, and cried in a strangled, half inarticulate voice:

"Oh, sir, oh, sir, how could I help it? I must work; I must live! I am forced to keep up a good fire for the ironing, Jenny"—and she cast a lightning glance at the bed—"she ain't old enough for school yet, and I must keep her at home all day. I haven't money enough to buy a guard for the open fireplace, and the child has always taken her chance. This morning"—she shuddered again—"I just slipped out of the room to hang up some washing, Jenny, she got playing near the fire, I suppose — anyway, when I came back——" She burst into heavy sobs.

"Her dress was of flannelette, I suppose?" was the doctor's fierce comment.

"Yes," she cried, defending herself hysterically, somewhat to his surprise. "Yes, it were. And what of that? Am I an idle woman that I have time to learn what it best for my child? Am I a rich woman that can buy her velvet dresses? I'm only a poor washerwoman—a widow, with nought but my earnings to live on. And you come here and tell me that she should not wear flannelette. Oh, Jenny, my little Jenny!" She sank down beside the bed in a kind of paroxysm, and buried her haggard face in the shabby patchwork counterpane. Even when the doctor delivered his ultimatum she did not look up, for with a mother's intuition she had devined it.

"Well, whether you could help it or not matters little now. She will die before morning." The pain and pity at his heart made his voice rough. Then he went out. In the squalid room Mrs. Weston knelt beside her child's bed of pain, and held the trembling little fingers in her rough palm, as though in this way to retain the life so fast slipping away.

She could do nothing. There was no human skill that could save little Jenny now. She could only wait for what? For death, that grim intruder; for the utter desolation and despair that would enter with him. For the child was her treasure, the light of her life. She was a widow, and Jenny her only child, was her all. How lonely the home would be without the small pattering feet and cheery little voice! Ah, how lonely!

Then her tortured thoughts took a new direction. The doctor — how he had blamed her; how cold and stern he had been. Did he think she had let her child be burnt on purpose?" she asked herself fiercely.

The twilight deepened in the poverty-stricken room. Little Jenny, moaning and twisting less now, lay on the bed; her mother knelt yet with her face hidden, and her hands holding tight to the childish ones.

So night came, and for a brief while both slept; but with one it was a slumber which grew deeper and passed into death, with the other a short oblivion, and then renewed consciousness. As the dawn was breaking the mother awakened to the realization of a quiet, rigid little figure under the patchwork counterpane, and a cold, dead hand lying stiffly in her own.

The inquest was over and the jury had given a verdict of "death by misadventure," at the same time severely censuring Mrs. Weston's negligence. She had been there the whole time, for her evidence was important. She sat motionless in her seat, and the doctor, who had not seen her since the day of the child's death, noted with deep pity and something like remorse the havoc that had been wrought in her appearance. He scarcely recognised this gaunt figure, with the ghastly white face and trembling limbs, who looked as if she had not eaten or slept for days.

She had given her evidence like an automaton, sometimes seeming not to comprehend what was asked her, so much had her emotions dulled her brain. She heard the severe censure passed on her with the same painful, unnatural calm, and when there was no further need of her, she left the place, groping blindly as one who does not see.

She went home mechanically, but at the threshold of the door she paused. Why should she go in? She had bidden Jenny's little form a last farewell, and home was a desolation to her now. Home — without husband, without child, without a soul who loved her. What was such a home worth to her—to any one?

She turned from the door, almost with a feeling of loathing, and walked rapidly away. For a long time she went on, caring nothing of where her footsteps led her, but slightly soothed by the fresh breeze against her fevered forehead. At last her fatigue began to trouble her, she took note of her surroundings, and found herself on one of the small bridges over a big river. She leant over the parapet, and remained in that position for a considerable time, watching the dark water swirl and splash round the supports of the bridge down below.

She had now nothing to make life endurable, and they seemed to invite her to the repose and oblivion for which she hungered. One plunge and all would be over, before any one had taken alarm and had time to come to her rescue.

The idea possessed and fascinated her. Without giving herself any further time for reflection, she began to clamber on to the parapet. In another minute she would have taken the fatal jump, when she was startled by a concerned and persuasive voice at her side.

"No, no, not that for heaven's sake. Friend stop—stop, and think what you were about to do." And firm hands pulled her down to the pavement again, where she stood, breathing hard, and staring at the interrupter with the hunted look of an animal at bay. A tall woman was before her, with an air of gentleness and yet authority about her. She was neatly attired in a kind of uniform—a long brown coak, and a tidy bonnet of the same hue. "Let me alone," said the widow sullenly.

"No," answered the gentle voice, "that is what I will not do. You are friendless and in sore trouble, and I am here to help you." She led Mrs. Weston to one of the stone seats the bridge boasted, and with patience and many comforting words got the poor creature to confide in her.

"Why did you stop me?" asked the widow resentfully, when her pitiful story was told. "I wanted to die." Her companion was inwardly thankful for the use of the past tense. She continued softly:

"But now you see the sin you tried to commit. You are being deeply tried but there is work for you in the world, and you have no right to try and leave it."

"I felt I couldn't live without my little Jenny. I felt I must see her again," said Mrs. Weston brokenly, yet with a note of apology in her voice. It was strange how much of a child she felt with this woman. She did not realise how much suffering and weakness had subdued her.

After a walk lasting about ten minutes the two women halted before the door of a large building, on the wall of which was inscribed in big letters, "Roeburn East End Mission." This was all Mrs. Weston had time to notice before entering with her companion. They went to a large room—the refectory, as it was called—where there were several long tables with rows of benches on either side of them.

Sister Laura—for this was the name by which she had introduced herself to the woman whom she had saved from self-destruction — after making her visitor seat herself, went away, soon returning with some supper. After she had eaten the meal Mrs. Weston was taken to a nice white bed where sleep quickly came to her aid. She slumbered long and heavily, and the next morning, on awakening, found her friend of the previous day beside her bed, with a steaming cup of cocoa in her hand. When she had washed and breakfasted Mrs. Weston felt greatly refreshed.

She listened with attention as Sister Laura spoke to her of the mission, and her eyes got red when she heard of all this handful of men and women were doing in one of the poorest and most miserable districts in the city. "After hearing all this," concluded Sister Laura, "you cannot doubt, can you, that there is still work for you to do, and a place for you to fill in the world? Your help would be of immense value to us. We need a kind, motherly woman, who is used to children and their ways. Come and see them, and then you shall decide whether you will undertake the charge."

She led the way to a large, sunny room, where cheerfulness and sunshine seemed the prevailing conditions. A young girl was in charge of about fifteen little mites ranging from eighteen months to five years old. Some toddled about the floor, playing; a few were asleep on the low bed in the corner, and three or four of the oldest were grouped about the young nurse, listening with upturned, eager faces to some story she was telling.

Mrs. Weston felt something tug at her heart. Was it a call to undertake this duty? A toddler near her, brown eyed and brown haired, with a fat, merry face, fell down and bruised her small knee. According to custom she ran to the nearest person to be "kissed well." Sister Laura watched the little scene with satisfied eyes. "Well," she queried.

"Let me have charge of them," was the eager, yearning answer. "I love children so intensely and here I shall always have plenty around me. There is a little girl there—" she indicated one of those grouped around the story teller—"who has somehow a look of Jenny. I shall have her with me all day long and I shall be able to imagine"—her voice trembled, but her eyes shone—"that I am a mother still—that I have my little darling back again."

GIRL'S RAINY DAY OUTFIT

Every girl who goes daily to business should possess a rainy day outfit—that is, a special raincoat and skirt which she wears only when the weather is hopelessly wet.

The rainy day skirt, of course, is short and quite plain whatever the prevailing fashion may be.

With it is worn a neat white shirt waist.

Instead of petticoats a pair of bloomers are most convenient.

The raincoat can be made at home from a good pattern and must have as its material a witerproof cloth.

This with care should last for at least four years, or, perhaps, even longer.

For the skirt buy a remnant of serge, either black or some dark colour, and hand the hem with leather, which can be bought to match the shade of the fabric.

Rubbers are necessary, too, for there is nothing more dangerous than sitting about with damp feet.

If rubbers are objected to on the score of ugliness a very nice sandal may be worn.

With this outfit choose a plain little toque of felt and wear over it a washable motor veil, which will keep the hair tidy and in place.

ORANGE PIE

One orange grated, two eggs, one half cupful of sugar, bake with under crust and fill in with whipped cream.

Tests made by a French railroad of a device for heating water before it reaches the boiler by exhaust steam showed a fuel economy of more than 12 per cent.

The American eagle is of nine parts gold and one part copper, while the English sovereign contains a slightly higher percentage of the more valuable metal.

An exhibit of photographs at the last conversazione of the London Royal Society brought to notice a method of observing fish from its midst, says an exchange. A special pond is necessary, with a chamber under one side closed from the water by a sheet of plate-glass. As the chamber is darker than the pond, the fish cannot look into it, but perceive only themselves and surroundings reflected from the glass as a mirror. The unseen observer in the chamber, on the other hand, can readily see into the pond. In this way every movement of the most timid fish can be watched without disturbing its natural conditions, and a photograph of any new or interesting phase of aquatic home life can be made in the two-hundredth part of a second or less.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

When silver is not in constant use a piece of camphor will keep it from tarnishing.

When an oven is too hot the temperature may be lowered by opening the lid of the range a trifle.

For cleaning nickel on ranges, dip a piece of newspaper in clear boiling water and rub the nickel until dry.

Brown boots may be blackened by rubbing the blackening well into the shoes with a raw potato and then polishing.

Wash white silk gloves at night in warm suds, rinse well and dry. Drying them in daylight causes them to turn yellow.

Brush gilt braid free from dust with a fine brush and rub on it powdered rock alum, which will remove the tarnish when it is brushed off.

It is possible to buy remnants of carpets very cheap, and these, cut into rug lengths and with a fringe added, make excellent and handsome rugs.

Never scrub oilcloths with a brush, and never use soap in cleaning them. Those which have lain in stock for several years are the best to buy, as the paint is thoroughly hardened. Wash with a soft rag dipped in milk and water.

Dish covers may be easily kept bright and clean. Remove grease with warm water and soda, dry with a soft cloth, then apply a little metal polish with a flannel. A final polish with fine whitening will then make the covers look like silver.

CARE OF LAMPS

The season is approaching when the lamp is needed early and required to burn for several hours. The care of lamps is one of the great bugbears of the daily routine in many houses. With a few precautions lamps may be kept clean and free from odor, and a perfect light be the result.

Fill daily with the best grade of coal oil. The best is the cheapest. Do not fill too full; allow a little room for expansion when the oil begins to warm up, and so prevent it from running over the top or creeping up on the burner.

Keep the burner clean. The common cause of odor from lamps is the clogging of the tiny air holes at the base of the burner, under the cap, and the crust which forms at the top of the wick tube. These openings must be kept free, because they supply air, without which there cannot be proper combustion. When these air passages become clogged and greasy, the flame will be dim and emit an unpleasant odor. Gummed and clogged burners can be easily cleaned by boiling a few minutes in salt, soda and water.

Have a good wick and be sure it fits. It should just fill the tube without crowding and be long enough to reach the bottom of the lamp.

Trim the wick daily, cutting, not scraping, off the burned portion evenly across the top with sharp scissors, slightly rounding the corners. Replace a wick at least once a month, or sooner if they become dirty.

Thoroughly wash the bowl once a month.

When lighting a lamp, do not turn the wick above the opening in the cone for a few moments, or until the chimney has become somewhat heated, when the flame may be turned to its full height.

A SEWING APRON

One housewife has "an emergency apron" which saves many precious minutes. It is simply a dainty lawn apron in the pocket of which is kept some bit of sewing with scissors, thread, needle, thimble, all ready for work.

TO REMOVE SCORCHES

An authority on the subject says that to remove a scorch from linen cut an onion in half and rub the scorched part with it and then soak it in cold water, when the scorch will soon disappear.

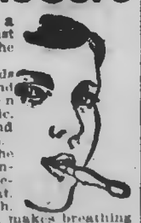
CURING HAMS

Many a good ham has been cured by this recipe: For a ham of sixteen or eighteen pounds weight take a half-pint of salt, a handful of brown sugar, a teaspoonful of saltpeter. Mix well together and rub the ham thoroughly and fill the hock end. Lay on a board and spread over it all the loose salt. In a week or ten days this will be absorbed, then rub it again with the same amount of salt and sugar, omitting the saltpeter. Let it lie two or three weeks, then hang up in a cool, airy place.

Another excellent recipe, on a larger scale, is for 100 pounds of ham or shoulder: Use four pounds of salt, two pounds of brown sugar, a quarter-pound of saltpeter. Mix well together and divide in three equal parts. Rub one-third well into the hams and leave on a board for three or four days until absorbed; then rub in a second amount, and the remaining third a few days later. After two or three weeks, when the salt is absorbed, scrub the hams clean, hang up and dry; then smoke, wrap in paper and put in a bag, tying it tightly.

A Virginian recipe, which differs slightly from these, is for about fifty pounds of ham: Use a gallon and a half of salt, a pound of brown sugar, one-eighth of a pound of saltpeter, an ounce of black pepper and a half-ounce of cayenne. Trim the hams neatly and rub the skin side first with salt and lay aside; then into the flesh side of each ham rub two teaspoonfuls of saltpeter and a tablespoonful of brown sugar, mixed together. Rub the pepper, particularly about the hock and under the bone, and then rub the whole ham over with salt. Now pack the hams, skin side down and one upon the other, in a tub or barrel, the bottom of which has been covered with some of the remaining salt and with the rest in layers between. The process of salting will be complete in five weeks. At the end of that time the hams are cleaned with a brush or a dry, rough cloth, and rubbed with clean hickory ashes, then smoked.

When Your Throat is Sore



It may be only a slight cold now—just a tickling in the throat.

But little colds soon grow large and dangerous. Often they become chronic, develop catarrh and end in consumption.

Catarrhozone is the remedy. It draws inflammation and sores out of the throat. Relieves the cough, cuts out the phlegm, makes breathing easy, kills any germs lodged in the mucous lining of the throat or lungs.

DUTIES OF FOREST RANGERS

WASHINGTON, NOV. 4.—One of the duties of Uncle Sam's forest rangers is to kill "varmints" that destroy cattle, sheep and other domestic animals in the Western States, where bears, mountain lions, coyotes, wolves, wildcats and lynxes are plentiful, the annual damage from wild beasts running into millions. Last year forest rangers killed 7,971 destructive animals. The reports just out show that 213 bears, 88 mountain lions, 172 wolves, 69 wolf pups, 6,487 coyotes, 870 wildcats and 72 lynxes fell before the rangers' guns.

In addition to their efforts after animals that are harmful to live stock and to game animals and birds, forest officers have made headway against the prairie dog, which eats 1-32 as much as a sheep. The biological survey estimates that one grown wolf will destroy about $1,000 worth of stock a year, and that the average family of wolves will get at least $3,000 worth. The stock killed by wolves is principally cattle. Calves and yearlings are generally selected by them for slaughter, but if these cannot be readily had, cows, and even full grown steers, are killed.

An old cattleman who was giving his experience to some forest rangers told of seeing a family of wolves tear flesh from a year-old steer as he ran bellowing across an open field.

MEN ON FOOT NEW TO THEM

"I was walking," said the cattleman, "when I came upon the wolves after the steer. I yelled to frighten them. The sound of my voice made every one of them, nine in all, stop and look. They did not know what to make of me, as they were used to seeing men on horseback, but not on foot. They quit the steer and came towards me. At first I wanted to run, but soon realised that they intended no harm. When about three hundred yards from me they separated into two gangs and passed to my right and left and went on about their business. The poor steer was almost dead from fright and the loss of blood. His hindquarters were badly torn."

It is said by stockmen that wolves in Wyoming kill from 10 to 20 per cent of the annual increase of the herds. In some sections of Montana they are just as bad.

"The problem of the extermination of predatory animals," said John A. Rhodes, a guard of the forest service, "is one that calls for determined and persistent labor along lines that are practical at the hands of men who are accustomed to the country, thoroughly understand the habits of the wild animals and are familiar with the means of their extermination.

"When hunters are employed, the use of poison as a means of extermination stands first. Its advantage lies in the ease and rapidity with which it can be handled. Where the labor of a half a dozen men would be required in setting and watching a line of traps, one man could easily cover the same country with poison. The greater the number of baits the greater the chances for killing.

"For bait fresh rabbit meat is the best, but if this is not to be had boiled ham, fresh liver, mutton or beef tallow, bacon or quail are fair substitutes. The quail, if broiled, and the breast meat used, is also equal to the rabbit. Never poison anything containing a bone. Never touch the bait with the hands or any part of the body.

HOW TO PREPARE AND SET BAIT

"Strychnine is the best poison. Ordinarily, as much as can be held upon the point of a large blade of a pocket knife will prove fatal to any animal. This quantity should be put in the centre of a cigarette paper, the sides of which must be gathered together around the poison and the ends securely tied, forming a capsule. Dip the capsule in a can of melted mutton or beef tallow, using wooden tweezers to handle it with, and hold it there until it is well coated and then drop into a long necked bottle. When the bottle is well filled with capsules you cork it tight so that the contents will not be exposed to harm or house odors.

"Each of the poisoned capsules is put in a piece of meat, which, in turn, is dropped into a fruit jar and shut up tight. Every precaution must be taken not to touch the meat with anything that will leave an odor. Always drop the bait from a horse, leaving it in some place where coyotes or wolves cross or travel.

"Never dismount, but take particular note of the position of each bait. Deposit the baits in the afternoon and gather them up in the morning. Do not leave them out all day!"

The government employes claim that hunters who kill wild animals for the bounty do not exterminate for the reason that they do not want to "kill the goose that lays the golden egg." They destroy male wolves and coyotes, but protect the females.

The professional hunter or trapper is tricky. Two brothers made a small fortune operating in different States. One lived in Arizona, where wolves are abundant, and the other in Wisconsin, where sheep are plentiful and bounties high. The man in Arizona shipped scalps to the one in Wisconsin, who in turn collected a bounty for each one from the county allotted for the entire programme, he was followed by M. V. Richards, land agent of the Southern Railway.

"Mr. Barrett's speech," said Mr. Richards, "is like the excuse made by the general agent of a railway in Georgia, who was called before the board of directors to explain why the road was threatened with bankruptcy.

"'Gentlemen,' said the agent, 'our railway runs through a country which is rich in natural resources. There's nothing the matter with the road, gentlemen except that is has absolutely no terminal facilities.'"

FOR THE TOILET

An easy way to make a good cold cream is to stand a jar in hot water and put in the following: Half an ounce each of white wax and spermaceti; add four ounces of oil of sweet almonds; stir until all is dissolved, then add two ounces of rose, orange-flower or lavender water, and beat briskly until cool.

Lavender water is one of the most refreshing and delightful of toilet waters made by the following recipe: Two ounces oil of lavender, one ounce essence of musk, half ounce each of oil of bergamot, and essence of ambergris, deodorised rectified spirits, two quarts. Stir briskly until thoroughly well mixed.

Almond paste is one of the best and simplest of cold creams, and is made by the following formula: Two ounces of oil of almonds, one ounce of white wax; melt together and add ten drops of attar of roses. Beat together until cold.

Almond meal, corn meal and oatmeal will agree with some skins better than soap, and will both clean and soften. Soap is apt to cause the skin to chap as soon as cold weather comes.

THE DEATH SENTENCE

Representative Swager Sherley of Kentucky was talking about his amendment to strengthen the Pure Food and Drug Bill.

"We must make our laws against impure food and drugs impregnable," he said, "or a national state of ill-health will be ours as certainly as—as certainly as——

"It reminds me of a story about a Louisville maid servant who said one day to her mistress: 'Might I have next Friday a week off, ma'am?'

"'You'll get your usual Thursday,' the mistress objected; 'but of course if it's important'—

"'My fiance is to be buried, ma'am, next Friday a week and I want to go to the funeral.'

"'Your fiance is to be buried? Why, I didn't know you had a fiance, let alone that he was dead.'

"'He ain't dead, ma'am.'

"'Not dead? Then of course you can't be sure he is going to die, no matter how ill he may be. None of us know when we are going to die.'

"'Excuse me, ma'am,' said the maid, 'Jim's going to be hung.'"—Washington correspondence, New York World.

NAILS IN HARD WOOD

It will be found almost impossible to drive thin steel nails into hard wood, for the moment you hit them hard enough to puncture the wood they bend over on themselves.

Many people use a small gimlet to bore the hole destined to hold the nail and few people know that if yellow soap is rubbed on the nail it can be driven in the hardest wood with ease.

This was learned by a carpenter, who discovered it accidentally.

Now whenever he is working with hard wood he keeps a cake of soap near by and sticks it full of nails, using them as he needs them.

He also has a deep hole cut in the handle of his favorite hammer and keeps it filled with soap, in which to stick the nails if the cake of soap is not conveniently near.

WASH-DAY RULES

Borax water will restore the gloss to sateen in washing.

Fine ginghams and percales will emerge from the tub with the gloss and dressing of the new material if dipped in sweet milk instead of starch.

Ink stains are sometimes removed by soaking in sour milk and then rinsing in a weak solution of chloride of lime.

Try removing mildew by soaking in a weak solution of chloride of lime, then rinsing in cold water.

To erase all traces of scorch stains wet the scorched place, rub with soap and bleach in the sun.

Use warm water to sprinkle starched clothes and the effect will be twice as satisfactory.

To remove stains of blood soak them in cold salt water, then wash in warm soap water and finish by boiling.

Grass stains may be eradicated by saturating the stain with kerosene, then putting the garment in the wash tub.

Iron rust stains yield to the following treatment: Soak the stain in lemon juice, sprinkle with salt and bleach several hours in the sun.

PILES Do not suffer another day from Itching, Bleeding, or Protruding Piles. No surgical operation required. THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—What is it that the Tiny Tads are gazing that way at?
It's like a castle, oh, so high! and like a frog so fat!

2—"It is a French Chatoad," they say, and then they turn around,
Because a big black animal comes swooping toward the ground.

3—It is a big black Mareoplane, who terrifies them so
That one of them falls off a cliff into a stream below.

4—The Mareoplane gives one loud shriek of glee and boundless joy;
He gloats to see the accident which he has caused the boy.

5—The other Tads jump on a Toboggander passing by,
"Quick, take us to the bottom of the precipice!" they cry.

6—They find their little comrade quite unhurt beneath a tree
"A Precipitacoalian preacher rescued me," says he.

BUILD GREAT DAM FOR MESOPOTAMIA

Huge Enterprise Seeks to Irrigate a 600,000-Acre Desert and Make It Worth $190,000,000

Sir William Willcocks, who, in the interests of the Turkish Government, has spent about three years surveying in Mesopotamia, has discovered, he thinks, the locality of the Garden of Eden, namely, in the district between Babylon and Bagdad. In the time of our first parents this region must have been a fertile paradise, but now, like many other places, it has seen better days—in fact, it is almost a desert. But that does not suit the purpose of the Turkish Government, which has opened up an era of reform, and it is going to do for Mesopotamia what the Anglo-Egyptian Government has already done for the country of the lower Nile. The late Sir John Aird was the contractor who built the great dam at Assuan, so as to suffuse the arid regions around with the fertilizing waters of the Nile; and Sir John Jackson is the man who is to perform corresponding feats on the Euphrates, under a job-contract, which will run into something like $100,000,000. Already, what soldiers call an "advance party," of about 2,000 men, is engaged in rough preliminary work—laying out the camp, so to speak, and the executive staff of the enterprise is now being selected by Sir John Jackson, assisted by his first-in-command of the constructive army of Mesopotamia. This is Mr. Arthur Noel Whitley, another Yorkshireman, who has just reached London from South America, where he was second-in-command of another great Jackson enterprise—the construction of a railroad 300 miles long, across the Andes, from Arica, in Chili, to La Paz, the capital of Bolivia. Having thus veriously exercised his genius, Mr. Arthur Whitley is now about to address himself to what his friends are sure will prove his masterpiece. He is going to put the spade in at Hidia, the Assuan of the Euphrates; but that will only be one of the three great barrages on this ancient river and the Tigris. At first a district of 600,000 acres will be irrigated, at a cost of $7,250,000, after which the value of the land now practically nil, will then be at least $50,000,000. When entirely irrigated, Sir William Willcocks, its surveyor, estimates that his Garden of Eden will have acquired a value of $190,000,000

"BEING IN LOVE"

A Psychologist May Give Valuable Information on the Subject

Just as a patient goes to a specialist to ascertain the exact nature of his illness, so may a man or a woman go to a psychologist at the present day to find out whether he or she is "in love." For the state of "being in love" may now be located and its development ascertained as easily as a case of phthisis or rheumatical gout.

"Am I truly in love? Is my affection likely to be lasting?" a young lover may ask. And the psychologist, after a few pointed questions, can tell just how strong and enduring are the young man's feelings toward his beloved. These interesting possibilities arise from a lecture given by Dr. Wil-

Mr. Brown on "Emotions and Morals" at King's College. Some passages from the lecture were as follows: "A sentiment is a system of emotional disposition centred about the idea of some object. Falling in love is a crystallization of a whole set of emotional tendencies and ideas round about the object. One cannot call love an emotion because it involves a whole series of emotions. There are only two main sentiments—love and hate."

In an interview Dr. Brown enlarged on the subject of love looked at from the psychologist's point of view.:

"When a person 'falls in love,' a nucleus of ideas and emotions forms in the brain," he said. "These emotions all centre around the object of affection. In time, if the state of love continues, these ideas become solidified and grow in strength. They become more and more compact, as it were. If the state of love is very strong it is possible that the whole mind is attracted and merged in the central idea. In such cases sudden reversions may occur, and the state of 'being in love' may be suddenly abandoned. This is what happens when a man is suddenly converted to religion, or even unaccountably changes his politics."

This theory is of immense interest, as it practically explains the reason why lovers have jilted one another through the ages.

"The emotions of the human being are innumerable," continued Dr. Brown. "They correspond to the chemical elements. There are seven primary emotions—anger, fear, curiosity, disgust, pride, humility and tenderness. From these spring innumerable emotions, which it is the work of the psychologist to classify."

ADORED A WAX FIGURE

Remarkable Story of a Man in Love Who Finally Went Mad

A ramarkable story of how a man, having lost the girl he wanted to marry, kept up the illusion that he had married her, is reported from Buda Pest.

Michael Kilossy, a property owner in Kleinpest, had for several years been in love with Malwine Marmorstein, the daughter of a merchant noted for her beauty. Her parents were not in favor of the match, as they considered Kilossy to be very strange in his ways. Later, a bookkeeper named Gaspar came on the scene, fell in love with Malwine Marmorstein, and married her. Kilossy now took rooms near the Gaspars, and, after a few months, he seemed to have got over his disappointment. He spent the greater part of the day in his rooms, into which no stranger save his landlady ever entered. After a while Kilossy began to receive boxes and packages from Paris. These he opened himself, carefully concealing the contents from his landlady. The latter, in tidying up the rooms, occasionally came across articles of women's clothing, and one day when Kilossy was in another part of the house, she peeped into the room in which he spent most of his time, and saw Frau Gaspar sitting on a sofa. She ordered the woman to leave the house at once, threatening to inform her husband. At this point Kilossy appeared on the scene and began to laugh. He pointed to the supposed Frau Gaspar. "That is a wax figure," he said, "but tell no one what you have seen, otherwise I will shoot myself." The landlady promised. Kilossy explained that when he made the acquaintance of Malwine Marmorstein she gave him her photograph, from which he ordered a wax figure made. The story goes that he made love to the wax figure for a year, and when the real Frau Gaspar became a mother Kilossy ordered the figure of a child from Paris.

Recently Kilossy had a nervous breakdown, and showed signs of madness. A few days ago he began to rave and was taken to an asylum.

A Tax on Cats.

Of the many German municipalities which have long threatened to levy a tax on cats, Munich is first to carry the threat into effect. The revenue of Bavaria's capital will be augumented by five marks annualy upon each cat within the walls of the city. In future poor puss must wear a collar with a meal check and number, similar to those worn by dogs, or she will fall a prey to specially-organized cat-catchers. The new measure, it is stated, is in defence of singing birds, and also in the interest of hygiene and the citizen's nocturnal repose.

FAMOUS TIGER SLAYER DEAD

Ruler of Cooch Behar Passed Away in England—Sketch of His Remarkable Career.

Famous both as ruler and sportsman, the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, who had been ill for some time, died at Bexhill. He came to England for the Coronation, and, owing to illness which overtook him in July, he did not return to India. Kidney and heart troubles were the cause of his death.

The Maharajah, who was forty-nine years of age, succeeded to the rule of a State in Northern Bengal, about the size of Cornwall, when he was only ten months old. He was one of the first Indian rulers to embrace the freedom of the West, and was as popular in this country as in his native land. He and the Maharanee paid many visits to England, their two beautiful daughters have been prominent figures in English society, and all their four sons were educated at Eton.

As a sportsman he was world-famous. He shot enough tigers and rhinoceroses to stock a dozen museums, his horses won most of the classic races in India, and as a polo, billiard, tennis, and racquets player he had few equals.

He was also an excellent dancer, and the ball which he gave to stars of the stage at Prince's Restaurant in 1908 was a proof of his devotion to the art.

In 1897-8 he served in the Tirah Expedition, and was present at the actions of Dargai and Samana. He held the rank of colonel in the British Army. His rule was enlightened and progressive, and his philanthropy gained him many friends.

He is succeeded by his son, Prince Raja Rajendra, who used to play polo at Hurlingham.

THE KING'S POSTMEN

A Useful and Interesting Branch of the Diplomatic Service.

The announcement that His Majesty King George proposes to reduce the number of King's Messengers calls attention to one of the most useful and interesting brancesh in the diplomatic service. There are really two classes of King's Messengers: home messengers, men employed in carrying important despatches from the King to his Ministers, or vice versa, when they are in different parts of the country; and the King's foreign-service messengers, entrusted with the important duty of carrying letters from one Ambassador to another, or from one Power to another. There are eight of the later, of whom the senior receives $2,000 a year, the annual salaries of his colleagues being $1250.

An appointment as a King's messenger is only obtained through powerful influence. The men appointed are of great resource and intelligence, a very necessary qualification being that they should be good linguists.

Thrilling Adventures.

The messengers are termed "Silver Greyhound," because their badge of office consists of a silver greyhound, surmounted by an imperial crown, attached to a red ribon. The badge is always carried by a King's messenger, but the semi-military uniform, which is part of his epuipment, is seldom used excepting in war times, and then only in circumstances when it becomes part of his passport from one country to another.

Story writers have often woven thrilling narratives around the duties of a "Silver Greyhound," and many exciting tales have been told of unscrupulous plotters who have endeavoured to obtain the contents of their despatch-cases. At times such stories have been founded on fact; for it may be recalled how the despatches in connection with the Dreyfus affair, sent by the German Ambassador at Paris to Berlin by imperial messenger were surreptitiously opened during the trip from Paris to the German frontier. It will thus be realised that the career of the bearer of the King's despatches is not, even in these prosaic days, altogether without an element of excitement.

And Trivial Tasks.

At the same time, however, the messengers are employed occasionally upon very trivial errands, and there is a story that a gentleman on board a steamer one day observed that a messenger, whom he knew, was not guarding his bag with the extreme vigilance which tradition prescribed. He suggested that there was some risk of the bag being tampered with, and received the light-hearted reply: "Well, the thief would only get the Ambassador's boots, which I am taking home to be mended."

King Edward kept his secret postmen very busy, for he was continually travelling about Europe, and the messengers' services were required almost every day for the purpose of carrying despatches between His Majesty and the Cabinet. King George, however, is not fond of travelling, and the consequence is that the foreign-service messengers have had a somewhat idle time. It is for this reason that it is proposed to reduce the number of messengers who, during the lifetime of King Edward, were employed to carry despatches between London and Biarritz, the Riviera, or Marienbad, where His Majesty so frequently stayed.

GHOST CONFESSES

The Police Solve the Mystery of a Haunted Farm

It was ten o'clock at night and Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Uttoxeter, were having supper when they were startled by hearing strange noises, and presently boots and bottles came falling down the stairs, thrown by some invisible hand. Their supper thus rudely disturbed, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson rushed upstairs to find the place in a state of wild confusion. The bedroom had been completely ransacked, mattresses had been carried from one room to another, ornaments had disappeared, and the place was in a condition of chaos.

Convinced some intruder was on the premises, Mr. Wilson called several farm hands, and the premises were systematically searched, but without result. Much perplexed, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson retired to rest, but scarcely had they extinguished the light when all sorts of pranks were commenced by what seemed to be a supernatural visitant. A table was spirited out of the room, all sorts of articles flew in through the door, and when Mr. Wilson got up to investigate he was assaulted by bottles and other missiles. Uncanny noises were heard in different parts of the house, but a search again proved unavailing. This was only the beginning of a series of remarkable incidents during the following days. Mrs. Wilson while at work was made a target for all sorts of missiles, knives, forks, and bottles being hurled at her from an invisible source with great force. On several occasions the knives just missed her head and were deeply embedded in the doors. Twenty-seven window panes were smashed by flying stones. Neighbors who were summoned to the house by the terrified occupants were greeted with such scant courtesy that they had to retire. A constable who watched the house one night saw a light extinguished in a room which it was said he knew to be absolutely empty.

Then came the denouement. Rigorous police investigations were set on foot, and as the result it was announced that a girl, aged fourteen, employed at the farm, has confessed that she is the mysterious spook who has been playing these dangerous tricks. How she managed to deceive the household is a mystery. It transpired that several years ago she had sunstroke, and has always been peculiar in her manner since.

STAGE SUPERSTITIONS

A Manager Does Not Like to Hear an Employe Whistle

To whistle in a theatre is a sign of the worst luck in the world, and there is no offence for which a manager will scold an employe more quickly. Vaudeville performers believe it is bad luck to change the costumes in which they have achieved success. Old actors believe the witches' song in "Macbeth" to possess the uncanny power of casting evil spells, and the majority of them strongly dislike to play in the piece. Hum the tune in the hearing of an old actor, and the chances are you will lose his friendship.

"Actors," says T. Sharper Knowlson, "will not repeat the last lines of a play at rehearsals, nor will they go on the stage where there is a picture of an ostrich if they can avoid it. Let them try the handle of a wrong door when seeking the manager of a theatre or the offices of an agent, and they regard it as an omen of failure. The looping of a drop curtain, the upsetting of a make-up box, are the certain forerunners of evil, just as certain shades of yellow in a tie, or vest, or hat are thought to exert an injurious influence.

"Even the orchestra leader would not allow a musician to play a yellow clarionet; everything would go wrong if he did. Faults of memory are also attributed by an actor to the costume he may be wearing. Certain wigs bring luck, and some actors will wear one even though the part does not need one."

WHEN A MAN IS "DOWN"

Difficulties Which Beset the Path of an Ex-Convict

How difficult it is for an ex-convict to get honest employment was illustrated at Marylebone Police Court, when a man who had served a term of imprisonment applied to Mr. Paul Taylor for assistance. The applicant has an invalid wife and five children under fifteen years of age, four of whom are in a Roman Catholic home. He had tried to get work, but had failed. In the meantime, the applicant added, he and his wife had pawned almost everything they possessed, with the result that they had a load of pawntickets, and he had nothing staring him in the face but to plunge into crime again. Mr. Paul Taylor referred him to Mr. Alfred Kirby, the missionary, to see what could be done for him, adding that he preferred to assist old convicts rather than young ones, as they often had less chance in life.

The little town of Barmen, in the valley of the Wupper, one would think, holds the record for the number of religious bodies into which the population is devided. The 4,350 inhabitants form seventeen religious sects. These include the Free Evangelists, the Old Lutherans, the Christian Union, the Evangelical Union, Baptists, Irvingites, Darbyites, the Adventists, the Nazerenes, and Mormons.

WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

Here's the Proof

For two or three years my hair had been falling out and getting quite thin, until the top of my head was entirely bald. About four months ago I commenced using Sage and Sulphur. The first bottle seemed to do some good and I kept using it regularly, until now I have used four bottles. The whole top of my head is now fairly covered with hair and it keeps coming in thicker. I shall keep on using it a while longer, as I notice a constant improvement.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Nov. 8.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Nov. 4 were 1360 cattle, 1250 sheep and lambs, 2300 hogs and 500 calves.

The offerings on the market this morning were 1200 cattle, 1350 sheep and lambs, 2300 hogs and 500 calves. Owing to the increased offerings of cattle, of which the bulk were only of medium quality, a weaker feeling developed in the market, and prices show a decline of 5c to 10c per 100 pounds.

At this reduction the demand was fairly active from both packers and butchers, and a fair trade was done, only a few being left over unsold. Choice steers sold at 5¾c; good at $5.50 to $5.60, fairly good at $5.25 to $5.40; fair at $4.90 to $5.10, and the lower grades at from $4 to $4.75 per 100 pounds. Cows brought from $3.25 to $5, and bulls from $3 to $5 per 100 pounds.

A weaker feeling prevailed in the market for lambs, and prices declined 15c to 25c per 100 pounds, which was due to the increased supply and the quieter demand, as buyers in most cases filled their wants earlier in the week, and sales were made at $5 to $5.35 per 100 pounds.

There was no change in sheep, the offerings being small, and sales were made at $4 to $4.75 per 100 pounds.

The market for calves was also weaker, with sales at from $3 to $10 each, as to size and quality.

The market for hogs was weaker, and prices ruled 25c to 40c per 100 pounds lower than on Monday, on account of the increased supply offered, and sales of selected lots were made at $6 to $6.25 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars, and some were delivered on contracts made earlier in the week, at $6.50.

Hebert Trial Begins.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Preliminary proceedings in the trial of the famous Hebert marriage case began yesterday morning with the evidence of Mrs. Hebert. She declared that she had been a Roman Catholic at the time of her marriage to Mr. Hebert, that she had been married before a Protestant minister and that she had been prevented from appearing in the case by the fear that Hebert would deprive her of their child in the event of a trial and that he had also offered her a sum of money to let the action go by default.

This evidence was given under the objections of Messrs. Cousins and Wainwright and motion will be made to-day to have certain portions of it struck out as illegal.

Argument in the case will take place next Monday morning when Mr. Eugene Hebert will be represented by J. E. Godin, K.C., and Aime Geoffrion, K.C., and L. J. Lefebvre. Dame Marie Emma Clouature will be represented by G. V. Cousins, and Wainwright, with A. J. Lovat as counsel.

It is expected that a great legal battle will commence to-day that will only end in the Privy Council.

Masked Robbers.

Ogdensburg, N.Y., Nov. 9.—Three masked men with drawn revolvers walked into the office of the Ogdensburg Coal & Towing Co. here yesterday and demanded that the clerks hand over the money in the safe. The money, amounting to several hundred dollars, was produced with considerable celerity and the robbers fled with it.

Two of them succeeded in getting away after a long chase by officers, during which several shots were exchanged as the men fled through the woods and escaped by fording the Oswegatchie River, with the water up to their waists. The coming of darkness made further pursuit impossible.

The third bandit, who fled in another direction, was captured while he was trying to get across the Canadian border.

Most of the stolen money was recovered.

Aerial Corps For Canada.

Ottawa, Nov. 9.—Hon. Sam Hughes is evidently determined to add an aerial corps to the strength of the Canadian militia. Not satisfied with the results of the recent investigations at Atlantic City of the experiments, by the United States army, the Minister of Militia now proposes to send Canadian officers to England to study the progress which has been made by the War Office in the art of military operations in the air, and upon their report will depend the decision as to form which Canada's new corps shall take.

Free Trade Greatest Enemy.

London, Nov. 9.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Addressing the Tariff Reform League, Lord Duncannon said the league's special enemy was free trade, which recently had very heavily been reinforced. Its fighting fund alone exceeded the entire annual income of the tariff league.

Henry Chaplin said to abandon food taxes meant in his judgment the abandonment of the colonial preference. How could they reconcile themselves in such a course after the remarkable manifestations of Canada's opinion?

Stabbed Policeman With Pin.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Emphasising her objection to arrest with a vigorous jab of a hatpin, Aldina Fagan gave Constable Trudeau a serious wound in the early hours of the morning when he insisted that she accompany him from the corner of Mansfield and Lagauchetiere streets to No. 6 police station. Loitering was the charge upon which the arrest was made, and the prisoner, struggling when the constable was obliged to use strenuous measures, finally succeeded in freeing her right hand, with which she promptly extracted the pin from her hat and drove the feminine weapon with all her strength into the policeman's back. The steel snapped and half the pin remained imbedded in the officer's flesh.

Jury Worth $50,000,000.

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Seldom in the history of this city has so much wealth been represented as was in the County Detention Hospital, where many of Chicago's richest citizens had been called by Judge Owen to sit as jurors in insanity cases.

All traffic in Wood street, which passes the Detention Hospital, was stopped while the "$50,000,000 jury," as it was called, was in session. More costly automobiles than are ordinarily seen at one time west of the river were drawn up in front of the curb.

Incorrigible.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 9.—Joseph Piccarelli, aged 17, who was given suspended sentence two weeks ago for stealing knives from the Ontario Silver Co., was yesterday sentenced to six months in the Central for the theft of an umbrella.

Increased Price of Milk.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 9.—The Wholesale and Retail Milk Dealers' Association yesterday announced an increase in the price of milk from eight cents to nine cents a quart.

TAG DAY REMINDERS

Authorized Collectors Will be Distinguished by Official Badge on the Arm

TO VISIT SCHOOLS

Everything is ready for the Tag Day campaign of the Children's Aid Society on Saturday, and it is hoped that there will be a liberal response from the public to this most deserving effort to secure funds for a most deserving movement.

Some information may be given for the benefit of the citizens generally. In the first place it should be distinctly understood that no one has any authority to sell tags except the duly authorized girls who will be distinguished by the official badge on their arm. Last year a number of small boys took advantage of the opportunity afforded them by the campaign to go into the tag business on their own account and a number of citizens contributed, believing that the money would go to the funds of the society. The girls will work in pairs on Saturday, one girl selling the tags and the other looking after the cash receptacle, a tin box bearing the initials of the Society, "C. A. S." Every tag will have the official seal of the society, illustrated by the accompanying cut.

To-morrow afternoon a committee will visit the schools of the city and will sell special buttons to the children. Parents are reminded of this visit and are asked to see that their little ones take a contribution to school with them to-morrow afternoon. Surely the work of looking after the needs of neglected children will appeal with peculiar force to parents who are interested in making their own children happy.

REVOLUTIONARY ARMY ADVANCING ON PEKIN AND CAPITAL EXPECTS SIEGE

Absolute Anarchy Reigns in Many Parts of the Country ---Two Generals Are Beheaded by Their Own Troops ---Panic and Bloodshed are Imminent in Pekin---Foreigners Are Filling Cellars With Rice and Other Provisions.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

PEKIN, NOV. 9.—Fu Chow and Canton are the latest big cities to fall into the hands of the revolutionists. They practically control the whole province of Hu Nan, but are quarrelling among themselves and conditions border on absolute anarchy. Two of the most prominent Republican generals here became jealous of each other's authority and their soldiers cut both their heads off to settle the matter between them. The present dictator is a scholar, not a soldier, and has ordered all women and children and foreigners to leave the cities and hide in the country.

PEKIN, CHINA, NOV. 9.—There is great excitement in this city, caused by the rumours of the approaching revolutionary troops. Permanent residents and foreigners, who cannot get away, are storing their houses and cellars full of rice and other provisions, expecting a long siege. Panic and bloodshed with the city are imminent. Foreign legations here are amply protected by their own troops, but legation officials see nothing to it, but the overthrow of the Manchu dynasty.

GIRLS CHASED BY TWO MYSTERIOUS STRANGERS

To be pursued from the corner of Murray and George streets to their home on the Chemong road, by a pair of suspicious looking men, was the unpleasant experience last night of two well-known local young ladies, whose names are withheld by request.

They are unable to give an accurate description of the men, but say that they were between twenty-five and thirty years of age, one of medium height and the other slightly below the average stature. The girls were on their way home at 10.30 o'clock when the men attempted a flirtation and on being repulsed started out in pursuit of the two young ladies, who ran across Central Park. The men refused to be shaken off and joined in the chase. By the time Reid street was reached, and there was no sign of pursuit coming to an end, the girls had grown thoroughly frightened. They rang the door-bell of a house to seek assistance, but their appeal brought no answer and they had to continue the flight with the men still in pursuit. Finally however, when nearly home, the cries of the girls attracted the attention of a number of men, who came to the rescue and the culprits, judging discretion to be the better part of valour, decamped before the rescuers arrived. The girls state that the men called to them to stop and that one pulled a bright-looking object that might have been a revolver, from his pocket.

BUFFALO PARTY HOLIDAYING ON KAWARTHA LAKES

The party of Buffalo sportsmen with Dr. Clarence at the head, who annually visit the Kawartha Lakes district, on a hunting expedition, have arrived, and left yesterday on the steamer "Stoney Lake," which, as usual, they have chartered. They will spend the next ten days on Stoney Lake, Deer Bay, and other sections of the Kawartha group, living on board the steamer, which has been equipped for their accommodation, with Capt. Scollard in charge of the arrangements, and Robert Pimmett as chef. The Buffalo party should have an enjoyable outing.

THE LIFE OF GENERAL BOOTH

The Young People's Guild of Knox Church has arranged a very interesting programme for its next meeting on Monday evening next. Ensign Merritt of the Salvation Army will be present and will give an address upon "The Life and Work of General Booth." He will bring with him the songsters from the Salvation Army Temple, who will give a number of selections. The songsters number between 20 and 25, and their offerings should be very enjoyable. The meeting is open to the general public.

STORM HAS ABATED

Special to The Examiner.

KINGSTON, NOV. 9.— The storm, which had been raging for two days, has abated, permitting the fleets of vessels driven in here, to get away at sun up this morning. Grain moving here suffered severely from delay. The elevators were filled to overflowing and many vessels from Fort William were due and overdue.

To Acquire Property

MONTREAL, NOV 9.—It was stated on good authority this morning that the Canadian Northern will acquire property in Montreal, which will enable it to run from the mouth of the proposed tunnel through Mt. Royal, down to the Grand Trunk station crossing at St. James' and Craig streets, two of the main thoroughfares of the City, on elevated tracks.

TROUBLE LOCATED

The refractory sewer in the basement of the market building met its Waterloo this morning. For the past three days this sewer has received the undivided attention of all the local plumbers, as well as the Fire Department and the Board of Works, but their attempt to locate the trouble was unsuccessful. This morning a new arrival, whose name is not to hand, speared on the scene, and after a few hours' work, succeeded in locating the trouble, which consisted of a blockade in the pipe. Following the location and remedying of the trouble the pipe was flushed out by the Fire Department on the instruction of Ald. Morgan, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee, and this afternoon was treated to a solution consisting of fifteen pounds of washing soda and boiling water. Mr. William Stabler, who has charge of the work, reports that everything is running merrily now.

Fire Hall Notes

An engine test was held this afternoon on Aylmer street. The water was taken from the creek near Brock street and deposited back therein. P. C. McGinty was on hand to warn the crowd to keep back a safe distance, as should a hose burst or by some means become disconnected, the effects on nearby spectators would be disastrous.

Fireman Denne is on the sick list these days.

A NEW RECORD

Tuesday was Mr. D. Brown's busy day. He is working at the Poultry department of Flawelles Ltd., and on Tuesday made a new record, plucking 440 birds, for which he received the sum of $12, which is a pretty good day's pay. Mr Brown worked a couple of hours overtime. The usual number of birds to be plucked by any one person is from 150 to 200. He was timed and plucked a bird in 35 seconds, which is "going some."

EXAMINER'S NEW STORY

"The Avenger" By E. Phillips Oppenheim Will Commence in Saturday's Issue of This Paper

A SPLENDID ROMANCE

One of the best serial stories ever published by the Examiner, will be commenced in the Saturday edition of this paper in "The Avenger," one of Mr. E. Phillips Oppenheim's best romances. Mr. Oppenheim's work needs no introduction to the readers of contemporaneous fiction. His stories are noted for the logical nature of the plot, their liveliness of action, their wonderful character portrayal, and their vivid style and the Examiner has no hesitation in claiming that "The Avenger" will be pronounced as in every way up to the standard of this famous author's earlier books. It is one of those stories which increases in interest as the plot is revealed and the reader's zest never flags. There will be a generous instalment in the Saturday edition of the Examiner. Do not fail to read the first or in fact, any of the issues containing this splendid story.

HUGH KELLY, K.C. TO BE A JUDGE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

TORONTO, NOV. 9.—Hugh Kelly, K.C., this morning confirmed the rumour that he had accepted the High Court Judgeship of Ontario, succeeding Mr. Justice McMahon. Kelly is a Roman Catholic, partner of Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney General of Ontario.

Causing Comment

TORONTO, NOV 9.—The action of Mr Justice Latchford, in denouncing and dismissing the Grand Jury at Cobourg, because they declined to have the assistance of the Prosecuting Attorney, is causing considerable comment, all over the Province this morning, and the rights and privileges of the Grand Jury may be enquired into by the Attorney-General's Department.

LEGAL ASPECT OF THE QUESTION OF ABOLITION OF BILINGUAL SCHOOLS

The Share of the Responsibility of the Dominion Government is Pointed Out---Some Interesting Information About Question Over Which There is So Much Agitation at the Present Time.

(Toronto Star)

The question is raised whether it is practicable to abolish the use of French altogether in the junior grades of the French schools. The French population of Ontario is now estimated to be a quarter of a million strong. With them French is the universal language. The children start to school at about the age of five years, knowing no word of English. Can they be taught without some use of the French language. This is the question that must be answered when the abolition of bilingualism is under discussion.

But there is a much more practical question at hand. And that is: Are they to be taught English at all? The man who does not want them to be taught English, the man who does not want English to be the language of Ontario says:

"Why, it will take three of the child's seven school years to teach him English. You will rob him of three-sevenths of his school life."

English a Necessary Equipment.

He does not listen to any argument to the effect that at that age the child's mind is particularly receptive to language teaching, that indeed, in the opinion of many authorities, a child up to the age of eight years or more should be taught nothing else than language, and that even if it did take three years for the child to learn English, he would then, at the age of eight, have the equipment which is absolutely requisite to enable him to take his place in the citizenship of this Province.

But the man who does not want the French-Canadian children in Ontario taught English is apparently the man the Ontario Government has been heeding. As shown yesterday, according to the French Education Association of Ontario, the masses of French-Canadian children in Ontario leave school without even that knowledge of English which will enable them to pursue their studies any further.

That is the way the Ontario Government is making English the language of Ontario. At present there is good reason to believe that the "masses of French children" in the Province are not being taught English at all. How long is that condition to continue?

Bourassa's Consent Necessary.

Is there to be a campaign to abolish entirely bilingual schools in Ontario? If so, it may be of interest to know that probably before any such thing can be accomplished, it may be necessary to secure the consent of the Federal Government, which means, among others, Messrs. Monk, Pelletier, and Nantel, in other words of Messrs. Bourassa and Lavergne. It may seem like an absurd proposition to say that the consent of Mr. Bourassa will have to be obtained before bilingual schools can be abolished from Ontario. But that is what will surely follow if the argument put forth by some exponents of bilingualism, an argument based on the educational regulations of the Ontario Government for the year 1911, is sound. Here is the argument:

Sub-sec. 8 of section 82 of the Public Schools' Act of the Province of Ontario says:

"It shall be the duty of every teacher to . . . use the English language in instruction and in all communications with the pupils in regard to discipline and the management of the school, except where it is impracticable to do so by reason of the pupil not understanding English, but recitations requiring the use of a text book may be conducted in the language of the text book."

Further, section 15 of the Public School regulations of Ontario for 1911, says:

"In school sections where the French, or German, language prevails, the Trustees may, in addition to the course of study prescribed for Public Schools, require instruction to be given in reading, grammar, and composition to such pupils as are directed by their parents orguardians, to study either of these languages, and in all such cases the authorized text books in French or German shall be used."

The teaching of French then is today recognized by the laws of Ontario. Now, supposing it was proposed to make a change. In that event the British North America Act might be appealed to. Sub-Sec. 3 of Sec. 93 of that Act provides as follows:

"Where in any Province a system of Separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union, or is thereafter established by the legislature of the Province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General-in-Council from any act or decision of any Provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education."

Used in Manitoba Case.

Sub-sec. 4 of the same section still more clearly defines the Federal House over education in the Provinces. Under this section the Dominion Government acted in 1896 in Manitoba. The section reads as follows:

"In case any such Provincial law as from time to time seems to the Governor-General-in-Council requisite for the due execution of the provision of this section is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor-General-in-Council from any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper Provincial authority in that behalf, then and in every such case and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the Parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor-General-in-Council under this section."

The claim is accordingly made that were the Ontario Government to decide to abolish bilingual schools in the Province, those ratepayers whose rights, previously guaranteed by the Province were affected, would have the privilege of appeal to the Federal Government, and should the Provincial Government refuse or neglect to act on the decision of the Federal House, the jurisdiction of that House would supersede the jurisdiction of the Province.

Use of French in Canada.

While we are on the subject of the legal aspects of the case it may be as well to set forth one other argument that would no doubt be pressed, in case the abolition of bilingualism came to a show down.

Section 133 (of the British North America Act guarantees the use of both English and French in all parts of the Dominion in the following terms:

"Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Houses of Parliament of Canada and of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those Houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this act."

Now, argue some legal authorities, it follows that the use of French in any court in Ontario is just as legal as the use of English. And they add, were the teaching of French declared to be illegal, that would be tantamount to taking away the constitutional use of that language.

Others, however, argue that section 133 of the B. N. A. Act refers only to the Dominion Parliament and the courts created by it, and has no bearing at all on the question of teaching French in the schools.

In this case the legal champions of bilingualism would fall back, as explained above, on an appeal to the Federal Government, where the influence of Mr. Bourassa would be expected to stand them in good stead.

Small Fire On George Street

A small column of smoke, that savoured of an overheated chimney, a large crowd of spectators and lots of excitement, was witnessed on George street a few minutes after eleven o'clock today. A portion of the Fire Department was out at the time flushing out the refractory sewer at the market square when somebody raised the cry of fire. Chief Howard at once turned in an alarm, which was quickly responded to, and with the aid of a 30-foot ladder and a chemical or two the fire was easily extinguished. It originated from a chimney above the Royal threatre.

Opening Of Parliament

Special Wire to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, NOV. 9.—So many people have already applied for tickets for the opening of the twelfth parliament of Canada, next Thursday, that it is officially announced that no more tickets will be issued. The advent of the Royal Governor-General makes the event a big one, as a society affair, and all Ottawa people, together with hundreds from other parts of Canada, gathered for the festivities, are agog with excitement over the grand function.

CHANGE NEEDED

Local Trades and Labour Council Wants to See Better System of Inspection of Industries

AN EIGHT-HOUR DAY

One of the best meetings the Trades Council of Peterborough has yet held took place last night in the Knights of Pythias hall, Simcoe street. The meeting endorsed the platform of principles laid down by the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, at Calgary, in September last. Some of the principles are as follows:

Free compulsory education.

Legal working day of eight hours, and six days to a week.

Government inspection of all industries.

The abolition of the contract system on all public works.

A minimum living wage, based on local conditions.

Public ownership of all franchises such as railways, telegraphs, telephones, water-works, lighting, etc.

Tax reform, by lessening taxation on industry and increasing it on land values.

Abolition of child labour by children under fourteen years of age; and of female labour in all branches of industrial life, such as mines, workshops, factories, etc.

Abolition of property qualification for all public offices.

These are a few of the principles laid down at Calgary and which will be followed by union men at the coming campaign.

The main question taken up last night was the government inspection of all industries. It was claimed that the inspection of factories and workshops should be more thoroughly looked into, and if this were done less accidents would take place. As one member put it: "There is no use in sending a man out to inspect machinery, who has been selling ribbon in a dry goods store all his life."

All unions and trades councils in Canada are on the alert at the present time.

CHILDREN INJURED

Ordinary Cathartics and Pills and Harsh Physic Cause Distressing Complaints.

You cannot be over-careful in the selection of medicine for children. Only the very gentlest bowel medicine should ever be given, except in emergency cases. Ordinary pills, cathartics and purgatives are apt to do more harm than good. They may cause griping, nausea and other distressing after-effects that are frequently health-destroying.

We personally recommend and guarantee Rexall Orderlies as the safest and most dependable remedy, which we know, for constipation and associate bowel disorders. We have such absolute faith in the virtues of this remedy that we sell it on our guarantee of money back in every instance where it fails to give entire satisfaction, and we urge all in need of such medicine to try it at our risk.

Rexall Orderlies are eaten just like candy, are particularly prompt and agreeable in action, may be taken at any time, day or night; do not cause diarrhoea, nausea, griping, excessive looseness, or other undesirable effects. They have a very mild but positive action upon the organs with which they come in contact, apparently acting as a regulative tonic upon the relaxed muscular coat of the bowel, thus overcoming weakness and aiding to restore the bowels to more vigorous and healthy activity.

Rexall Orderlies commonly completely relieve constipation, except of course when of a surgical character. They also tend to overcome the necessity of constantly taking laxatives to keep the bowels in normal condition. Three sizes of packages, 10 cents, 25 cents, and 50 cents. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store—The Rexall store—McDermid and Jury, druggists.

MINSTREL SHOW

It is understood that a minstrel show will be given by the Belmont Club, under the direction of Mr. Holly Sheppard, Bay City, Mich., on February 15th and 16th. It will be remembered that the Belmont minstrel show last year was a huge success. Mr. Sheppard is a practical minstrel man, and with such material as the Belmont Club can furnish, it is assured that the show this season will be better than ever.

ELKO CLUB DANCE

A very enjoyable dance was held under the auspices of the Elko Club in their club-rooms, last evening, when some thirty couples were in attendance. Delightful music was provided by Mr. E. J. Devey and the light fantastic was tripped until an early hour. The event was one of the most enjoyable informal affairs of the season.

LABOUR INTERESTS.

In another column appears a report of the proceedings at a large and successful meeting of the Peterborough Trades and Labour Council. The important business done was the endorsation by the local council of the main points of the platform of principles laid down by the Trades and Labour Congress at Calgary last September, there can be little quarrel with the chief planks of the platform adopted.

"Free compulsory education" seems to be a good and practical object of attainment. Compulsory attendance at school is needed—the present truant law is not efficient in securing to every child the advantage of school education. We have "free education" now, and it only remains to make its acceptance obligatory upon parents. We might as well also, have free school books. The Whitney government boasts of its cheap school books. They are only cheap because the people pay for the chief expense of publication and the government might, on the same principle, go still further, and make school books free altogether.

"Legal working day of eight hours" is in line with the modern tendency of employment conditions; but it will meet with considerable opposition from interested quarters as do all popular reforms.

"Government inspection of all industries" is a good card. We have a sort of inspection now, but there is urgent necessity of making this inspection mean something. An inspector should be a straight, fearless man, familiar with machinery and shop conditions. It would be just as reasonable to appoint a man who could not read, as inspector of schools, as to appoint a man who is not thoroughly familiar with machinery and shop conditions, a factory inspector.

"Abolition of child labour" is a superfluous plank in this, that it would be as unnecessary as the fifth wheel to a coach if compulsory education would keep children in school till fourteen years of age.

"Tax reform, by taxation on industry and increasing it on land values" at a coming reform. But it does not seem reasonable to expect it from the present provincial government, which refuses even to allow the people a voice in saying whether they want it or not .The people—the tax-payers—are concerned; local taxation is their business, and it is not much of a radical idea to permit them to say themselves what they want—to apply the principles of self government to their own domestic affairs.

The other planks of the Labour Council platform are reasonable subjects of discussion and will bear discussion; but they are not so immediately practicable, in the way of attainment—do not stand so immediate a chance of adoption as some of the other planks. But their time and turn will come; and perhaps the best way is to advance one step at a time. Success in this will be this gain, that the labour interests will convince those in authority that they are in the fight to win and one success will make the next step easier.

THE NAVAL QUESTION.

An article republished on this page, from the Ottawa Journal, has two or three significant features. In the firts place, it advocates, and thereby endorses, the naval policy inaugurated and practically established, by the Laurier government. The Journal is Conservative, but like many other patriotic and loyal Canadians, demands what is best in both imperial and Canadian interests.

In the second place, the Journal's attitude is a condemnation of Hon. Mr. Borden's volte face, at least of his neutrality, on so important a matter as Canada's share of contribution to her own and imperial defence. Mr. Borden's attitude of silence and delay becomes more significant when it is remembered that he now stands still in face of his former position, of urging greater speed. In 1909, in the House, when a resolution was unanimously adopted in favour of organizing a Canadian navy, Mr. Borden said that they were going too slowly, and he urged that the resolution be amended by adding the word "speedy" before "organization." The word "speedy" was added at Mr. Borden's suggestion, and the resolution, as amended, was unanimously adopted. In conformity with this spirit that at the time filled Mr. Borden's breast, the Naval bill was introduced by the Laurier government, and became law, and is now law. The beginnings of a navy were made with "speed" and we see now how Mr. Borden "speeds the navy" by his silence on the subject.

In the third place, the Journal condemns the proposal to give further surcease to "speedy" action in the matter of a navy, by opposing a reference of a settled matter, a reference to reconsideration, to turn back the hands of the clock, to revise by a popular vote, what Parliament, by a large majority, acting upon an unanimous resolution of the House, enacted as a law, establishing a Canadian navy and providing for its construction in Canada and — in conformity with a demand of Mr. Borden himself —"of Canadian materials, with our own men and of our own resources." The reference of the matter of a navy decided upon by the people's representatives, is a backward step, and a distinct negation of the responsibility of parliamentary representation The people elected their representatives to do their national business, they have done it in the matter of the navy, and now it is proposed, in quarters, to which Mr. Borden has shown great deference, to subunit the navy to a plebiscite. This proposal is as un-British as the spirit behind it. Parliament assumed the responsibility of as great issues as the navy; it enacted Confederation without an appeal to the people, it built the Canadian Pacific and is building the Grand Trunk Pacific, without a referendum, and it is competent, and in fact is charged with, the responsibility of dealing with the naval question, in continuation of what it has already decided upon. Sir John Macdonald is authority that should be sufficient to Conservatives as well as other Canadians. In combatting the proposal to refer confederation to the people by the modified form of referendum,a general election, he must set forth his ideas of the responsibility of parliament. He said:

"A new parliament can do nothing more than we can do. If we represent the people of Canada, then in the words of the Constitutional Act, "we are here to pass laws for best welfare and good government of the country." If we do not represent the people of Canada we have no right to be here. But if we do represent them, we have a right to go to the foot of the throne and declare that we believe it to be for the best welfare and good government of the people of Canada to form these provinces into one Empire."

Referring the naval law, which parliament has placed on our statute book by a reference of a settled matter, to the people, would be un-British, and to make parliament a mere mouthpiece, instead of a supreme, constitutionally independent, self-sufficient legislature.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hon. A. G. MacKay, late Liberal leader, has been nominated for North Grey.

Mr. N. W. Rowell, the new Liberal leader, will probably be offered the candidature of North Oxford.

Hon. Frank Cochrane has been formally re-elected by acclamation for Nipissing, and according to the Toronto Telegram, can go to sleep again.

Mr. Rodolphe Forget is a representative of monopolistic interests, and talks accordingly. He was elected for two seats and says he intends to hold on to both.

Ambition for office has some good points. An Indiana, U. S., man, a candidate for school trustee, publicly pledges himself, if elected, to refrain from getting drunk during his office.

The Halifax Chronicle points out that a 3 per cent. majority in more than a million votes gave Mr. Borden a 22 per cent. majority in the House of Commons; and two-thirds of the electoral majority came from Tory term of office.

The County of Middlesex, says the London Advertiser, has given these Premiers to the country. Edward Blake, Ontario; George W. Ross, Ontario; Walter Scott, Saskatchewan; Arthur Sifton, Alberta. The next Premier of Ontario was also born in Middlesex.

The Conservatives, some of them, say that the portfolio of Finance Minister, was given Mr. White, a Liberal, as a recognition of the assistance the Liberals gave in electing Mr. Borden.

Prominent Conservative Journal Endorses Liberal Naval Policy

(Ottawa Journal, (Conservative)

A recent article in the Journal, stating arguments in favour of a Canadian navy, has failed to appeal to the Montreal Star, which has evolved a magnificent scheme to present Dreadnoughts to England with English money. This is not a joke. Listen to the Star:

"Surely the common sense course is to get our Canadian Dreadnoughts built now when they are needed, in the British shipyards, which build for the world; and to borrow the money for the same in the London money-market, where it is plentiful, and only tax our local finances, which already have ten calls upon every dollar, with the interest on the investment. We will save over three millions a year at a critical period in our development."

As an argument against a Canadian navy, the foregoing has logic beaten to a frazzle. If to borrow money is necessary to build ships to give away, why not borrow money to build ships to keep ourselves? But Canada needs to do neither. The Dominion had a surplus of current revenues last year of $30,000,000. This surplus was used in the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway, but that work will be completed within a couple of years, and the revenue freed. Canada can magnificently afford to do anything worth while she chooses. The Star talks of "ten calls on every dollar." This is gammon. Canada has the largest proportionate surplus of revenue over normal expenditure of any country in the world. And the people feel no hardship from the method or amount of the taxation which produces the surplus—do not, indeed, realize the taxation at all. Under such circumstances, to talk of "ten calls on every dollar" as a plea for such a country as this to dodge a fair share in the support of the Union Jack at a time when the people of small England are paying ten times as much per head as we are for naval expense is pitiful enough.

• • •

And this is not all. Let us examine the Star's idea further. The initial cost of ships is but a part of naval expense. Maintenance is also costly. The Montreal Star would borrow English money to present ships to England, as a Canadian national contribution to the Empire, and let England pay to keep the ships going. Magnificent, truly. Imagine for instance, a man who, wanting the permanent advantage of a motor car, goes to a friend to say, "A motor car is desirable in our joint interests. Lend me $2,000. I will buy a car, which you can use too. I will pay you 5 per cent. interest, namely $100 a year. And you will keep up the car." This genial gentleman proposes to get for $100 a year a great convenience which will cost his friend $1,000 to $2,000 a year to keep going. Such is the Montreal Star's scheme then for Canada, as a great Imperial shack, to borrow English money to build ships useful to Canada and let England pay the running expenses of the ships. Whew!

So far as can be judged from surface straws, the policy of the Borden Government seems likely to be to consult the Imperial authorities as to what the latter would best like Canada to do. We doubt if in that case the Imperial Government would ask for either money or ships. If either were to be invited, why—we suppose Canada might as well let it go at that. But meanwhile, we venture to think that common sense and Imperial interest are alike on the side of Canadian naval effort.

• • •

The Montreal Star's objection to a Canadian navy is that to develop something useful would take time. So would a gift of Dreadnoughts. A Dreadnought takes two or three years to reach fighting trim. A Dreadnought costs ten million dollars. Two Dreadnoughts would cost twenty millions, and not be available for years. If the Imperial authorities want them, all right. But if such a gift is to interfere with a continuous Canadian home naval policy, our idea is unshakeable that the same twenty millions put into a Canadian naval start would soon prove to be a much better thing for the British Empire. "Build ships in England," cries the Star. "Canada can't do it!" Why not? Spain has imported British shipbuilding works to renew her navy. Why not Canada? How long would it take Vickers, Maxim or Armstrong-Whitworth to establish complete work in Canada Argentina and Chile and other countries build warships in England, proclaims the Star. Yes—but at least they get the ships.

• • •

For a little time Canada might have to have some ships built in England. But we could soon be able to have them built here—and just as well as in England, if for no other reason than that we will have the great English works establishing branches in this country.

• • •

A Canadian navy means Canadian money spent in Canada. Is the Montreal Star opposed to that?

A Candian navy means the establishment of ship-building works and docks in Canadian cities. Is the Montreal Star opposed to that?

A Canadian navy means a great addition of skilled workmen to the Canadian people. Does the Montreal Star dislike that much?

A Canadian navy means a stronger patriotic and imperial sentiment here in naval respects, a greater disposition on the part of Canadians to enter naval service, whether as officers or as seamen. Does the Montreal Star think that deplorable?

A Canadian navy means a responsibility established by ourselves which must be maintained as our other national responsibilities are maintained — and which will be maintained as these others are, honourably, sensibly and efficiently—a more reliable, more respectable and in the end likely to be a more effective thing than any paying of naval tribute or subsidy or presentation of ships (same thing) to any other country, even our Mother Country.

A Canadian navy means a deliberate, continuous, increasing power on the sea, available to Britain at any instant throughout the future, as contrasted with a mere gift of Dreadnoughts, which at any juncture would mean merely a spurt for a moment, then a lapse of years, until some new international fuss loomed up; then another spurt—but spurt of good intentions only, for Dreadnoughts take years to build, and any particular row is likely to be history before aid which Canada would suddenly decide to offer to Britain could be transmuted into ships.

Unless it was decided as a principle to make a gift of a Dreadnought or two to Britain every year from Canada, the gift idea would be less than Canada ought to do, and would be such a hap-hazard business as to mean little to England, which would have to formulate its annual naval programme without attempting to rely upon Canadian spurts, which might not materialize in any particular year. And if, on the contrary, it were planned by any Canadian government as a matter of principle, to make a gift of a ten million dollar ship to England every year, getting no value in Canada for the money, how long would this country stand it? The thing would make the very name of the empire as a red rag to a bull to a great many people in this country who would become reconciled to expenditure upon a navy of our own.

A Canadian naval force can be built up in complete co-operation with the imperial authorities, prepared and handled with a view to the best advantage of the British navy, and of the empire as a whole. The point is for us to keep out of unnecessary political and domestic entanglements by not paying money or doing things about which our own people would have no further say, and about which our British kin might—to our minds—make mistakes. The success of the British Empire, in its colonial relations for a century, has been the success of autonomy. A hundred years of history have shown that where Canadian development has proceeded under the principle of Canadian freedom of action and self-effort, the political effect has been only to strengthen the imperial bond; but that where British supervision or British diplomacy has intervened actively in Canadian responsibilities there have generally been complaints here, rightly or wrongly ,with injury to the warmth of pro-British feeling. We doubt if any naval policy save that of Canadian home effort would show any different ultimate result.

On this principle, the Nationalists beat the Liberal Borden "boost" three times over.

All in one sentence, the London Free Press, (Conservative), declares the platform of Mr. Rowell, Liberal leader, a "milk-and-water manifesto." and that it is an "imitation" of the Whitney policy. Unfortunately, the Ontario Government's policy, and its application are not as harmless as milk and water.

THE TWO POLICIES.

(Toronto Star.)

The Mail and Empire finds that the new Liberal programme refers to things which the Whitney Government has already done or thought about. This is quite likely. It would be strange if in the field of Provincial matters there were not some questions upon which Sir James Whitney and Mr. Rowell agreed, or partly agreed. It would be strange if the two leaders had not been thinking about certain Provincial subjects.

But there are some very important points where there is disagreement, where Mr. Rowell takes ground that Sir James Whitney has neglected or refused to take. For instance, there is assessment reform. Sir James Whitney sees in every movement for reform the ghost of Henry George and the hand of the single-taxer. He has refused even to let any municipality amend it. The Liberal platform would give liberty to municipalities to exempt improvements from taxation But while it allows liberty, it is not neutral. It declares explicitly that "social justice demands the removal of existing inequalities in taxation."

Sir James Whitney has definitely refused to repeal the provision requiring a three-fifths majority for local prohibition of the liquor traffic. Mr. Rowell is equally definite in his declaration for the adoption of prohibition by a simple majority.

On Tuesday the Mail and Empire said that the Ontario Government intended to appoint a commission to administer liquor licenses and take the matter out of politics. It was, therefore, obvious that Mr. Rowell was attempting to insert as a plank in his platform something which the Government intended to do. Sir James Whitney now says emphatically that the Government intends to do nothing of the kind.

Sir James Whitney has by action, if not by word, refused to introduce civil service reform and to abolish spoils and partonage. Ontario, which ought to be in the van of progress, lags behind the Dominion in this respect. The Liberal Government at Ottawa appointed a Civil Service Commission, and introduced civil service reform in the inside service. Mr. Borden promises to extend the system Sir James Whitney does nothing. Mr. Rowell comes out definitely for merit as against patronage.

Mr. Rowell proposes that the model schools which the Whitney Government abolished shall be restored. Not only so, but he proposes "to provide through adequate training schools a sufficient supply of competent teachers, and thus insure under proper regulations that the pupils in every school in the Province shall receive a thorough English education." This is the key to the solution of the difficulties connected with bilingual schools.

Mr. Rowell would forbid corporations to contribute to campaign funds, require the publication of all campaign contributions, and provide for the appointment of a public prosecutor, to investigate and punish fraud and corruption. No such proposals are made by Sir James Whitney.

But there are differences, not only in policies, but in the spirit and energy with which they are conceived and carried out. The Whitney Government proposes to do something for New Ontario; and on the eve of an election it promises to create a new judicial district for the North. But it has been administering the North for several years, and the result is general discontent. Deputation after deputation has come to Toronto at great expense and gone home disheartened. Mr. Carrick, a progressive supporter of the Whitney Government, became discouraged by the rebuffs he received, resigned his seat in the Legislature, and went to Ottawa. Mr. Rowell and the Liberals bring to the consideration of this subject a keen appreciation of the needs of New Ontario. They regard New Ontario as an opportunity, not as a burden.

Mr. Rowell comes out with a clear cut declaration for compensation to workmen, after the British model. This declaration surely does not lose its importance merely because the Whitney government is inquiring into the question of compensation. Again, in regard to agriculture, there is a vigour and enthusiasm in Mr. Rowell's utterances which contrasts strongly with the languid, indifferent attitude of the Government. The Liberal programme reads as if it had more steam, more driving power, behind it than the manifesto of the Government.

THE HUPMOBILE

excels in power, speed, silence and simplicity over every other car at a similar price. Note the clean cut appearance of its unit power plant—here surely is a bit of master designing.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

AN ALL STAR TEAM OF PETERBORO' OLD BOYS LOOKS GOOD ON PAPER

Here is a beautiful dream. If all the Peterborough old boys, who are playing the game in other cities, could be got together, there would be a nucleus of a team that would require some beating. How would this do for a back division:

Full Back—Harry Smith of the Argonauts.

Centre Half—Ben Simpson, Hamilton Tigers.

Right Half—Frank Hefferman, Ottawa College.

Quarter—Pete Campbell, Varsity. Some rear guard, eh?

For the scrimmage, Harry Rogers of McGill; Ken Overend, the ex-Queen's scrimmage and Matthews of Royal Military College might be considered. One side of the wing could be filled in with Ross Craig of the Hamilton Alerts at inside wing, Frank Hickey of St. Michael's College at middle wing, and Hal Kennedy of the T.A.A.C. at outside. While the other side could be looked after by Frank Burnham, Bill Crowley and Jack Crough, who are playing with Western Canada teams.

BEN SIMPSON INDUCED TO HELP THE TIGERS

Peterborough Veteran Will Play Part of Saturday's Game at Montreal in Order to Qualify for the Canadian Finals if the Jungle Terrors Ever Get That Far.

HAMILTON, NOV. 8.—A week ago it looked as though the Tigers would have trouble in mustering a back division for the balance of the season. Kid Smith had a broken collar bone, Tommy Stinson was sick, and Oliver was in no condition to go through a hard battle. The Tigers pulled through in good shape against the Argos on Saturday, and just by way of being ready in case of emergency, both Ben Simpson and Art Moore turned out for practice last night, and will play in at least part of the game at Montreal, so as to qualify for the finals if Tigers reach that far. Moore showed all of his old-time speed and dodging last night, while Ben kicked just as well as if he had been in practice all season. Both Simpson and Moore are in fairly good condition, for they stood last night's hard practice without showing the least sign of tiring, and they will be about ready to go the route by Saturday if it is necessary. Oliver is not in the best of shape and is still limping. He may play in part of the game at Montreal, but with plenty of men on the reserve list, it is not likely that he will be worked hard.

The presence of Simpson and Moore on the back division should be a great benefit to the younger players. It will give them all kinds of confidence, and the nervousness which has been noticeable on several occasions will not likely be noticeable again. With Simpson to aid in the kicking, McNeilly, who has done such grand work with his boot in the recent games, will not be worked over time, and then Hope Gibson, the hero of Saturday's sensational finish, can also be called upon at any time. Moore should start many a dangerous run, for, with speedy youngsters like McKelvey, McNeilly and Oliver to back him up, there is no reason why some fast combination plays should not be pulled off. If Tigers are in a three-cornered tie with Argos and Ottawa, it means that a great deal will depend on the backs, as the wings will have their work cut out in handling the huskies on the line. There is more speed on the Tiger back division than on any other in the big four and if that speed is properly used it will beat Ottawa, Argos or any other team.

CHURCH HOCKEY LEAGUE ELECTS ITS OFFICERS

No Individual Church Will Have a Team This Winter But the Race Will be Between Clubs Representative of the Different Religious Denominations---Amendments Were Adopted.

An important change was made in the constitution of the Church Hockey League at a meeting held last night in the Y.M.C.A. at which preparations for the coming season were made. Henceforth the teams in the league will be representative of the different denominations in the city and not of the individual churches as has been the case in the past. The four teams will be Anglicans, Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians. The following officers were elected:

Hon. President— Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

Hon. Vice-Pres.—Mr. E. N. McWilliams.

President—Jack Pilling.

Vice-President—T. B. Moffatt.

Secretary-Treasurer—L. H. Ingram.

Executive—President Pilling, Secretary Ingram and one representative from each club in the series.

When the question of an amendment to the constitution was brought up, it was moved by T. B. Moffatt, seconded by N. Barrie that the League this season consist of teams from the four denominations, Anglican, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist. Another amendment that was carried was that a player to be eligible to play in any league game must be a member of a church, Sunday school or church club of the denomination which his team represents on or before December 1st of the current year.

The fifteen players' certificates allowed to each club must be signed and handed to the secretary of the league two days before the date of playing the first game.

The secretary was given authority to make arrangements for the use of a rink for the League for the season.

RUGBY

Peterborough, with representatives on the Varsity, Ottawa and McGill Inter-collegiate teams, Tigers and Argonauts, Inter-provincial clubs, and St. Michael's College and Hamilton Alerts, senior O.R.F.U. teams, could not produce a junior team capable of winning its own district. Can you beat it?

POST CARD COLUMN

HIGHER CRITICISM.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—When one accepts the Darwinian hypothesis of evolution and his theory of monkey-born men, he must at once reject God's record of the creation of man in His own image, as found in that seed plot of revelation—the Book of Genesis. Mr. Editor, allow me to give your many readers a confession and personal testimony of a scholar, in reference to his experience with Highet Criticism? Prof. J. J. Reeves of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas, writing to "The Fundamentals," says: "The purpose of this article is to state in a very brief way the influences which led me to accept certain views of the Higher Criticism, and after further consideration, to reject them.....I saw that the whole movement, with its conclusions, was the result of the adoption of the hypothesis of evolution. My professors had accepted this view and were thoroughly convinced of its correctness as a working hypothesis.....But more consideration convinced me that the little truth in it served to sugar-coat and give plausibility to some deadly errors that lurked within. That this theory of evolution underlies, and is, the inspiration of the Higher Criticism, goes without saying....As it is transparently clear that the Bible, on the face of it does not correspond to it. To do this they must deny point blank the claims and statements of most of the Bible writers.....A preacher, who has thoroughly imbibed these beliefs has no proper place in an evangelical Christian pulpit.....If these views should ultimately prevail Christianity will be set aside for what is known as the new religion, which is no religion, but a philosophy."

Mr. Editor, the above testimony of a scholar against the pernicious teaching of so-called Higher Criticism is well worth passing on to your many thousand intelligent readers. Thank heaven, the critics have not got that monopoly of scholarship which they so loudly boast of.

Yours truly,
John Carlisle.

Badly Crushed Between Cars

In coupling cars near the roundhouse yesterday morning on the G. T. R., Mr. "Teddy" Armsden was crushed between a tender and a car, which he was in the act of coupling.

The accident was caused by the injured man inserting a block of wood in the draw head, which reports say, was out of repair. On the meeting of the trains the impact was so great as to crush the wood, thereby permitting the trains to close in on the unfortunate man, crushing him severely about the hips and lower part of the body.

The injured man was taken to the Ross Memorial Hospital in a carriage where Dr. Jeffers made an examination of the sufferer, who is in much agony.

The surgeon was unable to find any bones broken, but presumes that internal injuries may be in evidence which, if so, will develop in a few days.—Warder.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THERE is a certain subject on which I have often thought with no satisfactory results. I bring it up to-day in the hope that some of my readers may have chanced to consider the matter with more success.

The subject is "wearing people."

I suppose you know the kind of people I mean—those well meaning, often extremely kind hearted, sometimes highly interesting and entertaining folks, who, despite all their good qualities, somehow seem to wear upon you and tire and inspire you with a sense of relief at their departure.

A girl wrote me about one of those people—a relative of hers. "My cousin is a wonderful bright girl and keeps us laughing all the time she is here; and yet somehow after she is gone, I always feel less strained and tired."

We sometimes have a specimen of this class in our home. She is the most kind hearted and well intentioned person possible. She does everything in her power for us and yet we are all worn out if she stays more than a week or two.

Now, what I want to know and can't seem to think out is this—first what is it that makes wearing people wearing and hard to live with, when they try so hard to please, and secondly, how can they get over it, or can't they?

Is it something that can be cured or is it some incurable misfort une like freckles, sandy eyebrows or a pug nose that simply has to be endured.

I am especially keen on this topic just now because a wearing person who—contrary to most of her species— actually realizes that she is wearing, has applied to me for aid.

I've thought it all out," she says "and I've decided that I am what people call 'wearing.' Now, can't you tell me just what I do that makes me tire and fret people so, for truly I don't mean to. And can't you please show me some way to get over it? I'd do anything on earth."

Now what am I going to tell this poor lady?

It seems to me that the thing that makes wearing people wearing is, that they are keyed up all the time and that they have a tendency to screw everyone with whom they come into contact up to the same tense key, and thus tire them out.

Wherefore I should say that the only possible cure would be to try to unscrew themselves—if that can be done.

I am afraid that this is entirely inadequate advice.

Corrections, contributions and suggestions solicited.

Ruth Cameron

HAVE SENT HOME A LARGE SUBSCRIPTION

Despite reports to the contrary, it has been learned from good authority that the Italians of this city have been taking the Italian-Turko war news reporting Italian reverses with a grain of salt, so to speak. They are not inclined, as a body, to place much credence on the reports concerning the atrocities of the Italian troops, and furthermore, they do not consider for a moment the possibility of being called home to fight.

Mr. Minnicola, in conversation with the Examiner this morning, said that the Italians of this city have already sent home a substantial subscription. He does not think there will be any need for calling on further reserves, as they have about as many in the field now as they can handle strategically. Mr. Minnicolo also referred to the despatches concerning the recent Italian atrocities as being unfounded.. Later reports went to show that the Italian troops were compelled to turn the guns on the city, as they were hemmed in by two fires, the infantry in front and the fire from the houses in the rear. As a result several hundred women and children were killed.

RAILROAD NEWS

As "Daddy" Haskill ,the conductor of the Grand Trunk flyer does not appear to improve materially in health, he was taken to his home in Toronto this morning by his wife and brother.

The boarding up of the round house, which was damaged some time since by a baggage car, has now been completed. It was not thought necessary to insert any windows.

Mrs. Charles Mitchell, wife of Roadmaster Mitchell, is in the city to-day and will attend the funeral of the late Mrs. John Sandy to-morrow.

Rule Inspector Conductor Hodgson, of Lindsay, is in charge of the G.T.R. flyer and Conductor Jobbitt has returned to the Lakefield train.

DISCHARGED A RIFLE

Yesterday morning at the police court a man was charged with discharging a rifle within the Corporation, namely at the foot of Ridout street. Mr. L. V. O'Connor appeared for the accused. He pleaded guilty, saying that the accused was coming down the river in a boat. He saw some one enter a certain house in that section and dicharged his rifle. The man decamped, and has not been heard of since. In view of the circumstances of the case, the Magistrate took a lenient view and imposed a fine of $1.00 and costs, the costs being $3.45. —Warder

TO LECTURE HERE

The first of the series of the Normal School lectures will be held in the assembly hall to-morrow evening (Friday) at 8 o'clock. Mr. Gordon Craig, of Toronto, will give a recital on Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice." All lectures are free to the public.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

GOING AHEAD RAPIDLY

From information received from official sources it is evident that Prince Rupert, the Pacific Coast Terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, is going ahead rapidly.

Work is being pushed on the water works system, the cost of which is estimated at $550,000. $100,000 of which will be spent during 1911.

The city is also spending the sum of $500,000.00 this year on the sewerage system, and $500,000.00 on rock cutting, and the grading of the streets. Last year $100,000. was spent on the water works system, $50,000 on the sewerage system, $500,000 on grading and $100,000 on plank roads and walks.

Modern Dairy

Milk, cream, butter, cheese, all are very susceptible to contamination. They must be handled with the greatest care to prevent their spoiling. They are easily infected with dangerous germs and the slightest fault robs them of their market value. The first step in purifying our milk supply was the cleansing of the foul and dirty stables and the banishing of hand milking. The stables were soon made modern and up-to-date, and strict laws keep them so. The milking machine came and was pronounced a practical success, removing one of the greatest drudgeries of the farm and making it quite impossible for the milk to become infected during the milking process. This machine will milk four cows at the same time and far quicker than one could be milked by hand. It operates on the suction principle, which is the natural way, and the necessary vacuum is produced by a small motor operating a vacuum pump. Electricity is best for this work because it is the safest power for use around the barns, and it is easily controlled. The turning of a small switch starts or stops the motor-driven vacuum pump.

Very few up-to-date dairies there are nowadays not equipped for electric lights. As cleanliness is an important factor in this business, the small incandescent bulb is especially desirable. It gives a clear, white light, with no dirt, smoke or soot, and does not radiate a great amount of heat as do other forms of artificial illumination. This last item is an important one, as the dairy must be cool to prevent the milk and cream from souring.

The electric current for power purposes is fast being adopted in modern dairies. The refrigerator plant, the churn for making butter, the bottle washer, are all operated with the aid of the electic motor.—Philadelphia Record.

Every Spoonful of Grape-Nuts FOOD

Gives strength to "do things" and a clear brain to do them intelligently.

Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast is the healthy habit of many and many a man who is "making good."

STRENGTH

Without Overloading the Stomach.

The business man, especially, needs food in the morning that will not overload the stomach, but give mental vigor for the day.

Much depends on the start a man gets each day, as to how he may expect to accomplish the work on hand.

He can't be alert, with a heavy, fried-meat-and-potatoes breakfast requiring a lot of vital energy in digesting it.

A Calif. business man tried to find some food combination that would not overload the stomach in the morning, but that would produce energy.

He writes;

"For years I was unable to find a breakfast food that had nutrition enough to sustain a business man without overloading his stomach, causing indigestion and kindred ailments.

"Being a very busy and also a very nervous man, I decided to give up breakfast altogether. But luckily I was induced to try Grape-Nuts.

"Since that morning I have been a new man; can work without tiring, my head is clear and my nerves strong and steady.

"I find four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with one of sugar and a small quantity of cold milk is delicious for the cereal part of the morning meal, which invigorates me for the day's business." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A Royal Prerogative

An interesting fact has come to light in connection with Mr. Smith, a groom who has lately taken up his residence at Peterborough—namely, that his family have been drawing a pension from the British Government for the space of 276 years.

Mr. Smith, who draws 30 shillings a week, explained in an interview the history of the pension. It appears that after the battle of Worcester an ancestor of Smith assisted Prince Charles to escape and was one of those who helped to hide him in the famous oak tree. Years passed, and it was not till 1675 that King Charles II. was informed of the incident. Parliament, on the advice of the king, was not slow at rewarding those who had rendered service, however slight, to the sovereign. The consequence was that Mr. Smith's ancestor was placed on a perpetual pension list at the rate of 30 shillings a week, with the result that the family have received (in round figures) something like £21,500 since the pension was granted.

Mr. Smith's father, it appears, parted with the pension to another person while he lived, but on his death it reverted again to his eldest son, and in turn it will descend to the present pensioner's eldest son, and so on. It is stated this perpetual pension is the only one of its kind in existence.—London Daily Mail.

Cost Of Navies

A White Paper issued by the admiralty gives in succinct form the latest information as to the naval expenditure of the great powers and its growth in the past decade.

In the following table is shown the total expenditure in pounds sterling in 1902 and 1911, with the increase per cent. in the current year, compared with ten years ago:

	1902	1911	Inc p.c
Gt. Brit'n	31,003,000	44,392,000	43
Germany	10,045,000	22,082,000	119
France	12,185,000	16,705,000	37
Russia	10,446,000	13,270,000	27
Italy	4,840,000	8,380,000	72
Austria	1,955,000	5,152,000	163
U. S.	16,204,000	26,585,000	64
Japan	3,705,000	8,803,000	137
Totals	90,383,000	145,319,000	60

It will be observed that while the German increase is 119 per cent., compared with the 43 per cent. of Great Britain, the actual increase in money in the ten years is £13,389,000 in this country, compared with £11,987,000 in Germany. Notwithstanding the increase in Germany the British expenditure in the current year is still more than double the expenditure on the navy in that country.

It is when we give the bulk of figures for the decade ending with 1911 that some idea is formed of the colossal cost of the navies of the great powers. The following table shows the total expenditure for the ten years, with the cost of new construction, including armaments:

	Expenditures	New Construction
Gt. Brit'n	£352,360,000	£117,973,000
Germany	147,539,000	70,202,000
France	132,139,000	47,286,000
Russia	111,346,000	32,856,000
Italy	60,229,000	16,550,000
Austria	30,814,000	14,833,000
U. S.	230,136,000	73,410,000
Japan	57,701,000	15,281,000
Total	£1,122,264,000	£388,343,000

Thus in the short period of ten years more than $5,600,000,000 has been spent on their navies by eight powers! Of this huge sum no less than 31.4 per cent., or nearly one-third, has been spent by Great Britain.

In regard to the tonnage of the new vessels voted for, the White Paper does not give the returns for the current year except for Great Britain. Excluding 1911-12, therefore, for purposes of comparison, the amount of new construction (i. e., tonnage, when completed, of vessels launched) was as follows in the ten years to 1910-11:

	Tonnage
Great Britain	1,137,018
Germany	624,050
France	338,597
Russia	300,339
Italy	140,676
Austria	130,711
United States	679,389
Japan (five years)	141,840
Total	3,492,620

Of the total tonnage of the decade, Great Britain contributed 32.5 per cent. For 1911-12 the tonnage of Great Britain is 233,820, as compared with Germany's 101,880 in 1910-11, and previous highest British records in the period, viz., 176,582 in 1910-11 and 155,225 in 1903-4.—London correspondence Philadelphia Ledger.

Bombardment Of Tripoli

An English "war-special," landed in Tripoli by an Italian torpedo boat soon after the bombardment, jots down his observations as follows: "As the torpedo boat took us ashore we could note the results of the bombardment upon the Turkish fort at the harbour entrance. This erection is known as the 'Spanish' fort, though, perhaps, more generally spoken of as the 'pink' fort, from the colour of the wash in which it has been distempered. It consists of two bastions, connected by a heavy curtain. The walls and parapets, which were built of rough-hewn stones filled in and thickly faced with clay, rose about thirty feet above the level of the sea. The parapets were of great thickness, and had made an extraordinary resistance to the ten-inch Italian projectiles; but where the shells had hit the beveled edge of the parapet, the splintering of the rock-substance must have been awful, and showers must have swept across the town. Not having witnessed the bombardment, I cannot say if the Italian practice was good or bad. It certainly had nothing to disconcert it. The Pink fort showed many low hits where the heavy projectiles had practically made no impression on the curtain. In the bastions were only three Krupp guns of a type now obsolete, which it is locally said were mounted thirty years ago. None of them had been dismounted by the bombardment. From the hits near the water-line on the curtain it looked as if the Italian gunners had laid their pieces low in order to spare the town from over-ranged projectiles."—New York Evening Post.

TIT-BITS

SPICED APPLE JELLY

Wash and cut in pieces — leaving the core and seeds—one half peck of apples. Boil them until tender in three pints of vinegar and one pint of water to which has been added one ounce of stick cinnamon and one-half ounce of cloves. Strain through cheese cloth. To each pint of juice allow one pound of sugar. Put the juice in a kettle and boil it five minutes; then add the sugar, stir until it dissolves, and boil until a little juice put in a saucer will jelly. This recipe works equally well whether ordinary apples or crab-apples are used.

HOME-MADE CEREALL

Children sometimes tire of the cooked cereals, so, for a change, toast Graham bread in the oven until very dry and brown, then either roll or put through the food-chopper. Eat with sugar and cream. The children like this "cereal" very much.

SWEET CHUTNEY

An excellent East Indian recipe for apple chutney calls for the following ingredients: Fifty large tart green apples, six pounds of light brown sugar, two pounds of raisins, six ounces of green ginger or four ounces of ground, dried ginger, one ounce of garlic — more if you wish a strong flavor—six or eight chilies (hot peppers), two cups of salt and three pints of vinegar. Core and chop the apples. Grind a pound of the garlic, ginger, chilies and salt in a little vinegar. Make a syrup of the sugar and the rest of the vinegar, add the remaining ingredients and boil about thirty minutes. More vinegar may be needed. The chutney should be of good consistency when done. It should be put in wide-mouthed bottles.

RED PEPPERS STUFFED WITH CHEESE

Drain a few canned red peppers and stuff them with nicely seasoned cottage cheese to which a few chopped nuts have been added. Allow to remain in a cool place for half an hour. These red peppers are delicious sliced and served on lettuce leaves.

COOKING MUSHROOMS

A woman who knows the various kinds of mushrooms and the different treatment required by them has a favorite way of cooking the big fresh ones. She removes the stalks and uses them for soups or sauces and takes off the skin. Then she puts the flat tops bottom upward into a slightly buttered pan, and in the cavity left by the stems she puts a tiny bit of butter and a very little finely minced shallot—of the latter she uses a mere trace, not so much as the size of a pea. She covers the pan and cooks the mushrooms in the oven until they are tender. At the last she seasons them with salt and pepper. Salt, she claims, draws out the juices and should never be put on mushrooms until they are ready to be served.

MEN DO WOMEN'S WORK

Among some of the American Indian tribes of the Southwestern United States, says a writer in the November Wide World Magazine, there is a curious custom of men occasionally assuming the work of women as a life occupation. This, when it occurs, is voluntarily undertaken and seems to be due to a preference for feminine labours, the man sinking his identity as far as possible by assuming woman's garb. Pueblo Indians of Zuni, New Mexico, do their share of the regulation woman's work in the household of which they happen to be members—grinding corn, making bread, carrying water, etc.—and deem thoroughly respected. One would be quite deceived by their costumes into supposing them to be women, did not their deep-toned rouge betray their masculinity.—Knickerbocker Press.

COQUELIN MADE THE AUDIENCE WAIT

The architect Binet, who has just died, was a friend of the elder Coquelin. He delighted to speak of a performance of Cyrano de Bergerac in which he went to praise the genial actor in his dressing room, between acts.

I admire you above all" he said to the actor, "in the couplets of the Cadets of Gascony."

At that moment word came to Coquelin that the curtain was rising for the next act.

"Wait! wait!" exclaimed Coquelin. "Leave me here alone with Binet."

"My friend," he said to the architect, "it is with pleasure that I am now going to repeat the passage which has pleased you. For me your approbation is worth more than the plaudits of the whole house."

And while the audience waited he gave anew for Binet alone the Cadets of Gascony.—Cri de Paris.

SEEN AND HEARD

POOR FIDO!

The late Mrs. Sue Landon Vaughan, who originated Memorial Day, had always a great love for humanity and a great contempt for such things as obstructed the free play of humanitarianism.

"Mrs. Vaughan," said a Washington veteran, "regarded lap dogs as obstructions to humanitarianism, and she had no belief in the sincerity of the average society woman's affection for her lap dog. There's a lap dog story she often used to tell.

"A man—so the story runs—came down to breakfast one morning to find his wife in tears.

"'Oh!' she sobbed, 'what shall I do? Poor little Fido is ill, and the dog doctor says his case is serious. Oh, what will become of me if anything happens to my precious little Pomeranian Fido?'

"The man comforted his wife as well as he could, and that evening he came home early in order to administer more comfort to her.

"To his amazement, however, he found her on his return seated at the piano singing one of the gayest airs from 'The Count of Luxembourg.

"'Why,' he stammered, 'why, when I left home this morning Fido was ill and you were heartbroken, while now—now——'

"Strumming gaily, she glanced at him over her shoulder.

"'You see, dear,' she said, 'Mrs. Van Astorbilt called this afternoon, and she told me that Pomeranians are not fashionable any longer. Everything is Pekingese spaniels now. So I dried my eyes and kicked Fido out!'"—Washington Star.

PICKLED CUCUMBERS

Wash and pack into stone jars. Pour over them a hot brine of a cupful of salt to a gallon of water. Pour off this brine every day for a week and return to the cucumbers. Then drain and wash the cucumbers in fresh cold water; return to the jars and pour over them enough hot vinegar to cover the cucumbers well. If very sharp, dilute the vinegar. The pickles are now ready for use, but improve with age.

HAND-MADE LACE

With lace so great a factor in woman's dress, she who is "handy with her needle" will find it a pleasure to make herself some handsome pieces of real hand-run lace.

This is far easier than it sounds. Beautiful "allovers" can be made by tracing the desired pattern on fine net. Put this on the embroidery frame and darn in the pattern, or outline it with the satin stitch known to all embroiderers. The work can be done in white or ecru mercerised cottons; or if you want something very lovely, do it with floss silk.

The design can be worked in any colour you wish; sometimes two or three shades are used on the same piece of lace. Very beautiful effects are produced by working in silver or gold thread on black net. For the yoke of the evening gown this is lovely, and is far less expensive than the kind you buy. The work is fascinating for the woman who has leisure hours to employ in making pretty things.

Collections Of Mirrors

The collector is always on the lookout for a comparatively new field so as to have a chance to buy cheaply and have a large choice.

At present a large proportion of the English feminine world is going to any and all markets, ransacking antique shops, searching aged houses and making excuses to call at village cottages, for the latest fad is collecting old mirrors of English, Spanish, Italian and French design.

The craze commenced because recently at a house party at Powers court, in Ireland, Lady Powerscourt beguiled a dull day by showing the treasures of the house to her feminine guests. The exquisite mirrors, the special pride of Lady Powerscourt, won universal praise.

Powerscourt has long possessed its beautiful mirrors, but it was reserved for the present Lady Powerscourt to unearth them from unused rooms and place them where they could be seen and admired.

The eighteenth century produced the most beautiful mirrors of English handiwork, and Lady Powerscourt is trying to specialize in these. A Queen Anne mirror that she has is a remarkably fine example of that style, with delicate mouldings and traceries, though the general effect is rather severe.

Her specimens of Chippendale's mirrors, on the other hand, are even more than ordinarily ornate. One is square, with heads, scrolls, flowers and leaves interwoven in marvellous fashion. Another is made after the manner of its time, of many separate pieces of glass, to save the expense of a large single sheet. Gilt pilasters, wreaths of flowers and other light decorations conceal the joinings, if they do somewhat detract from the practical use of the mirror.

A good example of the ancient Spanish mirror workmanship hangs on a wall at Powerscourt. It is square in shape and is heavily carved and gilded. At its top are two lion-like beasts bearing a crown between them.

The wholesale making of looking glasses seems to have been first started in Venice, and this city retained the monopoly for many generations. The seventeenth century, however, saw factories started at Paris, Tourneville and Battersea, on the Thames. Experienced Italian workmen were brought over to ensure the success of the factories, which were under government protection.

Then, with the swing of the pendulum, hanging mirrors became rather unfashionable. Oval, round or square glasses were built in over mantelpieces or on doors, and early Victorian taste decreed for them simple frames of plain wood. Back swung the pendulum again, and in came ornate hanging mirrors, and now comes a craze for them as well as for little old pocket mirrors, quaint French hand glasses and, indeed, every conceivable kind of mirror except those that are too young.

Spread this over the steak roll up like a jelly roll and tie securely with twine or tape. Melt a little suet in a frying pan, when very hot brown the outside of the meat. Transfer it to a kettle with a tightly fitting cover. To the fat remaining in the pan add one teaspoonful of flour stir and cook for a moment, then add one pint of canned tomato and stir until boiling and smooth. Add one tablespoonful of chopped onion, one clove, one sprig of parsley, salt and pepper to taste. Pour half of it round the meat in the kettle, cover and cook in a moderate oven or over a slow fire for three hours. Transfer to a hot platter, add the reserved sauce to the amount remaining in the kettle, boil all up once and strain into a boat. Remove the twine before serving.

Great Britain is Playing Fairly With the Powers

ASQUITH AT GUILDHALL

London, Nov. 10.—(Through Reuter's Agency to Ottawa.)—At the Guildhall banquet last night the lord mayor, Sir Thomas Crosby presided, and there was the usual brilliant assemblage of Cabinet Ministers, ambassadors, peers, members of the House of Commons, the Archbishop of Canterbury, bishops, judges, representatives of the navy and army and men prominent in finance and commerce.

Premier Asquith delivered a most important speech, devoted to Imperial and foreign affairs. He opened with a generous tribute to Mr. Balfour, expressing unfeigned and profound regret at the announcement of his resignation, acknowledging the irreparable loss which his withdrawal from constant interchange must involve to the daily life of Parliament. He hoped and believed that there were many chapters of Mr. Balfour's career still to be written by the pen of history. It would be long before there would be seen in the forefront of politics a personality so invaluable to his friends, so formidable to his foes, so interesting and attractive to friends and foes alike—such a unique combination of gifts and powers as made Mr. Balfour by universal consent the most distinguished member of the greatest deliberative assembly in the world.

Turning to Imperial affairs, Mr. Asquith referred to the illustrious, world-wide concourse which celebrated the coronation. He said that the representative of foreign countries then witnessed in Westminster as impressive a demonstration as the annals of nations can afford of the unity of a great state, of the continuity of its history, of the assimilating and incorporating forces which can hold together a world-wide empire by ties of loyalty and liberty.

The day after to-morrow their Majesties start on the first visit which a British sovereign has ever paid to his Indian dominions, and he need not say that over the whole Empire they carry with them the hopes and prayers of all their subjects.

By a happy coincidence, he continued the year of the coronation was marked by the first meeting of the Imperial Conference. For the first time representatives of the great dominions were admitted into full confidence regarding the ends and methods of our foreign policy and, surveyed together the strategic aspects of the Empire. We were able to come to a complete agreement concerning the reciprocal parts we were to take in its naval and military defence.

The proceedings of the conference were marked by a significant advance in the policy of co-operation without centralization, which is growingly recognised to be the best safeguard of our Imperial unity and strength.

At home during the year there had been a succession of troubles between labor and capital, which, in some cases, has led to resort to the barbarous methods of industrial warfare.

He said "barborous" advisedly. He said nothing as to the rights and wrongs of these disputes, except that he believed none of them were incapable of reasonable judgment. The Government had not escaped criticism. He affirmed, however, that the attitude of the state should be an impartial attitude, should be a neutral attitude, but it could not, especially when the interests of others besides the combatants were involved, be an attitude of indifference.

The Government had two clear duties to perform. It must exhaust all opportunities to provide machinery for conciliation, it must maintain order, prevent and punish violence, secure the public against stoppage of supplies and the suspension of indispensable services.

Looking abroad, he said there was much to arouse anxiety. China was in the throes of revolution. It would be rash and improper to hasard an opinion of the outcome, but he was glad to say that so far as foreigners and British subjects were concerned, there seemed no reason to apprehend immediate danger. Ships had been sent to the principal scenes of disturbance, merely for the protection of the British subjects and of other foreigners if they were unprotected.

"We have no disposition to interfere in any way in the national affairs of China," said Mr. Asquith. "We wish her a peaceful and progressive future.

"Nearer home the peace of Europe is unhappily disturbed by the war between Italy and Turkey, in regard to which we have declared and intend to pursue a policy of strict neutrality.

Many have strongly desired that we should make an effort at mediation. None were more anxious than the Government if fit opportunity arose. (Loud applause.)

"It was a satisfaction to turn to the welcome and happy conclusion so honorable to the statesmanship of two great countries of the negotiations regarding Morocco between France and Germany. The settlement was a relief to Europe, for it removed perhaps the greatest obstacle to the smooth working of European diplomacy. "Our own gratification at these happy results is none the less profound and sincere because we had been suspected in irresponsible quarters of looking coldly upon the negotiations and even of a disposition to tamper with their success."

Pugsley Is Cheerful.

Montreal, Nov. 10.—Hon. William Pugsley, ex-Minister of Public Works, reached the city yesterday from Ottawa, where he made a short stay en route home from Atlantic City. He expresses his intention of entering heartily into his Parliamentary duties with the beginning of the session.

"There is lots of good work for the Opposition to do," said Mr. Pugsley.

Speaking of the Transcontinental and the improvements at St. John, which are necessary to enable the road to use Courtney Bay as its Atlantic shipping terminus, Mr. Pugsley said that the new Government had done nothing at all to forward the steps taken by the old. Delay was serious, as the Transcontinental would be ready to use the port within a year

Sir James Whitney Is Very Definite on Tax Exemption

PROMISES SOME REFORM

Toronto, Nov. 10.—Sir James Whitney expressed his views pretty freely yesterday afternoon on the matter of taxation. In answer to a question as to whether he would be willing to say anything regarding the suggested legislation exempting improvements on property from taxation, the Premier replied that he was not averse to making public his ideas on the subject.

"Well, now, the Government is asked to pledge itself to enact legislation to allow municipalities to adopt what is really the Henry George doctrine of levying all taxation on land, or, as its promoters put it, allowine municipalities to exempt from taxation improvements on land. The Government will not pledge itself, and any member of the House who does so will be unwise.

"Now, to come to the merits of the case. For the purpose of illustration, let us assume that a farmer, A, has $5,000. He buys a farm for $4,000, and puts up a house for $1,000. Another man, B, who has $20,000, comes along, pays $4,000 for the adjoining farm, which is of the same value as that of A, and puts up a house which costs him $16,000. The doctrine now advanced is that A and B shall each pay taxes on $4,000. In other words, the poor man has $1,000 exempt from taxation while the rich man avoids payment of taxation on $16,000. I shall not argue this point at all, but will say that when the farmers of Ontario make it clear that they desire the imposition upon themselves of such a rank and manifestly injustice, no Government will stand in their way.

"When you come to cities, towns and villages, the case is not exactly the same as it is in the farm districts. It is, of course, quite unfair that a man should be allowed to hold vacant land for a long time for speculative purposes while its value increases. I am assured by gentlemen of long experience in such matters in several of our cities that as the law now stands it is very difficult by reason of the different schemes of taxation to which it is subject, to hold such land for a length of time without loss to the owner. However, I think some remedy should be thought out and applied, and I am sure some remedy can be found without the hasty adoption of any extreme view.

"It is our practice now to have the assessment law remodeled every four or five years. The Government will, of cours, continue the practice, and have a special assessment committee meet after the close of the session for the presentation and full discussion of all views on this subject, and I have no doubt that such discussion and the presentation of differing views —not merely one view—will aid in arriving at a substantiative conclusion in which everybody will concur.

"This is the sane and sensible way of dealing with such subects which are not in themselves of a party nature, and ust as it would be absurd and unwise to reject a conclusion arrived at by such committee, so it would be absurd and unwise for either the Government or members of the Legislature to give pledges beforehand adopting any particular view. Such a course on the part of members of the House would prevent them from giving consideration to any view except the one to which they were pledged.

"I intended to have said that propositions which might be of value in a new and comparatively unsetted country might easily make for bad results in an old, established country, where there are large municipal debts, and debentures outstanding, and where, as in our case, outside of school rates and certain debts, municipal taxation is limited to two per cent."

Thomas Long for Senate?

Collingwood, Nov. 10.—The name of Thomas Long, for half a century identified with the interests of this town, is being mentioned in connection with the vacancy in the Senate created by the death of Sir John Carling.

While maintaining his interests here for the past 25 years, however, he has established many affiliations in Toronto, where his standing as a financial man is unexcelled.

Mr. Long served two terms as a member of the House of Commons and had the Conservative party been in power during the past 18 years, his services would have been recognized. His claims are unsurpassed at this time and this town looks to see him rewarded.

Killed In Mine.

Kingston, Nov. 10.—Michael O'Connor, aged 30, employed at Richardson's feldspar mines, near Godfrey, fell off a slope while at work yesterday morning, a distance of 40 feet, into the mine and was instantly killed. His home was in Bedford Township. He was employed as a driller.

SIEGE IN PROSPECT

Pekin is Making Preparations for Rebel Assault

LITTLE HOPE FOR MANCHU

Pekin, Nov. 10.—(2.02 a.m.)—Pekin is still awaiting the approach of the rebels. The Forbidden City is filled with princes, high officials and others who are entitled to enter within the gates. Vast rtores of provision have been transported to that place, which, strongly guarded, is ready for a siege.

Active preparations for what is considered the inevitable assault upon the capital are going on within the legation quarter, for it is now conceded that the Manchu dynasty will be ousted out of office. Foreigners, it is asserted, will be fully protected, but experience has taught that the temper of the people is not to be trusted when revolutionary movements are in progress.

The fact that Tientsin did not fall yesterday as was expected, is a hopeful sign, because it indicates that whatever steps the revolutionists are taking in the north, at least they are proceeding along careful lines and are acting with consideration and without haste.

While reinforcements have reached Pekin, reports have been received of numerous defections of the Manchu soldiers to the rebel side. The Government troops are an uncertain quantity, but there are still loyal regiments which are fighting for the dynasty.

At Nanking, where the revolutionists outnumber the imperialists five to one, the latter still hold Purple Mountain. They are strongly entrenched in that position and are said to have abundant supplies at their command.

A wireless despatch has been received from the American consul, Edward C. Baker, who has arrived at Hankow from Ichang. The consul states that the customs and other foreign officials are leaving Chung King in Sze Chuen Province, from which place the British consul sends reports that the situation is critical. The road between Ichang and Chung King is unsafe and there is danger from robber bands.

An American, who is in close touch with Tientsin rebels, says that they are divided into two factions. The conservative faction will probably control and wait until there is a material force behind before taking over the city. At the present time only 2,500 police within the city support the rebels.

The attitude of the foreigners is causing anxiety and distrust among the rebels. The rebel leaders point fut that the consuls have permitted the Government to bring in soldiers contrary to the protocol of 1910, and have objected to Gen. Chang bringing in troops. Foreign railway officials, they say, provide trains at the Government's order, but not at Gen. Chang's. A threatening letter, referring to such incidents as not neutral has been received by the consular body at Tientsin The Pekin-Hankow Railway officials likewise are pro-Manchu.

Gen. Tuan, with 2,000 men of the Third Division, has reached Pao Ting Fu. The remainder of the division is believed to be with Gen. Chang. The Chinese Foreign Board announces that the Phan Railway, which was reported blocked by the rebels, will soon be cleared.

Flees to Hong Kong.

Hong Kong, Nov. 10.—The Governor of Hong Kong announced at a legislative council yesterday that the viceroy of Canton was coming to seek temporary asylum at Hong Kong. The viceroy, it was explained, had concurred in the declaration in favor of the Republicans in order to avoid terrible bloodshed. The governor said he confidently looked to the Chinese community properly to receive the viceroy, who was in distress, as their guest.

Must Not Discuss Case.

Los Angeles, Nov. 10.—Possible efforts, intentional or otherwise, to discuss the McNamara murder case with prospective veniremen received recognizance from Judge Walter Bordwell, speaking from the bench yesterday.

Speaking to the three jurors and three accepted talesmen in the trial of James B McNamara, the judge admonished them not to discuss the case among themselves, or to mention it in any way.

Difficulties For Unionists.

London, Nov. 10.—Eager discussion in political centres yesterday served to emphasize the difficulty the Unionist party will find adequately to fill Mr. Balfour's place. Monday's meeting, which not unlikely will need a ballot to decide the matter, will only select a new man for the leadership in the House of Commons, leaving the question of the leadership of the party as a whole to be decided later.

It is understood that Sir Edward Carson and Alfred Lyttelton have declined to be nominated. The choice therefore lies between Austen Chamberlain, the Rt. Hon. Walter Hume Long and A. Bonar Law. At the present moment Mr. Chamberlain seems to be the favorite.

John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish Parliamentary party, said yesterday: "The resignation of Mr. Balfour gives the Nationalists a great advantage in the home rule fight as fighting against any prospective leader will be nothing compared with a fight against an old Parliamentary hand like Balfour. I am personally sorry to see Mr. Balfour retire, as he always fought fairly."

2,500 Men Affected.

Dunkirk, N.Y., Nov. 10.—J. A. Franklin of Kansas City, president of the International Boilermakers' and Helpers' Union, yesterday officially declared a strike against all the plants of the American Locomotive Co. About 2,500 men at Dunkirk, Schenectady, Richmond, Pittsburg and Montreal will be affected.

The boilermakers at the Dunkirk plant have not worked for several weeks. They refused to do work on engines from the New York Central System, where the boilermakers have been on strike since last February, and the officials thereupon closed the plant affected.

It is rumored that strikebreakers will be imported to Dunkirk to take the places of the men out here. A high fence is being built around the company's property, and it is reported preparations are being made to feed and lodge the men in the local plant.

Says Consul Interfered.

Portland, Me., Nov. 10.—The strike of the Portland Longshoremen assumed an international aspect last night, when resolutions were passed by the Longshoremen's Society, charging that British Vice-Consul John B. Keating is promoting the organization of a rival society, for the purpose of breaking the strike. The resolutions say that the "society resents the interference on the part of a vice-consular officer of the Kingdom of Great Britain," and proposes that his "conduct" be called to the attention of the State Department and the British ambassador

POULTRY FOR MARKET

J. G. Gunn of Montreal Gives Farmers a Few Hints

Ask yourself the question why we should be willing to pay one man 17c.-18c. per lb. for poultry and to another man only 16c.-13c., says John A. Gunn, Montreal. The difference is so great that there must be some reason for it. The reason lies in that the one is properly fattened, killed and prepared for market in the correct manner, whereas the other is simply taken from the flock, killed and marketed in any old way, without any intelligent regard as to what is desired or what is required.

How easy it is for the farmer with his skim milk and other rough products of the farm to fatten up his chickens in crates and feed them for a while before marketing; he then would be able to realise the increased prices that the superior article brings.

Now it is necessary, in order to obtain the best results, that we have the same intelligent co-operation in regard to poultry that we referred to in marketing eggs. The birds would require to be selected for killing and afterwards to be carefully taken care of, and the same care expended on them until they arrive at our warehouse.

It is much better to kill and market fowls of a standard quality, in other words, if anyone brought a dozen fowls to market and two of them were inferior, the buyer would naturally base his standard on the inferior birds. Birds of a uniform quality and weight also command a higher price than when they are otherwise offered for sale.

ROYAL MAIDS

Interesting Chat About the Servants at Buckingham

All the maids at Buckingham Palace wear pink frocks in the morning and must put on a fresh frock every day. In the afternoon the regulation black dress with cap and apron is worn, and the cap and apron must not be worn more than once.

Each maid is allowed, if she desires it, two days in the month when she can be out from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., and she also gets a fortnight's holiday every year.

There are a certain number of maid servants who are put on what is called the travelling staff. It is the special duty of these maids to attend to the packing of the personal luggage of the Queen, and they receive a special training in this work. At least two of these maids always travel with the Royal suite whenever Her Majesty moves from one Royal residence to another, though, of course, at each Royal residence there is a separate permanent staff of maids, says Home Chat.

Whenever Her Majesty pays a visit to any country house two travelling maids accompany the Royal suite, which is generally a small one, consisting of two Ladies-in-Waiting and one or two other members of the household.

Psoriasis Was Cured

After Five Years of Suffering ---Three Doctors Failed and Said Case Was Incurable

Itching and Burning Was Terrible Until Relief and Cure Was Effected by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Psoriasis is another name for chronic eczema. It is the worst form of this dreadful itching skin disease. Once eczema has reached this stage it is usually considered incurable.

But here is a case which proves again the wonderful healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Not only does relief come quickly, but the resulting benefits are thorough and lasting.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "I thought it my duty to write you telling you the great benefit I received from using Dr. Chase's Ointment. For five years I suffered with what three doctors called Psoriasis. I doctored with three different doctors, with no good results, and one of our noted doctors told me if any one offered to guarantee me a cure for $50.00 to keep my money in my pocket, as I could not be cured.

"The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head. The itching and burning was hard to bear. At last my brother read in the paper about Dr. Chase's Ointment as a healer. I got 8 boxes, and I am glad to say I am entirely cured, not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise the ointment enough, and you are at liberty to use my testimony, as I hope thereby to induce other sufferers to try the same."

THE FRENCH ANGLER

He Takes Sport Seriously and Reads Up in Advance

The Frenchman out on a sporting expedition is, says a writer in the Country Gentleman, like a schoolboy out for a holiday. He is enthusiastic over all he does, and is most anxious to look and act the part he is playing. "Le sport" is a serious business, and must be undertaken in as serious a spirit as a holiday will permit. And so the Frenchman follows whatever sport he takes up according to the proper rules and regulations.

The average French sportsman announces himself and his business long before he has spoken to you, for he invariably dresses the part. He has read up the subject in advance, and he knows what to do and how to do it. The first item is dress; every sport has its proper uniform, and no Frenchman worthy the name would think of starting out in inappropriate garb.

Most anglers attire themselves in salters or wading boots, and carry a mackintosh and a sou'-wester hat, even though they may be going to the tiniest stream in the finest of weather. They carry a weird assortment of rods and bait-cans and landing-nets, and have a habit of leaving some of their property behind. Having arrived at their favorite spot, they laboriously unlimber, and carefully arrange their paraphernalia around them. They will chatter gaily to any one with them, and if you are a friend will relate all their sporting adventures. If the fish refuse to bite they will contentedly go to sleep on the bank. Then, if they have caught nothing, they will, guilelessly as a child, purchase some fish in order to show their wives. Of course, there are other anglers as well, men who know as much about the sport as any Englishman; but the traveller in France will see about twenty of the former to one of the latter.

MISS MAY YOHE

She Was Stricken with Paralysis in Cafe Chantant

London's footlight favorite of twenty years ago, Miss May Yohe, has been stricken with paralysis. For the last few weeks she had been engaged at one of the city restaurants of San Francisco singing popular songs at lunch and dinner. As is the custom at many of the Bohemian cafes in the United States, the artists sit and dine at the tables like ordinary patrons, and at this particular restaurant the singer has had many popular welcomes. She was singing the pathetic song from "The Arcadians," "Bring me a rose," and had reached the words, "I'm so tired of violets; take them all away," when her utterance failed, and she fell forward from her chair. Physicians hastened to her aid, and it was found that she had been seized with partial paralysis.

THE NEW STAMP ISSUE

The One Ready for Issue When Edward Died Will Be Destroyed

It will interest the postage stamp collectors to learn that the twopenny stamp of the new design which was ready for issue at the time of the death of King Edward VII., but not placed on sale, is not to be circulated for use. The Post Office authorities have decided, a correspondent is informed, to destroy the entire stock of the new stamps, of which large numbers have been printed. Perhaps a few copies may be retained in the Post Office Museum or sent to the British Museum, but in any case the particular stamp is likely to rank among the great philatelic rarities, and will probably be considered as the scarcest of all the British stamps.

"Yes sir. My papa."

ARMADA TREASURE

Diver Brings Up Mass of Metal at Tobermory

The search for treasure, which may or may not exist in a sunken Spanish galleon at Tobermory, is being rigorously prosecuted, and interesting relics are being recovered daily. Among the finds are a stiletto, in a good state of preservation, an ointment box of very fine wire, set in a metal casing, and a very curious form of spokeshave and scabbard, with the sword worn very thin. The diver brought up two masses of metal, the larger of which weighed about 30 lbs., and was rectangular in shape, with a sunk handle. The other was of the same metal, but circular in shape, with a finely bevelled hand grip all around the inside. The anxious question arose naturally: "Are these masses of silver or galena? Are they the first masses of the sunken treasure, or where they part of the ballast of the ship?" Excitement spread among those interested as they hurried off to behold the blocks of metal, so soft that they could be cut with a bronze coin, and blackened the fingers as silver does. Part of the larger block was sent off to a firm of assayers in London, to obtain their verdict.

AERONAUTS' ADVENTURE

Balloon Caught by the Wind Falls Into the Thames

Captain Disney and Lieutenant H. M. Maitland, of the Essex Regiment, England, had a narrow escape from drowning at the end of a balloon voyage. They ascended from Warley Barracks at three o'clock, and rose rapidly. At an altitude of 8,000 feet the clouds blotted out all view of the land, and the wind was blowing at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The occupants knew that by the direction in which the balloon was travelling the sea would soon be reached. The valve was opened, and the balloon descended rapidly until the Thames was in sight. It was then found to be too late to stay her progress, and a sea-anchor was thrown out. This caught in the basket, which touched water, and the rope was cut. The incident occurred in mid-Channel, between Southend and the Kentish side, and provided much excitement for those on shore. Captain Disney and Lieutenant Maitland managed to extricate themselves from the basket, and were preparing to swim ashore, when a boat from a barge arrived and picked them up.

ODDFELLOW'S FUNERAL WISHES

Left a Rough Drawing of the Kind of Coffin He Wished

Mr. Edward Lawrence, who died at Wellington, Shropshire, recently, at the age of 71, left a rough drawing of the kind of coffin in which he was to be buried. He directed that his body should be taken from his house to the cemetery on a bier from the local workhouse, "six staid inmates of the house to act as bearers." The letters "E.L." only are to be printed on the coffin plate, funeral attire is not to be worn, there are to be no flowers, and no hearse or mourning coaches, with the exception of a carriage for his widow. Mr. Lawrence was for many years a member of the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows, but in his written instructions for the funeral he expressed a wish that the funeral oration of the Order be not read at the graveside—"only a brief and simple service for the burial of the dead, to conclude with the Lord's Prayer."

BOOK ON "HEADS."

Herr Maximilian Harden, the most prolific and most ascetic publicist in Germany, has just published his latest book—"Heads." The "Heads" which he dissects in the guise of character sketches include King Edward VII., Pope Leo XIII., the Emperor Francis Joseph, the Czar, M. Briand, Mme. Rejane, Tolstoi, and Mr. Rockefeller. It is a conglomerate collection, and is typical of Harden's boundless versatility. Harden, who was "discovered" by Bismarck, pays fresh tribute of adoration to the greatness of his benefactor in "Konfe."

A Lazy Liver

Upsets the Whole System. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Put Things Right Again.

His liver is a sluggish—his stomach bad.

A bitter taste in the mouth—coated tongue—dizziness on rising suddenly—bowels alternately loose and constipated—these mean that the liver is out of order.

Instead of flowing into the bowels, to regulate them and aid digestion, the bile has been going all through the system, upsetting digestion, leaving the bowels constipated, and making the sufferer perfectly miserable. This is biliousness.

The quick, safe and certain cure is Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. They clear out the clogged-up system, stir up the lazy liver, cleanse the stomach and bowels and purify the blood. The bile returns to its normal course, the food is again digested properly and all the disagreeable symptoms vanish.

Doctors prescribe Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills and they are known throughout the world as a proven cure for all digestive troubles. They are equally effective in strengthening weak kidneys and curing rheumatism.

FIRST TO CLIMB THE MATTERHORN

Haunted by Visions of Terrible Alpine Disaster—Mr. Whymper, Famous Alpinist Dead.

Mr. Edward Whymper, the famous Alpinist and conqueror of the Matterhorn, died at Chamonix at the age of seventy-two, as the result of an apoplectic seizure.

Mr. Whymper was a many-sided man—a brilliant writer, a good artist, and an admirable engraver on wood. But it was as a mountaineer that he was best known. He had climbed famous peaks in all parts of the world, but his name will be always remembered as that of the man who was the first to conquer the Matterhorn.

He began climbing in the Alps when he was twenty, and his first great ascent was that of Mont Pelvoux in Dauphiné during 1861. In the same year he first attempted the ascent of the Matterhorn, but was driven back by the want of resolution of his guide. In 1862 and 1863 he made six more unsuccessful attempts, on one occasion narrowly escaping with his life.

His eighth and successful attempt on the Matterhorn was made on July 13, 1865. He had six companions—three guides, Croz and the two Taugwalders; Lord Francis Douglas, and Messrs. Hudson and Hadow. The party reached the summit of the Matterhorn without misadventure, and thus dispelled the guides' belief that it was inaccessible and haunted by demons. They spent one hour on the top and then began the descent.

It was terribly hard luck that the triumph, after so many failures, should have been marred by one of the saddest of Alpine tragedies. The party was passing a point near the top when Mr. Hadow slipped against Croz, the leading guide, and knocked him down. Both slid down the mountain face, and Mr. Hudson and Lord F. Douglas were dragged after them.

Mr. Whymper was roped between the Taugwalders, and was last but one in the party. He and his two guides braced themselves to meet the shock; they resisted it, but the rope broke midway between Taugwalder and Lord Douglas.

"For a few seconds," says Mr. Whymper in his thrilling account of the catastrophe, "we saw our unfortunate companions sliding downwards on their backs and spreading out their hands endeavouring to save themselves. They passed from our sight uninjured, disappeared one by one, and then fell from precipice to precipice." All were killed on the spot.

The descent of the difficult part of the mountain had now to be achieved by Mr. Whymper and his shaken guides. "The two men, paralysed by terror, cried like infants and trembled in such a manner as to threaten us with the fate of the others. . . . The men were afraid to proceed, and several times old Peter Taugwalder turned with ashy face and faltering limbs and said with terrible emphasis, 'I cannot.'"

For many years after this fearful accident Mr. Whymper climbed no more in the Alps. In 1867 and 1872 he explored Greenland; in 1879-80 he climbed in the high mountains of Ecuador, and twice ascended the volcano of Chimborazo. Between 1901 and 1905 he ascended many of the Canadian Rocky Mountains and explored and mapped the country of the "Great Divide."

But wherever he went the memory of that awful disaster on the Matterhorn was always before him. Only three days before his death he said, "I am seventy-two, and I am finished. Every night, do you understand, I see my comrades of the Matterhorn disaster slipping on their backs, their arms outstretched, one after the other, in perfect order at equal distances—Croz, the guide, first, then Hadow, then Hudson, and lastly Douglas.

"Yes, I shall always see them slipping in order on their backs with their hands turned back, and I shall never see Zermatt again, where I spent my most ardent hours, nor my Matterhorn."

His prediction was a true one.

TRAMPED 60 MILES TO SAVE HIS CHUM

Prospector at Larder Lake Get Back with GIN PILLS Just in Time.

LARDER LAKE, ONT., MARCH 26th, 1911.

"I am writing to tell you the good GIN PILLS did me. I had been suffering for some time with my Kidneys and Urine. I was constantly passing water which was very scanty, sometimes as many as thirty times a day. Each time, the pain was something awful and no rest at night. I began to feel worn out. I heard of your GIN PILLS and decided to give them a trial at once. I sent my chum out to get them (about 60 miles) —and I am pleased to inform you that in less than six hours, I felt relief. In two days, the pain had left me altogether. I took about half a box and to-day I feel as well as ever and my kidneys are acting quite natural again. Thanking you for the pills which I always intend to keep by me. Yours respectfully,

SID CASTLEMAN.

RAISING A TREASURE

The "Lutine," Sunk in 1799, had $6,000,000 in Coin

Good progress has been made by the treasure seekers at work on the wreck of H.M.S. Lutine, which sank off the Dutch coast in 1799 with bullion and coin worth $6,000,000 on board.

The thirty-six feet of sand that covered the wreck have been removed and the divers can now walk along the lower hold forward.

When the ship was wrecked the after part collapsed and the treasure was buried by the cannon balls which fell from the magazine above. The cannon balls have been converted by the salt water into a solid mass of rusty iron many tons in weight.

Dynamite is being used to remove this mass. As each tier of cannon balls is loosened and taken away, more and more coins are found.

Recently the pumps of the salvage ship Lyons brought up a piece of rusty iron with the impression like that of a gold bar in the rust. Five grains of gold were taken from the fragment, and the searchers have no doubt that they are close to the bullion.

Intoxicated Fish.

The fish in the River Dill at Dorlar have recently been behaving in a very curious fashion. Some of them were swimmings backwards, others sideways, and others up and down—all in such different wyys as to suggest they were drunk. Investigations showed that they were, as a matter of fact, badly intoxicated. The explanation is that the alcohol from an adjoining yeast factory had been thrown into the river, and in such great quantities as to have a demoralizing effect on the river's inhabitants.

SHOULD DOCTORS SHAVE?

A Question Which Has been Discussed for 300 Years

The question, which has been discussed for some three hundred years as to whether the doctor, and more especially the surgeon, should sacrifice that playground of microbes—his beard—is once more to the fore, especially in France, says The Hospital. It is more than probable that every one interested will act according to his own particular fancy in this matter, and it will probably be a long time before our Gallic confreres will be forced to sacrifice the glories of their facial decorations on the altar of hygiene. Those who have embarked upon the present crusade attach the problem from a somewhat different standpoint, and although the bacteriology of the beard has not as yet been the object of very profound study, their ideas are not unreasonable. Still, without being as radical as they would like, is it not possible that the sanctity of the laws of hygiene can be respected by the use of ordinary measures of cleanliness, or, at most an antiseptic beard-bath?

PIGEON'S LONG TRAVELS

A homing pigeon liberated from Stafford on July 22, alighted on the liner Laurentic soon after it got out to sea on its last outward passage and the bird was taken to Montreal returning with the vessel to Liverpool. It was then thrown into the air with a label attached to its leg by the ship's officers, and it was found by its owner in the loft at Bowerby Bridge.

WATCHMAN'S TERRIBLE DEATH

A fatal explosion, the cause of which is a mystery, occurred at the Prospect Mills of Messrs. Joseph Hoyle and Son, woollen manufacturers, Longwood, England. An engine tender named Bray, had arrived at midnight to see that all was right with the boilers, when there was a terrific explosion and Bray had to flee from steam and boiling water. An investigation disclosed the dead body of the night watchman Heeley, terribly scalded, one of the coupling pipes of the boiler having burst.

MALE SERVANTS

An Innovation Which is Said to be Working Well in Berlin

The eternal servant question seems to be nearing a solution in Berlin. And the solution is a very simple one—namely, the substitution of male for female labor. Of recent years a vast increase in immigration from country to city has taken place, with the result that a capable man-servant can now be hired for from $8 to $10 a month, with board.

The Berlin Hausfrau testifies that the new servant is infinitely superior to the old, besides lending a social glory to the household, for, hitherto, men-servants have almost solely been employed by noble and aristocratic, or very wealthy families. Experience shows that they do as well, or better, all that the female servant does; dusting, cleaning, brushing, attending at table, even cooking—in short, everything except washing and ironing, against which the manly soul still revolts.

They are far more easily satisfied, far more obliging, and far less capricious; and their sense of duty is illustrated by the fact that they will actually clean and put away the silver and china after a party before they go to bed. They are a source of economy, too, for when in their charge china cups and saucers do not acquire the habit of automatically sliding off the tray to the ground, or vases and ornaments of suddenly jumping from their places in the dead watches of the night and being found in the morning in smithereens. Nor does this exhaust the list of their superior qualities, for they do not "give notice" in a fit of terror, but more readily attach themselves to their masters. But no man is perfect; and the said master must be prepared for an unaccountable pallor in his whisky and a high rate of mortality among his cigars.

French Cabinet Salaries.

Ministers in France are not so well paid as in this country. All members of the French Cabinet receive the same salary—$12,000 a year; and as they have to forfeit the allowance of $300 which they receive as Senators or Deputies their net annual gain through taking office is only $9,000. It is true they are provided with official residences, furnished, heated, and lighted at the public expense. Their tenure of office is, however, so precarious that they can never venture to let their private residences, so they save nothing under the head of rent.

LOCKJAW FROM A CUT

The danger in little accidents was illustrated at a London court. Mr. F. Danford Thomas held an inquest upon Arthur Pittman, four years of age, son of a potato salesman. The child was playing in the garden with his brother, a few years older, and saw a worm and got excited about it. The elder boy took up a fork and dug around the worm, but accidentally struck his baby brother with one of the prongs between the ankle and the toes of the left foot, making a slight wound. The child was at first treated at home, but signs of lockjaw appearing, he was removed to Guy's Hospital, where he died.

A man whose son was sent from the King's Lynn Police Court to an industrial school was said to be the father of twenty-five children.

WRITER OF "KELLY"

The Author, a Glasgow Man, Died in Tragic Circumstances

The author and composer of "Kelly" has just died in tragic circumstances. His name was Will Letters, and he was known throughout the music-hall profession as a man of many admirable traits. He started his career on the stage at the modest end of the business, and attained some eminence as a comedian.

For several years he has appeared with the Pierrots at various summer resorts, and he was thus engaged when attacked with a fatal hemorrhage of the lungs. It occurred last week when he was at work in his white suit and painted face. He lurched forward and was carried out to await the arrival of the doctor. He became delirious at a later stage, and rambled furiously about songs he was to write.

Letters was one of a school of comedians who had their first successes in the singing rooms—"sing-songs" they were called—of the North of England. Possessed of a good, strong voice, says the Daily Sketch, he first of all made descriptive songs his specialty, but in later years he developed low comedy.

He was engaged successfully in various pantomime productions in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and for a time played the part of Sergeant Lightning in Fred Karno's "Dandy Thieves." He also appeared in succession to Fred Kitchen, as John Willie Jaggs in "Saturday to Monday."

With a certain gift of melody he put together a number of music-hall songs successes and provided Wilkie Bard with one of his greatest pantomime hits, "Put me on an island where the girls are few," which was wedded to a garbled version of Mendelssohn's "Spring Song."

Later he wrote "Has anybody here been Kelly?" a song which became so popular as to be a nuisance. The song was taken to Canada and the United States and was the rage of the last song season. His latest success was "Flanagan," which Miss Florrie Forde sang at the Isle of Man. He was engaged on other numbers at the time of his sudden and fatal indisposition.

He was a Glasgow man, and something of a favorite in that city. Following upon several years' approved appearances in pantomime, he had been re-engaged as chief comedian at one of the Birmingham theatres next season.

MILLIONAIRES' DISPLAY

Ten Thousand Pounds Spent Over Grouse Shooting

Mr. Harry Payne Whitney, the millionaire, who derives his wealth from banking and railway enterprise, is illustrating the pitch of costliness to which sport in England may attain. Mr. Whitney has laid out about $50,000 upon the grouse shooting over the Holwick Moors.

Mr. Whitney left New York on August 13th by the White Star liner Celtic, and disembarked at Holyhead. With him travelled Mrs. Whitney, their two children, and a number of sportsmen he has brought over for the grouse shooting, a party.

Mr. H. Burden, Mr. Payne Thompson, and several other well-known "New Yorkers" travelled in luxuriant style and occupied the private suites specially fitted, and for which a charge of $700 each is reported to have been made. The sitting rooms in the suites were decorated daily with choice flowers, for which Mrs. Whitney paid $200 before leaving New York.

During the early part of the voyage the millionaires' party kept to their own rooms, but later on dined in the saloon and entered upon an exchange of socialities with other passengers.

Mrs. Whitney, who is a daughter of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, and is said to be worth a couple of millions in her own right, appeared in a number of magnificent costumes during the voyage, and on one occasion wore a diamond necklace worth $50,000. Mr. Harry Payne Whitney, like his father the late Mr. Charles Whitney, one time Secretary to the American Navy during the Administration of President Cleveland, is a keen sportsman and keeps the best racing stable in the States.

LIQUOR IN THE PUNJAB

Drinking to Excess is Prevalent and the Government is Taking Action

The annual excise report for the Punjab notes the growth of the drink habit among the people. Measures are being taken to combat the drink habit in districts where drinking to excess is prevalent, and wherever possible the number of drink shops is being reduced. But it is pointed out that in a matter of this kind little can be done without the co-operation of all sections of the people, and the Lieutenant-Governor urges the need of public opinion to maintain the former customary restrictions upon excessive indulgence. The formation of temperance societies shows that public opinion is being aroused and that the more intelligent men are alive to the danger which threatens their communities.

Patriotism

The stomach is a larger factor in "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" than most people are aware. Patriotism can withstand hunger but not dyspepsia. The condemned dyspeptic "is fit for treason, stratagems and spoils." The man who goes to the front for his country with a weak stomach will be a weak soldier and a fault finder.

KING JOHN BOYES HAS LONDON'S EAR

He Is the Abdicated Ruler of the Wa-Kikuyu, Where He Reigned Three Years.

HIS BOOK IS WRITTEN

Some Very Remarkable Experiences Fell in the Way of This Adventurous Yorkshireman.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE abdicated King of the Wa-Kikuyu, a tribe of fierce, treacherous East African savages, has come to London, and a strange tale he has to tell of his three years' reign. He is not, as one might suppose, a great, painted and befeathered thick lipped, black warrior, with a name that no white man could pronounce, but a short, quiet spoken Yorkshireman named John Boyes.

Boyes is publishing a book about his remarkable adventures, but he has no hesitation in telling some of them, and how he became ruler of the Wa-Kikuyu. It was, in fact, by sheer bluff, and pretending to be skilled in wonderful magic that he won over the savages. But remarkable nerve and pluck had most to do with it. Otherwise he would not have been a live man to-day.

Boyes started life as a cabin boy and cook on board a North Sea fishing smack; but passing that over, he said:—

"It was to get cereals from the Kikuyu country that I first made an expedition into the country that I was destined to rule for three years.

"I collected seven native boys, who could speak and teach me the Kikuyu language, as porters, assuring them everything would be all right, and, arming myself with a rifle and plenty of ammunition, set out. When we arrived in the Kikuyu we were met by five hundred warriors. I don't think they had ever seen a white man before, for they were distinctly awed by my appearance.

"I made them understand I wished to see their chief, and a guide led me to the old gentleman, whose name was Karuri. To him I made an offering of cheap American cloth, which pleased him mightily, and told him some infamous untruths about how my rifle could shoot six men at once, which impressed him strongly. To bear out my impression I sent a shot clean through a rotten old tree and told the chief that the bullet had gone through the mountain beyond. Some blacks ran to the mountain and came back swearing that they had seen the hole in it.

"I got what I came for, and promised to come back, which I did, this time with the intention of stopping."

He started right off drilling the warriors to make good soldiers, taking care that he had a good bodyguard for himself and instilling well into their savage minds that it was impossible to kill a white man. Some of the other methods employed in winning the kinship of the savages and their tract of 4,000 square miles were:—

"I made them think I could drink boiling water by quaffing draughts of an effervescent powder. I became a 'blood brother' with various chiefs, and all 'blood brothers' are friends. I had a gramophone, which was supposed to be some awful invention of the white man by which some spirit was in a box and compelled to do its master's bidding. I instituted the custom of inter-tribal war dances every ten days, friendly tribes being invited to our quarters."

He seems to have owed his power over one tribe in the first place to a musical clock, which gained for itself the reputation of being a maker of rain. But it brought trouble. When they looked to him for the rain that did not come they sought to murder him. But the providential capture of their chief saved his life. Then the longed-for rain came and all were firmly persuaded that he was responsible for it. Then Mr. Boyes quit.

A WORD TO THE FAT:— AVOID THE WALNUT

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

Our fat brethren ought to avoid walnuts and wine, for the Lancet contains a grave warning about them.

"The percentage of food in walnuts," it says, "is very high; they are very rich in fat, containing as much as sixty-three per cent., while the proteins amount to nearly sixteen per cent. It has been calculated that thirty large walnut kernels contain as much fat as two and three-quarter pounds of lean beef, and yet the walnut is used as a supplement to a square meal!

"Added to this, the glass of port, say two fluid ounces, contains, besides 180 grains of alcohol, 70 grains of grape sugar. In the combination, therefore, we have all the elements which make for a complete diet—viz., fat, protein, carbohydrate, to which may be added mineral salts. Port and walnuts after a meal are, therefore, from a nutritive point of view, 'ridiculous excess.' The digestive disturbance to which this excess may easily lead is, in fact, the price paid for an aesthetic indulgence."

But It Doesn't Work.

Beautiful and Romantic Christmas Card for Captain Scott, in the Antarctic

PICTURES OF HIS BABY FOR COMMANDER SCOTT

Pictures of the Explorer's Baby Boy Being Hurried to Him by His Wife.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

ONE of the most interesting and most romantic of Christmas cards ever made is speeding across oceans and continents to overtake Captain Scott before the explorer plunges into the long darkness of the antarctic night.

The story of this Christmas box, prepared with nervous, loving haste by an anxious, affectionate wife and mother, is one which is calculated to bring the sympathetic laugh and tear to the lips and eyes of every mother.

In a pretty nursery in Buckingham Palace road frolics the two-year-old son of Captain Scott. Master Peter was a new born babe when his father left on his adventurous travels, and the mother, desirous of cheering the father on the last and most arduous stages of his undertaking, determined to send him a reel of living pictures of his now two-year-old son.

A "kinora" operator was summoned to the nursery, and there took a striking series of photographs. Peter, clad in a silk suit, gambolled merrily over the floor, throwing a ball at the camera and delighting hugely in the importance of being specially photographed for the sake of daddy, who will see his child in all manner of characteristic attitudes and gambols.

The reel was hurried off to the kinora works, developed and packed in a tin sealed box. But, alas! by an unfortunate circumstance the mail was missed, the last mail that could reach Lyttleton before Captain Scott left civilization. But Mrs. Scott was not to be done.

A rush was made by the kinora messenger with the precious box for Marseilles, which was reached on October 27. Thence by steamship, Melbourne should be reached on November 27 and from there it is hoped to reach Lyttleton, New Zealand, on December 4, the latest day Captain Scott can afford to wait before leaving for the South.

But it will be all a matter of luck if the messenger reaches Lyttleton on that date. If not, then he will have to push southward for Victorialand on whatever vessel there may be available. At all costs Captain Scott must have his moving pictures of Peter, his baby boy.

Vaudeville Gains the Stellar Ones

Some Interesting Theatrical News from London About Americans and Others.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

SINCE Mme. Bernhardt set the pace all the stars of the legitimate drama are going into vaudeville. Miss Irene Vanbrugh, the latest to take the plunge, is appearing at the Hippodrome in a sketch by Mr. J. M. Barrie called "The Twelve Pound Look."

Not to be outdone, Mr. Arnold Daly, the American interpreter of Shaw, will appear at the Palace, beginning on Monday, November 6, in "A Comedy for Wives," a playlet by Mr. Owen Johnston.

"The Bad Girl of the Family" is on at the Crystal Palace. "The Girl Who Knew a Bit" is drawing crowded houses at Dalston and "The Girl Who Took the Wrong Turning" is turning away money in the provinces. Of course American plays fall over here!

London's music hall audiences are in tears every night as they listen to the latest mournful hit, a song called "Do You Remember the Last Waltz?" Make them cry and you make them happy!

It is reported that Mr. Beecham, who has obtained some publicity of late without the aid of a press agent, is to begin an opera season at the Aldwych soon.

"Yours Merrily" John R. Rogers, continuing his reminiscences in Lloyd's this week, recalls how Wilson Barrett, prodigal in giving his autograph, one day found that his signature had been used to get his housekeeper out of the way while all his household effects were being removed by burglars.

Mme Bernhardt was very busy in London, for in addition to two performances each day at the Coliseum she daily rehearsed "Lucretia Borgia," which she is to produce in Paris.

It appears that Miss Ida Crispi, who dances the "Yankee Tangle" in the ballet "New York" at the Empire, is a Lancashire lass. Fawncy!

According to the Pelican, Mlle. Yvette Barlet, who is appearing at the Little French Theatre, in Pembroke Gardens, is known as the "best dressed woman in Paris." She must be a stunner.

Miss Billie Burke is to appear in Paris next spring in a new play by MM. de Caillavet and de Flers. She will play the part of "an American girl who speaks French as it is not spoken." That last touch by the Pelican man makes one wince.

Two of the most successful of recent English plays produced in America are "Passers-By" and "The Quaker Girl," says the Pelican. Two of the most successful American plays recently produced in England—[to be continued in our next].

There is a report that Sir Herbert Tree is suffering from insomnia and that Mr. George Edwardes has been a victim of influenza.

I understand that when "The Chocolate Soldier" leaves the Lyric Mr. Frederick Whitney will follow it with "Mademoiselle Modiste," in which "the little devil of grand opera," Mlle. Fritzi Scheff, scored a sensational success in New York.

"The quest of perpetual motion is ended," said a visitor to the new Grand Opera House, in the Kingsway, last Friday, as he pointed to Mr. Oscar Hammerstein.

LONDON OBJECTS TO BEING CREMATED

Crematories Lie Idle While the Cemeteries Around the Metropolis Are Increasing.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

ANOTHER cheerful item is going the rounds of the English press, and that is that London soon will be girt with an unbroken ring of cemeteries, according to the medical officer for the city, who is lamenting the growing prejudice against cremation.

London has built, at considerable cost, several crematories, and yet there was an average of only about twenty cremations at each in the last year. This same decrease, according to inquiry, has been general all over England.

From every town and city where there is a crematory comes the same tale. Since 1885, when cremation was legalized in England, less than nine thousand bodies have been cremated, and yet in London alone about seventy-two thousand deaths occur every year, so that the work of extending burial grounds all around the metropolis goes on without ceasing.

As it is you cannot get away from London in any direction, either by road or rail, without seeing cemeteries on each side of you as you pass through the suburbs. Still there are those who would not object to this view if they were "getting away from London."

Never Logical.

PARCELS-CARRYING HUSBANDS WIN

Big London Emporium Will Provide for Them While Their Wives Spend the Money.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

NO more will the "parcels-carrying" husband have to cool his heels on the sidewalk while his wife dallies over her purchases in the dry goods store. Not at Whiteley's, at any rate. Whiteley's ever has been known as the "universal providers," and they have now built and will open on November 21 what they say is the largest store in the world.

It is now asserted that in the future it will be the husband who will be keen on taking his wife out on shopping excursions, and that children, too, will beseech their mothers to take them shopping. For in Whiteley's new palace emporium a luxurious social club is to be provided for the men, while boys and girls will be whirled off by the lift to the "pleasure ground" while waiting for their mothers.

Here children will find the blue bird of happiness. They can frolic in real sand from the sea, explore the corners and turnings of the pleasure ground, where there will be all kinds of magic toys working for their amusement, blow trumpets and beat drums to their little hearts' content. The only sad thing about it, in fact, will be the going away time.

Men will be equally loath to leave their comfortable quarters when their wives have finished shopping, for here they will have all the latest conveniences of a modern club—billiard room, library, with all the latest novels and magazines, smoking room and—a bar. All that is wanted up to the present is a license for hard drinks. That, it is hoped, will come.

U. S. MERCHANT 'SHAKES UP' LONDON

Mr. Duke C. Bowers, Proprietor of Many Stores, Has His Own Lot of Ideas.

FAVORS THE HOLIDAY

Convert to One Part of the British System and Will Try to Introduce It at Home.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. DUKE C. BOWERS, proprietor of thirty-five stores in Memphis, Tenn., has set all London talking about the town of his adoption. He is mighty proud of the "Gateway to the Yazoo Delta;" he predicts a big future for the greatest inland cotton market in the world and, even though he is on a holiday in England, he feels it his duty to propagate the gospel of Memphis' virtues in England.

Mr. Bowers is one of fifteen hundred of the leading citizens of Memphis who are members of the Business Men's Club of Memphis, and he came to England in July in search of rest and health.

Thereon hangs a story. Mr. Bowers held the view that no man needed a holiday, but he has changed his ideas. He is a convert to the English system, and he now says that every man needs a holiday.

He will try to induce his fellow storekeepers in Memphis to give a mid-week half holiday to all their employes. It is good to rest, he says, although he finds it hard even in leisurely England to forget Memphis and live the life of the idle rich.

When the anti-Jewish riots were causing alarm in South Wales Mr. Bowers gave a hundred dollar bill employment by inserting in one of the leading dailies an advertisement telling the Jews of Wales that good citizens of all nationalities were wanted in Memphis, where Italians, Germans, Jews, Britishers and Americans lived as one happy family.

"Bring the world to Memphis" is the motto of this enterprising Tennessee city, and this week Mr. Bowers has had a small army of sandwichmen parading the main thoroughfares telling Londoners that "Memphis wants more good citizens." The novelty just tickled the Cockney sense of humor, and a laconic "cabby" told Mr. Bowers that "even the aristocracy" stopped to read the call to Memphis.

But these sandwichmen were hardly embued with the spirit of enthusiasm that actuated Mr. Bowers. He wanted them to be photographed, but even sandwichmen have rigid ideas of what is part of their work and what is not. "Line up, boys, and let the photographer take a snap," said Mr. Bowers cheerily, but the response was an icy frown. The sandwichmen stoically refused to do anything of the sort. They were paid eightpence a day to carry the heavy boards around the streets and not to display their "classic" features for the benefit of the photographer.

They wanted more money before they would pose, and not until Mr. Bowers had displayed fifty "tuppences" to the fifty British workmen would they permit the camera man to get busy.

Mr. Bowers is very proud of the photograph. He says it was well worth the extra eight shillings and four pence, and all Memphis will see it when he gets home in December.

CHRISTMAS CARD IS VERY MUCH ALIVE

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

EVERY year with the approach of Christmas up rises the old cry that the "vogue" of the Christmas card is dying. It is not dying this year yet, for Sir Adolph Tuck, the head of the noted publishing house of Raphael Tuck & Sons, says this Christmas the post office will be harder pushed than ever it was to dispose of the heavy bags of Christmas cards that will be sent out.

Judging from the enormous orders that have already come in from agents and retail dealers, there is going to be a great boom in royal Christmas cards, replicas copied from the original cards made for the King and Queen and other royalties. These include the King's card, showing Cedric, the Saxon ancestor of the English royal family, accepting the crown, Queen Mary's card, after Davis's picture of "William and Mary accepting the crown of England," Queen Alexandra's card, after J. Finnemore's picture of "A Voice Divine," and the Prince of Wales' card, an oilette of Edward the Black Prince.

Then there will be cards which have been designed by a Princess of the imperial house of Hohenzollern, whose name must not be revealed yet, but who, Sir Adolph says, "is devoting her artistic talents of a very high order to the designing of Christmas cards. This royal artist, who is a near kinswoman of the Kaiser, has a pretty taste and a clever brush, and her designs will make an entirely new series of cards. They were originally intended for private circulation only, but now they are being reproduced for general sale."

A boom is also anticipated in Dickens Christmas cards and calendars, in view of the forthcoming celebration of the centenary of the novelist.

Other features of the Christmas season will be a pictorial life of King George, a "Dog Lovers' Calendar," by a well known English humorist, Mr. Walter Emanuel, and a "Leap Year Calendar," mainly for girls.

Mr. Hilton's View of U. S. Golfers

The Champion, in a Newspaper Article, Shows His Respect for the Americans.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. HAROLD H. HILTON, the English golfer, has a great respect for American golf. Asked the question, "Can the Americans beat the English at golf?" he replies in an article to the Daily Mail that the question is easier to answer than "Will the Americans eventually beat us at golf?"

He says several of the American amateurs are distinctly brilliant exponents of the game, though they cannot, to his mind, claim the same consistency of form that one or two of the most noted of English amateurs show.

There is great hope, he says, for the cause of American golf, because the majority of the leading players in America are very young—"ridiculously young," he calls them—according to the English standard of age. He instances Fred Herreshoff, who recently ran him to the thirty-seventh hole at Apawamis.

Mr. Hilton does not think the American is naturally quicker in picking up the game than his English brethren. He simply matures more rapidly, on account of the greater opportunities that are granted him, and "in consequence he will probably arrive at the zenith of his powers at a much earlier age than the British player."

Then, taking an American team of ten amateurs, he proceeds to discuss the chance they would have against the British players and says that on their own soil they would have a distinct chance.

"For argument's sake," he continues, "I will name a team of ten American players, giving the names of those whom, on my experience in the States, I consider worthy of inclusion. I will make it up as follows:—Walter Travis, Fred Herreshoff, Jerome Travers, 'Chick' Evans, W. Fownes, Jr.; Oswald Kirkby, Paul Hunter, Albert Seckel, E. M. Byers and H. A. Gardner. I think even my American friends would grant that this team would be fairly representative of American golf.

"Now, on American soil this would prove a very serious problem for the British team to solve, and I am rather inclined to the opinion that they might fail to solve it. Now, at least two of this team—Travis and Travers—are admittedly not quite so good as they once were, and it is possible that at one time in their careers they were almost, if not quite, as good as the very best British talent; but, taking the whole team on their present form, they have no men on the average of play who, to my mind, are quite the equals of one or two of our players. But, on the other hand, they are a wonderfully level lot, with not a weak player in the crew, and, what is more important, the majority of them are really good match players, and in this respect the American golfer compares more than favorably with the British player."

PRINCE OF WALES IS NO "SLACKER"

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

EDWARD, PRINCE OF WALES, has finished his naval training, and soon will be permanently attached to the army; but he left H. M. S. Hindustan not very willingly and amid the general regret of all his officers and shipmates, for he was very popular, as well as a hard worker.

His officers say he was no "slacker." He was subjected to all the discipline and restrictions applied generally throughout the service, and not excused one single duty, however arduous or humble.

During his four years he spent at Osborne and at Dartmouth Naval College he lived the life and shared and shared alike with all his fellows of whatever station. He has experienced all the drudgery and all the arduous phases of life.

Captain Campbell, of the Hindustan, said in an interview:—"The Prince has taken part in every duty that appertains to the working of a great battle ship and has cheerfully performed all his duties. He has borne his share of 'coaling ship,' and you know what that means. He has worked hard in the gunroom and at drill, and has, among other things, been associated with the landing of small armed parties. He has proved an extremely hard worker, and has struck all those about him as what we call a 'live thing.'"

39 YEARS CAPTAIN, HIS CAREER CLOSES

Commodore H. W. Hayes, of the Pacific Navigation Fleet, Retires Full of Honors.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

CAPTAIN H. W. HAYES, commodore of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's fleet, who is called "the best known man in South America," brought his sea career to a close on October 21 by retiring from the command of the steamship Orita.

Captain Hayes was one of the best known and most highly respected commanders in the merchant service, having been for thirty-nine years in command of high class vessels, and for a number of years has had the distinction of being the senior commodore out of the Mersey.

In all he has made 128 round voyages to South America, representing 2,560,000 miles. He was idolised by passengers, who would delay a voyage if they could procure a berth on board his ship, and he had a wonderful hold over his crews, his cheery kindness being well liked in the forecastle.

He was the recipient of one of the most remarkable tributes ever paid to a merchant service captain when the public subscribed £2,000 ($10,000) and presented it to him in appreciation of the part he played in connection with the loss of the Cotopaxi some twenty years ago. The vessel struck an uncharted rock in the Straits of Magellan, but every passenger was got off in fifteen minutes. Captain Hayes was, of course, the last man to leave the vessel, and previous to going over the side the captain, standing waist deep in water which was rapidly rising, found time to commence smoking a cigar.

A more recent experience which showed the Captain's daring and skill as a navigator was when his vessel was at anchor in Valparaiso harbor, which was crowded with shipping. A typhoon came on suddenly and caused much damage to the shipping all around, so Captain Hayes slipped his cable and backed the Orita out. This feat evoked the admiration of the commander of a damaged American war ship, who remarked to his officers:—"Well, I guess I must shake hands with that Britisher."

Captain Hayes is a bachelor. His mother is still alive and is naturally proud of the fact that two of the finest ships steaming out of the Mersey were commanded by her sons, for the captain of the White Star steamship Laurentic is a brother of the man whose sea career has just ended.

He Got the Job.

Washington Star:—Employer—So you want a job as office boy? I suppose you are wide awake and all that sort of thing?

Boy—Just depends; I'm fast asleep if I see you kissing the typewriter.

HIGH CLASS CLUB FOR TRAVELLERS

Organized in London, It Will Be Open to New World Men of Social Eminence.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

LONDON'S latest club is that which bears the name of the United Travellers' Club, situated in a magnificent building in Piccadilly, overlooking the Green Park, with the top of Buckingham Palace peeping over the trees in the distance.

It has been formed to meet the wants of the man of travel, and has an influential committee, with Lord Garnock as chairman, Sir William Stewart Dick-Cunyngham, vice chairman, and Sir Arthur Lushington, the Hon. Conyngham A. Denison, the Hon. R. D. Yelverton, Mr. G. Cecil Whitaker and Captain the Hon. R. L. Pomeroy, members. The membership will be limited to one thousand, and though the club was opened only last week the list is growing rapidly.

The idea of the promoters has been to establish a club not only for the man of high social standing in London but for the eminent traveller from America and the Continent who desires the comforts of a club when stopping in the metropolis. The membership will be of an exclusive character, and foreign members will require the recommendation of membership of the best clubs in the big capitals of America and Europe.

Members of the Metropolitan, Union, Knickerbocker, Manhattan and Calumet, of New York, for instance, are the men to whom the United Travellers' Club will be open. Temporary memberships are in operation, and the club has been furnished and appointed on a lavish scale and with artistic effect.

Equal to the Occasion.

Baltimore American:—"You're no judge of literature or rhetoric, Sam. Why, you couldn't do it to save your life if I asked you to give me a good illustration of a flat contradiction in terms."

"Couldn't I? All right; the next time you ask me to lend you $5 you will find my decided negative is quite positive."

His Mission.

Baltimore American:—Visitor — My dear sir, I trust I can bring some uplifting influence to bear upon you.

Business Man—I have no time for preaching in business hours.

Visitor—I don't want to preach to you. I'm agent for an elevator company.

Big Dogs in Demand.

Philadelphia Times:—Country Cousin—Little dogs have gone out of fashion, haven't they?

Mrs. De Style—Oh, indeed. They are more popular than ever.

"But I notice that you are all getting big dogs."

"Yes, we have to have big dogs to keep people from stealing the little dogs."

FALSE BEAUTY AIDS

A Warning to Girls Who Seek Helps to Their Complexion

A grave warning to girls who act as their own "beauty" specialists is contained in a case from Birkenhead, in which a young woman died through eating inordinate quantities of raw rice to improve her complexion.

Dr. Stokes, who has practised in Old Kent Road for upwards of 16 years, said the other day that the habit amongst working girls, more particularly factory hands, was more widespread than is generally believed.

"They eat quantities of it to make them 'beautiful,' as they call it. They want nice pale white complexions, and the effects of eating raw rice is undoubtedly to make them pale.

"It makes them pale by upsetting their digestion and stomach generally, and giving them anaemia.

"Raw rice is not the only thing they take. Some of them systematically drink pints of vinegar to obtain the same 'beautiful' result, and others suck lemons, eat pickles, or take raw cabbage with the same object and the same result upon their digestion and complexions.

"They will go into provision shops and buy pennyworths of pickles just as small boys buy pennyworths of sweets."

The practice, Dr. Stokes declared, is by no means of recent origin.

It may be added that starch-eating is another form of this morbid habit, and that girls even eat whiting and hearthstone.

Medical men in similar districts all over London have gathered the same views and experiences.

In the West-End, it is said, these strange "beauty aids" are in common use amongst domestic servants, who are pining for the admiration of the postman, the policeman, the soldier, or baker's or butcher's youth.

"In many of my cases in which the patients are girls. I can generally trace the trouble to the raw rice or vinegar habit," said Dr. Stokes, "and it's no use warning them. They WILL be 'beautiful.'"

STOLE A DUMMY

An Amusing Story Told in a French Court

Francis Brigaux, an electrician, was had up in the police court at Paris for stealing a dummy and the dress shown on it from a linen-draper's shop. He explained to the Magistrate that it was all a mistake. "The fact is, I had had a glass or two, and a glass or two flies at once to my poor head. Moreover, it was past eight in the evening, and, what with the gloaming and the glass or two, my sight was a bit blurred. Strolling along, I saw a smart girl, and when I got nearer I recognised her. 'Hello,' I said to myself, 'here's Fifine, and got up no end.' I had never seen such a swagger frock on her before. Fifine, I should explain, is my best girl. 'Hello, Fifine, said I, 'what swells we are,' and got my arm round her waist. I just lifted her off her feet, and was going to kiss her. No harm in that, was there, as she was my best girl, or, at any rate, I thought she was. As I said before, my sight was a bit hazy. I was just going to kiss her when I found it was not Fifine at all, but a lay figure to show a dress off. The ill-luck was that just at that moment the shopman looked around, thought I was making off with the dummy and the dress, and shouted, 'Stop thief!' and I was run in. I tried to explain to the shopman and the police, but they wouldn't listen." The magistrate listened right enough, but pointed out that the lay figure had no head, whereas Miss Fifine, he hoped, had. Francois Brigaux's mistake was, therefore, for that reason among others, inexcusably discourteous to the lady, and he must go to jail for three months.

CANNOT UPSET IT

Two Tests Made of New Lifeboat and Both are Successful

The new Harry Fisher lifeboat was successfully launched at Polson's Iron Works, Toronto. It was dropped from two heights, and demonstrated its self-righting principle in both. The first drop was made from an iron cradle ten feet from the water. Although the framework of the cradle broke just as the boat was being tipped, thus turning it nearly upside down, it righted itself in a few feet, and fell in the water right side up.

A rope was then let down from an overhead crane and fastened by an ordinary hook to the top of the boat. When the boat was raised a few feet from the water the hook snapped owing to the weight of the vessel, nearly four tons, and the boat dropped back into the water.

The boat was next raised to a height of twenty feet, suspended from the overhead crane, and at a given signal, was dropped t othe water. It landed right side up.

The boat, which is of steel, is shaped somewhat like a cigar, and inside has a steel boat working on pivots, so that it is always in proper position.

It is claimed for the boat that it is fireproof, non-sinkable and non-capsizable. It has capacity for fifty persons, and with the aid of running-boards on the sides and top could, if necessary, carry another fifty. It is twenty-four feet long and seven feet wide, and is propelled by a screw operated by a crank.

Light is obtained through a number of glassed-in port holes, and air by special self-closing devices.

WAGES IN GLASGOW

Municipal Employes Beg for an Increase in the Minimum

At a mass meeting of Glasgow Corporation employes, Mr. Richard Davies, general secretary, said the wages paid to municipal employes in Glasgow, the conditions under which they worked, and the treatment they received from those in authority could not be compared to what prevailed in a town like Leicester. The London County Council's minimum wage for employes was $6.75 per week, yet in Glasgow, where the cost of living was greater, they were still begging for a rise from a minimum of $5.25 to $6.25. There ought not to be a public servant in Glasgow in receipt of a lower wage than would guarantee him the means of living a reasonable and comfortable life, and he thought $6.25 a week was the lowest possible amount on which a man and his family could live on comfortably in the city of Glasgow. The greatest evil of the Corporation servants in Glasgow to-day was bureaucracy. What they had got to fight for was the right of appeal to the committees before being punished or dismissed, and the mere guarantee of that privilege by the Council to its employes would remove three parts of the grievances from which they had suffered.

WHERE WAS LANDSEER?

Among the interested spectators at an art exhibition in New York were two young fellows, evidently of rural origin, whose attention seemed to be especially attracted to a canvas entitled, "Two Dogs; after Landseer."

As the two studied the painting they seemed perplexed as to one particular. Said one young man.

"Bill, I kin see the two dogs, but where is Landseer?"

Whereupon the other continued his close scrutiny of the painting.

"Tom," said he, finally, "I got it. This is one of them puzzle pictures I hears so much about."—Harper's Weekly.

Widow's Pathetic Message.

A pathetic contribution has been received at the Yorkshire Home for Incurables at Harrogate consisting of a purse containing $1.30 in silver, accompanied by the following message: "A small contribution to the home from a widow, the savings of her son, who died several years ago, aged sixteen years."

Killed While at Play.

Cecilia Robinson, the six-year-old daughter of a Preston labourer, was playing in the street with some companions when a boy who was only four years old tossed a red Bengal light into the air. It fell on a heap of paper near which the girl was standing and her pinafore caught fire. She was burned fatally.

An Open-Air School

An open-air school was started at King's Heath, Birmingham, with thirty scholars. The school is designed for little ones who are too weakly to attend the ordinary elementary school. The grounds are divided up into plots, allowing each child the delight of its own garden. There are a number of baths and many expedients for combining instruction with healthy amusement.

Septuagenarian Romance

Mr. William Riding Bradshaw, a widower of seventy-five, and Mrs. Elizabeth Mercer, a widow of seventy-two, were married at the Preston Registry Office. They had been friends for nearly sixty years. The bride was attired in black and the bridegroom wore a frock coat and a bowler hat. They were accompanied only by two witnesses. Mrs. Mercer had fifteen children by her first marriage.

Dreaded to Leave Workhouse

A Chatham pauper septuagenarian named William Thomas ahs ended his life in the workhouse by hanging. The old man was invariably cheerful, so it was related at the inquest, but he dreaded that upon reaching the age of seventy he would be discharged from the workhouse to receive the old age pension. He declared he would rather die in the workhouse than take the pension.

Penalty of a Large Family

Chalmaford guardians have received into the workhouse a man and his wife and seven children who, stated to have been turned out of their house owing to their numbers, had been unable to find another home. The man has been twice married and is the father of eighteen children, of whom thirteen are alive. The guardians have given him every facility to find another house while his wife and family remain in the workhouse.

CRICKET PLAYER DEAD

George Palmer, One of Australia's Greatest Bowlers

The death has taken place in Australia of George Palmer, who was one of the finest Colonial bowlers ever seen on a cricket field. He came to England with the 1880 team, and was here also in 1882, 1884, and 1886. Born on February 22, 1861, he was in his fiftieth year. No bowler ever won fame at an earlier age. As a lad of eighteen he met with marked success for Victoria against Lord Harris's eleven at Melbourne, and was soon regarded as second only to Spofford. During his first three visits to England he was a great bowler, but in 1886, having in the meantime come on very much as a batsman, he was not up to his previous standard. At his best he had nearly every good quality that a bowler of his style could possess. His delivery was the easiest and most natural that can be recalled—it seemed part of himself—and he had in combination with remarkable spin a good variety of pace. No one ever bowled a better "yorker." In addition to his other gifts he was a more telling leg-break than any bowler of his speed. Looking back upon his career in England as a whole, he must be placed with Spofford and Charles Turner. Many famous bats men have declared that they never met a bowler who could be more difficult on a perfect wicket, his resources being so varied. For the great team of 1882 he took 128 wickets, and 1881 123 wickets.

ALL NIGHT IN A BOG

Story of a Brutal Attack on an Irish Farmer

The Killarney police are scouring the district in search of the perpetrators of an outrage on a farmer named John Clifford, of Glencar. The latter had cattle grazing on an evicted farm. Failing to dispose of them at Killorglin Fair, he sent a man named Rahilly to drive them back. Rahilly was attacked by three men, and was so terrified that he ran away, leaving the cattle on the roadside, but reported what had occurred to the owner, who at once went in search of his cattle. Observing them in a field he entered with the object of driving them home. He was driven out by the men, one of whom brandished a revolver in his face and threatened to shoot him. Clifford sought refuge in a public house, where a large crowd collected and denounced him for grazing his cattle on an evicted farm. After some time the crowd got him out of the house, and knocking him down savagely maltreated him, and left him on the roadside. The unfortunate man, fearing further molestation, hid all night in a bog. In the morning he struggled to the house of a man named Teahan Castlemaine, where his wounds were attended to. Later on he again entered the field where his cattle were to take them home. He was attacked by seven men, who knocked him down and gave him another beating. His pockets were rifled, and $5.80, all the money in his possession, was taken from him. Ultimately he managed to get his eight head of cattle, and drive them to Killorglin. His assailants were strangers to him.

SHOWER OF FROGS

Came by Thunderstorm and Cried Like Rabbits

After a violent thunderstorm Mr Jack Ayre, Devonshire, found a long stretch of road covered with thousands of frogs, which, it is declared "cried like rabbits." Mr. Ayre expresses the opinion that the frogs came down from the sky, and he is supported in his view by another resident of the district, who has had experience of monsoons abroad.

This expert says that in the stillness which precedes monsoons in tropical regions all sorts of creeping things come out of their hiding-places and croak. They are often carried up into the air by whirlwinds, and when the monsoon breaks down they come again.

It was midnight when Mr. Ayre made his discovery. In the morning there were still a number of frogs left, but many were dead. On the other hand it is suggested that the frogs may have been washed out of a wood by the heavy rains.

A GILBERT WHITE STORY

Thomas Hoar, the devoted servant upon whom Gilbert White, the naturalist, depended to carry out his garden plans and to look after his comfort in many ways, was noted for his exactness. H. C. Shelley, in "Gilbert White and Selbourne," gives an amusing illustration:—

There was one occasion when Thomas came to report, "Please, sir, I've been and broke a glass."

"Broke a glass, Thomas! How did you do that?"

"I'll show you, sir," he rejoined, as he disappeared for a moment. Returning with a glass in his hand, he let it fall on the floor, remarking:

"That's how I broke it, sir."

"There, go along, Thomas; you are a great goose," said his master, adding to himself, "and I was as great a one for asking such a foolish question."—Youth's Companion.

"Did you have a solicitor?" asked the judge of a witness at Shoreditch County Court. "No, he had me," was the reply.

Soothing Healing Pain-relieving
MECCA OINTMENT

I Am Willing To Prove I Can Cure You

To That End I Am Giving Away $10,000 Worth of Medicine

In order to show beyond all doubt that I am in possession of a medicine that will cure kidney trouble, bladder trouble or rheumatism, I will this year give away ten thousand dollars' worth of this medicine, and anyone suffering from these diseases can get a box of it absolutely free. All that is necessary is to send me your address.

I don't mean that you are to use a part of it or all of it and pay me if cured. I mean that I will send you a box of this medicine absolutely free of charge, a gift from me to the Uric Acid sufferers of the world, so I can show them where and how they may be cured. I will not expect payment for this free medicine, nor would I accept it now or later if you sent it. It is free in the real meaning of the word.

For twenty-five years—a quarter of a century—I have been trying to convince the public that I have something genuine, something better than others have for the cure of stubborn, chronic rheumatism, for torturing kidney backache, for annoying calls to urinate. But it is hard to convince people—they try a few things unsuccessfully and give up all hope and refuse to listen to anyone thereafter. Happily, I am in a position now to demonstrate to sufferers at my own expense that I have a medicine that cures these diseases. I don't ask them to spend any money to find out; I don't ask them to believe me, nor even to take the word of reliable people, but all I ask is that they allow me to send them the medicine at my own cost. That is surely fair.

To this end I have set aside ten thousand dollars, which will be used in compound my medicine. Much of it is ready now to be sent out, all of it fresh and standard. There will be enough for all sufferers, though there be thousands of them. And anyone who needs it can get some of it free. But in order that I shall know that you have a disease for which this medicine is intended, I ask you to send me some of your leading symptoms. If you have any of the symptoms in the list printed here you need my medicine and if you will write me I will gladly send you a box of it free with full directions for your use. Look the symptoms over, see which symptoms you have, then write me about as follows: "Dear Dr., I notice symptoms number"—here put down the numbers, give your age, full address, and send it to me. My address is Dr. T. Frank Lynott, 637 Franklin Building, Toronto, Can.

The ten thousand dollars I am spending for the compounding of my medicine is only a part of the money I am devoting to this cause, for the package of medicine I send you will be fully prepaid at my expense. From any standpoint you view it, YOU incur no expense or obligation. Just tell others who you know are suffering who sent you the medicine that cured you.

I am promising to give away ten thousand dollars' worth of medicine, and I will do that; I am promising to send any sufferer who writes me a box of this medicine and full directions free of charge, and I will do that.

who is giving away $10,000 worth of medicine.

I can say further that this medicine has been vouched for according to law as complying in every detail with all requirements. It will stop rheumatism, it will stop pain and backache, it will stop too frequent desire to urinate; it will heal, soothe and strengthen. You will be better in every way for having taken it. There is not an ingredient that can injure; not one but will benefit. All that I ask is that you use it yourself so that you may be personally convinced.

Owing to the large number of requests, I have had ten thousand more copies of my medical book printed. This book is new and up to date and contains complete descriptions, symptoms, causes, effects and cures of kidney, bladder and rheumatic diseases. All who write for the free medicine will be sent a copy of this grand illustrated medical book—the largest ever written on these diseases for free and general distribution.

If you need medicine such as I have, if you are anxious to be cured and don't want to spend any money LOOKING for cures, write me. Read the symptoms over and let me hear from you today.

These Are the Symptoms:

1—Pain in the back.
2—Too frequent desire to urinate.
3—Burning or obstruction of urine.
4—Pain or soreness in the bladder.

QUICK WON

Though There Was a Beginning to the Courtship Some Time Before

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The summer was drawing to a close. The leaves had not yet taken on their autumn colors, but that haze one so often sees during the close of the hot months hung about the hills and the valleys.

A gentleman whose apparel bore a distinctive foreign cut alighted from a train at a railway station and, leaving his belongings, set out on a road leading to an attractive country place. On reaching the gateway, flanked by stone pillars, he noticed on one of them a sign, "No Trespassing."

He proceeded up the walk toward the house and, reaching a terrace where through trees he could see an attractive vista, sat down on the grass, took out a cigarette and began to smoke. He was aroused by a feminine voice behind him.

"Did you not see the notice that no trespassing is allowed on these grounds?"

The gentleman arose and uncovered with ceremonious politeness.

"I did," he said.

"Then I do not understand why you should avail yourself of the place for lounging."

"To tell the truth, I have a strong prejudice against such notices."

"Why so?"

"For several reasons. Firstly, I question the natural right of any one to appropriate to his or her exclusive use any portion of the planet. But this is based on philosophic principles too deep to enter upon just now. Secondly, there is, I think, selfishness in refusing others the enjoyment of attractive and restful grounds."

"Perhaps if you owned a place like this and saw persons camping on it and injuring things you would feel differently."

"That would not alter the case, as I have stated it. I am capable of putting myself in your place and can appreciate your feeling."

"Oh, we don't own the place; we merely rent it."

"What kind of a person is the owner?"

"I don't know, never having seen him. He is a noble, good man."

"Is he handsome?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"A woman's idea of a man is often influenced by such matters."

A trifle of indignation flashed in her eye. "I assure you," she said, "that it is a very much more valuable trait than physical beauty that has prejudiced me in favor of Mr. Chenowoth."

"Chenowoth! That's an uncommon name. I am in very close touch with a man of that name."

"Our Mr. Chenowoth is abroad."

"That's where I met my Mr. Chenowoth."

"He's been traveling in Switzerland. We had a letter from him dated Geneva yesterday. He was to sail immediately for America."

"I made an ascent of Mont Blanc with my Mr. Chenowoth not a month ago."

"What's your friend's first name?"

"Bert."

"Albert? Our landlord is Albert B."

"That's it—Albert Borland Chenowoth."

"Isn't that strange that you should know him so well? Now, are you surprised that I have spoken so highly of him?"

"I certainly am surprised. I never saw anything in him to warrant such an encomium."

"You didn't? You are not very loyal to your friend."

"I didn't say he was any especial friend of mine."

"You said you are in very close touch with him."

"Did I? That doesn't necessarily mean that I admire him. But I am open to conviction. If you will give me your reasons for your own admiration you may succeed in planting it in me."

"Perhaps we had better go up to the house, since you know our landlord so well. I shall be pleased to offer you some refreshment."

"Thanks very much. I will go with you with pleasure."

When they were comfortably seated in the drawing room the lady said:

"Now I will tell you why I so admire Mr. Chenowoth. We and Mr. Chenowoth have a mutual friend, Mr. Chard. Father is a retired clergyman, and such, though they may be of the kingdom of heaven, are not usually burdened with worldly goods. Mr. Chenowoth had an opportunity to rent this place for a good sum. Mr. Chard, thinking it would be vacant, tried to get it for father for a nominal rental. When Mr. Chenowoth heard about it he told Mr. Chard that father might have it. What do you think of that?"

She gave a triumphant glance at her companion.

"Oh, Chenowoth, I suppose, feels that every well to do person should respect the cloth, and there's no better way of accomplishing that than by doing one's duty to the cloth. Chenowoth is a church member, and it is no more than right that he should give his share to the church's support. In letting your father have this place at a nominal rent he merely gave his share. I've no doubt he cut off some other contribution in the same line to make up for it."

"Well, I do think"—

She stopped. Words did not come fast enough to express her condemnation of such pessimism.

"There may be another reason for his action," continued the stranger, "a selfish reason. Now I think of it, he told me that he had heard of a very kind act by a young lady; that he had seen this lady at some function or other and had conceived a great admiration for her. He had asked to be presented to her, but just as the presentation was about to take place the girl took her departure. Chenowoth sailed the next day for Europe. I shouldn't be surprised if this girl and you were one and the same person. If so there was no generosity at all in your landlord's act. He simply made a gift to a lady he admired. We can all do that."

This statement seemed to interest the girl immensely. "Did he tell you her name?" she asked.

"I think I would know it if I heard it."

"It wasn't Cathorne, was it?"

"Seems to me it was something like that. Now, I remember; the first name was Marcia."

The lady's face was suffused with a becoming blush.

"Is that your name?" asked the stranger.

There was no reply, no need of a reply; the blush told the tale.

"I regret to have made a real trespass," he added, "not on Mother Earth, which we should all own in common, or that part of it which Chenowoth considers he owns, but on a private affair of yours. Now let us turn the subject on to something else."

But Miss Cathorne's feelings did not appear to be at all injured by the trespass, and she showed no disposition to change the topic of conversation.

"What kind of a looking person is Mr. Chenowoth?" she asked.

The stranger glanced at her with evident surprise.

"Why do you look at me that way?" she asked, with a slight blush.

"When you first spoke of your landlord"—

"Please don't call him our landlord; call him Mr. Chenowoth."

"Well, when you first spoke of Mr. Chenowoth, you said his looks were of no especial moment."

"I said that his kind heart was of greater importance."

"Well, all I have to say about Chenowoth's appearance is that he is a very ordinary looking man."

"Tall or short?"

"Rather on the beanpole order—something like me."

"Intellectual?"

"No. A theorist; very impractical. There's a bit of romance in his composition; just the fellow to perpetrate such a thing as he has in your case."

"Don't call it a thing, please; it's very lovely."

A maid came to the door and said the gardener would like to see Mr. Chenowoth.

"Mr. Chenowoth!" This came from Miss Cathorne. The stranger's face took on a very disturbed look. "Mr. Chenowoth is not here," continued Miss Cathorne. "He may be here, though some time next week."

"David says, miss, that he saw Mr. Chenowoth coming up the walk with you."

The lady looked puzzled. The stranger arose from his seat, walked to a window and looked out. The gardener, who had been standing at the front door, came to the drawing room, and, making his way to the stranger, said enthusiastically:

"How do you do, Mr. Chenowoth? I'm mighty glad to see you back to the old place sir."

"Devil," said the stranger, offering the gardener his hand, "you've given me away. I took a fancy to remain incog. for awhile, and you've spoiled it all."

"I don't know what that is, sir. When did you get back?"

During this bit of welcome landlord and tenant were, to say the least, an interesting sight. Chenowoth, who had drifted into the deception and thought that he could give the cause of his liberality without detection, was quite dumfounded at this exposure. He had forgotten that the gardener always went with the place. As for Miss Cathorne, she turned alternately red and white and didn't seem to know whether she was herself or some one else. When Chenowoth got rid of the gardener the two stood at either end of the room, both studying the figures of the rug.

Finally the man stole a side glance at the woman. Then he stole another and another. There was no evidence in her appearance that she would reopen the conversation. He must do so himself. But what was he to say? He had never intended such a denouement. It had all been so delightful, this talking about himself to one who did not recognize him, that he had been led, as it were, to the coping of a roof, where he had danced along at a giddy height with no more consciousness of his position than a somnambulist. He had been awakened by the gardener, and now the question was, Would he lose his balance?

Presence of mind saved him. He had brought on a premature love affair. The only thing to save him was to push forward to an immediate climax. Since he could not think of anything to say that would untie the knot, he yielded to an impulse of something to do. This was well, for in love impulses in the right direction are trump cards. He walked slowly across the room, and as he did so she half turned from him. Coming up behind her, he took her hand.

It was not withdrawn.

HOW A MOTHER USED
OXO
IN CUBES

"How do I use up my stale bread? Why, with OXO Cubes. They taught me a new dish that perhaps other women, who keep house, would like to try.

"With two children in the house, it is only natural that there are many broken slices and ends of loaves that would accumulate.

I call my new dish Oxo Bread Pudding

"For four persons, I soak ¼ pound of bread to a pulp in boiling water—then drain. I chop 2 ounces of suet and a small onion, and stir into the bread. Season this with a teaspoonful of minced parsley, pepper and salt, and mix in a dessertspoonful of flour.

"Dissolve two OXO Cubes in a little boiling water and stir into the pudding. Turn into a greased mold, press down and bake brown in a moderate oven.

"I have found OXO Cubes wonderfully helpful in making Soups, Sauces and new dishes, and now I do not feel as if I could keep house without OXO Cubes. They are so handy".

OXO Cubes are the greatest advance in food invention since men began to eat and women learnt to cook.

TEAM RAN AWAY AND WOMEN ARE INJURED

Mrs. Joseph Batten, of Peterborough, Receives a Bad Scalp Wound and Mrs. Dunford Sustained a Fractured Shoulder---Team Bolted While Descending Steep Hill.

Mrs. Batten, wife of ex-Ald. Batten, met with a serious accident on Wednesday evening that will necessitate her confinement tothe house for some time. Mrs. Batten, accompanied by her neice, Miss Watt, of Milwaukee, was visiting her sister, Mrs. Albert Dunford at Gilchrist Bay, Stoney Lake. On Wednesday evening the party, consisting of three, started out to visit another niece, who resides near the bay. They had not proceeded very far, when they had occasion to make the descent of a steep hill. While doing so something went wrong with the harness on one of the horses, causing them to bolt. The rig was overturned and the occupants thrown out. Mrs. Batten sustained a severe scalp wound that required nine stitches to close, and was also severely shaken up. Miss Dunford sustained a broken shoulder bone, while, with the exception of a bad shaking up, Miss Watt was uninjured.

Medical aid was summoned from Lakefield and the injuries of the party attended to. Mrs. Batten was able to return home to Peterborough last night.

The runaway team was recovered a short distance away from the scene of the accident, and were unharmed.

BOARD OF TRADE WILL DISCUSS NEW INDUSTRY

Guy Carriage Works, of Oshawa, May Establish an Automobile Business Here---Report Will be Presented From Committee Which Had Industrial Commissioner Department in Charge.

A meeting of the Board of Trade has been called for Tuesday evening next. In conversation with the chairman of the Board this morning, the Examiner was informed that one of the matters to come up, will be a proposition presented by a local solicitor from the Guy Carriage Co., of Oshawa. It is understood that the Company will open up an automobile business here, provided they can secure enough stock holders. It has been learned that a number of Toronto men will likely be stock holders, but nothing definite is, as yet, known.

The remainder of the report of the committee which engaged the Industrial Commissioner, will be presented also, and the business in connection with it transacted. In conversation with a member of the Board this morning, the former stated that this is the third or fourth meeting of the Board called this season, none of the former having materialised. "There are a lot of people in this city," he said, "who will crow down the Board of Trade, and endeavour to show how little that body has accomplished, while at the same time, these knockers will idly gossip and do nothing to assist the Board." He intimated that this was one of the things that made the Board of Trade indifferent as to how things are going. He thought that if the citizens would turn out to the meeting it would be some encouragement.

DR. WORKMAN SUSTAINED GIVEN $3,700 DAMAGES

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, QUE., NOV. 10.—Higher Criticism and its exponents in the Methodist church of Canada, secured a notable legal victory this morning, when Mr. Justice Weir delivered a judgment completely sustaining the suit of Reverend Dr. Geo. Workman for wrongful dismissal from the Professorship of Wesleyan Theological College and for libel, and gave Dr. Workman damages of thirty-seven hundred dollars against the governors. Mr. Justice Weir said the dismissal of Workman was illogical, prejudiced, biased and unfair, and the governors of the college being subordinate to the Methodist General Conference, didn't have power to decide what constituted heresy and heretical opinions.

G. T. R. PASSENGER TRAIN KILLED COW NEAR CITY

Observing a number of railway men working at the pilot of the engine of the Port Hope-Toronto train, which arrives here at 5.30, at the G.T.R. station last evening, an Examiner reporter proceeded to investigate what was going on. The men were trying to extricate a cow's tail, which had become tightly wedged in the pilot. The scene told the facts of the story, but from the engineer and a passenger, whose curiosity persuaded him to get out and investigate when the accident occurred, the reporter gathered a full account of the incident. The engineer stated that while running at a speed of between 55 and 60 miles per hour, about three miles this side of Fraserville, and when about fifty yards from a public crossing, the unlucky bossy, walked deliberately onto the crossing, with the result that she was gently lifted, and after doing an aeroplane stunt, landed in the ditch about fifty feet from her starting point. It was engine No. 3071, which was in charge of Engineer Murray.

"Did you feel the jar?" asked the reporter.

"Yes. We got a bad jar. It is a shame that cows are allowed to roam the roads in the country, endangering the lives of the passengers on trains. A cow is liable to derail a train, and it is a well known fact that they often have. It all depends on the position they are in when struck. We struck this one fair in the side, as she was standing up."

There was little damage done to the pilot, but the remains of the cow were unrecognizable.

LAVERGNE'S CHALLENGE

Bourassa's Chief Lieutenant Says That Bilingual Schools Will Never Be Abolished

WANTS TO DEBATE

Special to The Examiner:

QUEBEC, NOV. 10.—Armand Lavergne, Bourassa's Nationalist Lieutenant is out with the pronouncement that he will meet the Orangemen or any others in the heart of Toronto, or any other ultra Protestant place, and defend the rights of his Ontario compatriots under the British North America and Confederation Acts, to bilingual schools, and says they never will be abolished. He points out that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. F. D. Monk and other statesmen are products of just such schools

Crown Prince Criticised

BERLIN, NOV. 10.—The action of the Crown Prince in attending the Reichstag and openly applauding the criticism of the Chancellor's policy in the Morrocco settlement, has caused much comment in leading newspapers, which mentions his conduct as dangerous and frivolous. It is believed that Emperor William has administered a sharp rebuke to his jingoistic son.

Kicked By Broncho

A young lad named O'Hara received a heel kick on the leg from a broncho in the yards of the Montgomery House to-day. The hoofs of the animal struck the boy on the back of the leg. The boy was able to proceed to a nearby surgeon, where his injuries were attended to.

Remember the Tag Day Campaign of the Children's Aid Society Will be Carried On A DESERVING OBJECT

A last reminder that to-morrow is Tag Day and that you will be expected to donate in this manner to the funds of the Children's Aid Society. There will be no chance of escape. The arrangements are all complete and the city will be so thoroughly covered that an opportunity will be given everyone to contribute. Better be prepared to have some change with you when you come down street to-morrow.

There is a large number of tag-girls, even more than last year, and the plans are in much better shape than before. It is expected that the campaign will be more systematic and thorough as the experience gained on the previous Tag Day will be beneficial to-morrow. Headquarters for the different sections of the city, under the direction of supervisors will be established. As has been already stated the girls will be distinguished by the official badge of the Society on their arm, while they will work in couples. Rosettes for horses will also be sold and the drivers will be expected to donate.

C. P. R. Liner In Collision

Special to The Examiner:

LIVERPOOL, NOV. 10.—The Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain," crashed into the coasting steamer "Calchfaon" of the Isle of Man, late last night, and arrived into port this morning considerbaly damaged, as a result. It is understood that the other steamer is badly crippled, but is able to proceed on its way to the Irish port. The passengers on the Empress, many of them Canadians returning to the Old Country, for Christmas visits, were very much startled when the collision came, but nobody was hurt.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

BELLEVILLE TRAIN WAS DAMAGED

Several Cars Were Partially Demolished as the Result of a Collision This Morning

WERE RE-PLACED

Considerable damage was occasioned in the Belleville yard this morning by a collision which occurred at 2 o'clock between some released freight cars and the Belleville Peterborough train.

The accident happened while the coaches of the local were standing stationary, awaiting the morning journey. It appears that as an engine was shunting down the incline, some of the attached cars were uncoupled, and, owing to the brakes having been left open, proceeded onward along the track, crashing into the coaches of the local.

A coach which had only recently been overhauled and repainted, received considerable damage, and a combination mail and smoker was badly telescoped, while the baggage car was also rendered practically useless.

The damaged cars will probably be sent to Montreal for repairs and other coaches were necessary for this morning's train.

Only Three Jurors So Far Chosen

LOS ANGELES, CAL., NOV. 10.—Up to noon to-day three out of twelve jurymen had been sworn in in the McNamara trial, in connection with the fatal explosion at the Times building. ALFRED JARRY HAS BEEN ARRESTED AT WEBBWOOD

Man Who Engineered Whirlwind Wedding and Bought Houses, Automobiles and Diamonds is Caught Near Spanish River---May Face Several Charges.

TORONTO, NOV. 9.—Alfred Jarry, the young Englishman, who made an unexpected exit from the city a few days ago after purchasing two houses, two automobiles, $1,500 worth of diamonds and a carload of groceries, which he is alleged to have attempted to secure under false pretences by means of worthless checks, was arrested at Webbwood, near Spanish River. He was apprehended at the instance of the Toronto police on a charge of stealing an overcoat from John Galbraith, 227 Richmond street west. Detective Charles Taylor left for Webbwood last night to bring the prisoner back. When he is arraigned before the Magistrate it is intimated that several other charges of attempting to secure goods under false pretences will be registered against him.

Jarry arrived in the city about ten days ago. According to the police, he posed as a mining prospector. He became infatuated with a young woman who lived at 227 Richmond St., where he had taken lodgings, and a few days later the nuptial knot was tied by the Rev. J. D. Morrow. Subsequently Jarry, who claimed that his uncle owned the "Jarry" mine in Porcupine, purchased the houses and automobiles, for which he tendered checks which proved to be worthless.

Alfred Jarry was said to have been in the city as recently as Wednesday. He operated here some weeks ago.

Port Hope Youths In Trouble

TORONTO, NOV. 9.—Two youths from Port Hope, Ray Sanderson and Frederick Davis, were placed under arrest by Detectives Wallace and Newton last night, upon a warrant from their home town which said they were wanted on two charges of forgery. The men passed through the police court just long enough to be handed over to the town constable, and will be taken back to stand their trial. The amounts they are alleged to have obtained illegally is $25.

CHILD WOULD NOT EAT

Constant Cough Weakened Him

A healthy child ought to be "hungry as a bear" at meal time. Poor appetite means failing health.

The best thing you can do for a child that won't eat is to give teaspoonful doses of Vinol. This is wonderfully good in bringing back lost appetite and it is so pleasant that children take it eagerly.

Mrs. E. Stanger of Bronx Borough, N.Y., says: 'My little son, three years old, had bronchitis for a year. The cough disturbed his rest and he lost his appetite.

"I gave him Vinol for a while and it stopped his coughing and brought back his appetite. His health has improved wonderfully. He likes Vinol.'

It is the tonic iron and strengthening cod liver elements in Vinol (it contains no oil), that make it so strengthening and blood-enriching. It makes weak, pale children strong and rosy, and we guarantee it to do exactly what we tell you—if it does not you get your money back.

Lecture Was Largely Attended

Under the auspices of St. Andrew's Young Ladies' Mission Band, a largely attended meeting was held last evening in the Sunday school room, the outstanding feature of which was a most interesting talk on China, by Miss Agnes Dixon, a former secretary of the local Y. M. C. A. Miss Dixon has spent seven years in missionary effort in southern China, and from her close contact with the people of that land, was thoroughly competent to handle the subject. She confined her address chiefly to the work of the Presbyterian missions in that section, and outlined the progress made in the medical and evangelical branches.

She forcibly emphasized the pressing need of greater missionary activity and help to meet the vast requirements of the millions of dwellers in heathendom yet in China. Her talk was pleasingly varied by accounts of many of her experiences among the people with whom she laboured.

Miss G. Mowat, the president of the Mission Band, occupied the position of chairman and other numbers on the programme were:

Piano Duet—Misses Beatrice Starke and Gwen Smith.
Vocal Selection—Miss Ina Spilsbury.
Piano Selection—Miss Logie.
Vocal Solo—Miss May Laing.
Piano Selection—Jean Girven.

Afterwards substantial inroads into dainty but bountiful refreshments occupied the attention of those present, at an informal supper served in the tea room of the hall, and to which everybody did ample justice. Taken as a whole the evening was one of helpfulness and real enjoyment.

Water Pipe Burst

A water pipe burst under the G.T.R. track this morning at the corner of Romaine and George streets, adjacent to the spot where repairs are being carried out to the sewer pipes.

It was necessary to shut off the water, and in a short time several section men and men from the water works department arrived, but it was not until after some hours that everything could be righted.

Singularly enough the spot has been continually watched for some time, and the forman had only left the place a few moments previous to the burst.

A Bright Outlook

The Mark Street Athletic and Debating Club held an enthusiastic meeting last night. Some important business was transacted, among which it was unanimously decided to join in the Church Hockey League, either in part or form a team of itself. The club has a bright outlook for its physical training department, having secured the valuable assistance of Mr. Cook, seven years a scholar of Sandow, and having had considerable experience in training gymnasium classes.

There will be a meeting Tuesday night next, when Mr. Cook will conduct his first class in gymnastics.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

FRIDAY, NOV. 10, 1911

INTO THE FRAY.

After the big demonstration in Massey Hall, Toronto, on Nov. 14, Mr. N. W. Rowell, the new Liberal leader, will spend three weeks in delivering daily addresses from Monday to Friday, in different parts of the province. The places and dates will be announced later. Mr. Rowell will, in these addresses, amplify his announced platform and bring himself into personal contact with the people.

ANOTHER BROKEN PROMISE.

Sir James Whitney boasted some few years ago, when he could boast safely that he would, when he came to power, remove the administration of the Provincial License Law out of the domain of party politics. Yet, we have the Hamilton Herald (Independent) gently insinuating that Sir James has not kept his word. It remarks: "Sir James P. Whitney denies that his government will appoint a provincial license commission. And so the administration of the license law stays in the enervating atmosphere of party politics". The Herald is right. License administration has never been made a cog in the Conservative party machine, with such scandalous universality as under the regime of the Whitney Government. This condition is slightly in evidence in Peterborough, where it is very evident, breach of the License law does not imperil the license holder, or observance, save the head of the license holder, who honestly keeps the law.

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF ITS FRIENDS.

The Whitney Government, for a perfect government, is having some trouble in even satisfying its own friends. Never has a government had so many outspoken critics among its party friends and party journals. The Toronto Telegram, the Hamilton Spectator, the Ottawa Citizen, all representative and influential "Tory" journals, apply the birch pretty sharply, and we know how deep is the discontent with the results of the Whitney government's neglect of New Ontario and its interests. We know that this discontent became at one time so acute that a movement took considerable head, to separate the north country from Ontario and erect it into a new province, so that it could have for its development the benefits of progressive government—so that it could become something better than a milch cow for older Ontario. Now, the news comes from Port Arthur, that this discontent with the Whitney government, takes the form of a petition to Mr. F. H. Keefer, K.C., to become an independent Conservative candidate, as a protest against mismanagement. The petition bears the names of eight members of the Conservative executive. The Whitney government has gone to sleep, as the Tory Toronto Telegram says. If a big majority of 75 cannot keep the government awake, we might try the experiment of a smaller majority in order to concentrate the prodding.

CHILDREN'S AID TAG DAY.

Let everybody remember that tomorrow (Saturday) is Tag Day, and that the streets will be invaded by bright-faced, warm-hearted, keen-eyed girls, to catch the public, and tag them at a price—the beauty of it—to be fixed by themselves. It should not need much persuasion to achieve large success on the part of the collectors. Everybody should have coin, or coins, ready to meet their demands in the interest of one of the most beneficial of modern institutions—as important in its sphere as the Church. And more important and beneficial in one sense. The Church's chief function is to save the lost. The chief function of the Children's Aid Society is to prevent the lose. There can be no nobler work, either in its actuality, or or ultimate object and effect. In its actuality it rescues neglected and dependent children from actual ill-treatment — blows, hunger, cold, and nakedness. In its preventive function it rescues these young and plastic souls from an environment of vice in which their tender natures are hardened, and their lives saturated with vicious principles, which, allowed fre play, tend to the development of criminals, and worse than criminals, in respect of girls. There are thousands, in Ontario, who are now respected heads of families, good and useful citizens, virtuous fathers and mothers of virtuous families, who, but for the interference, good rescue work, and oversight by the Society, would have certainly been thieves, or prostitutes. To help this work is the object of "Tag Day"—to raise funds for carrying on its work of rescuing the neglected and maintaining them after rescue till they can be placed in the safe shelter of virtuous foster homes. Does not such a work appeal to you? Do you not think that a little self denial on your part, or possibly, no self denial will enable you to give freely to the girl solicitors to-morrow, the price of some luxury that you can forego, perhaps to your own advantage? The amount reached by "Tag Day" last year was $1,200; it could easily be increased fifty per cent., and should be so increased. The girls should make it a point not to miss Mr. Peck and Mr. Hall, the candidates; not so much for their donations, but to wake their interest in Children's Aid Society work, so that whichever is elected, will feel, in duty bound, if not pledged, to demand that the Government shall make provision for aiding the work of the Children's Aid Society. Drink is the cause of a large part of the conditions that call for the good offices of the society. If the revenue from a tax on bar receipts can be recognized as a legitimate income, it could with poetic justice be funded in the interests of the promotion of the objects of the Children's Aid Society.

WHITNEY GOVERNMENT AND AGRICULTURE.

Outside the actual maintenance of the institution, what has the Whitney Government done for the Ontario Agricultural College in the past two years? asks the Guelph Mercury and it being on the spot, should know. What improvements did they authorize, outside what had been undertaken by their predecessors, during the time they have held office? Has the accommodation been adequate to the demands? These are a few questions that require an answer before it can be said that the Ontario Agricultural College has received justice at the hands of the Whitney administration. The answer to the latter question can be found in the news columns of the Guelph papers not more than three months back. The College buildings are not adequate for the accommodation of those who wish to attend. No complaint can be made of the efficient staff at the O. A. C. It is thanks to them that the efficiency is kept up to its present standard, notwithstanding the neglect of the Ontario Government. There have been practically no new buildings erected at the O. A. C. in the past two years, and this alone should be proof that no effort has been made to develop the institution to the point where it could meet the ever increasing demand of the public. It is not necessary to become dependent on the questionable generosity of our contemporary to learn this. Everyone knows it to be true.

In the meantime the money has been forthcoming from the Ontario Government for the assistance of Toronto University. It is not in any sense a complaint against assistance to any other educational institution that the Mercury draws this comparison. It is for the purpose of showing that while funds could not be found to do what was right by the Ontario Agricultural College there was no lack of means to provide for Toronto University. Without going into details it may be pointed out that the expenditures of the Whitney Administration on Toronto University in the year just ended were $488,000, while the expenditure on the Ontario Agricultural College amounted to $259,000 according to the figures of the local organ of Sir James. That does not look like a fair division. It is absurd to attempt to compare the amount at present approximated with that appropriated by the Ross Government, as the Province has increased in population and the demands on the O.A.C. have increased in proportion. What the Mercury contends is that the Whitney Administration has failed utterly in making provision to meet the increased demand. As to providing for the immediate future, they do not seem to have considered that at all

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. Borden and the Nationalists have put the Canadian navy on the rocks, and now Col. Sam Hughes proposes to put the militia "up in the air."

If Mr. Rowell, the new Liberal leader, believes in omens, there is no discouragement for him in the fact that Sir Oliver Mowat, premier of Ontario, sat for North Oxford for 25 years.

Mr. Borden's ministers, as well as himself, fight shy of the navy. Hon. Mr. Pelletier, one of the Nationalist ministers in Mr. Borden's cabinet, spoke at Hon. Frank Cochrane's nomination at Sudbury. Neither he nor Mr. Cochrane referred to the navy. We know the Nationalist policy on the subject. Does Mr. Borden's silence mean assent to that?

If Rodolphe Forget, can sit for two constituencies in the Dominion Parliament—and there seems to be no law to prevent it—why can he not logically sit for three, or sit for ten ridings? Such a reductio ad absurdum, indicates the necessity of some legislation on the subject. Will Mr. Borden, after he makes up his mind on the naval question, have the courage to pass a law to prevent representative institutions from being made a mockery?

We expected it, says the Montreal Herald, but we did not expect it from the Toronto News—at least we shouldn't have done some years ago. "If we wish a satisfactory settlement of the Manitoba boundary question, and with it a navigable port on Hudson Bay we shall maintain in Queen's Park a Government that is in entire sympathy with the Dominion and Manitoba Cabinets." How the News would have foamed over such an appeal when it was a Liberal government at Ottawa!

PRAISE FROM THE ENEMY.

The Ottawa Journal, Conservative, has this to say of the platform of the new Liberal leader, Mr. Rowell:

"The manifesto by Mr. N. W. Rowell, the new provincial leader of the Ontario Liberal party, inevitably fails to offer much practical which the Whitney government is not doing, or likely to do; nevertheless, it impresses one as the utterance of a strong, sincere and intelligent man. Considerable of the platform is not novel; much of it is common to both political parties; some of it which hitherto has not been an avowed practical aim of either party is as likely to be welcome to Conservatives as to the Liberals. Nevertheless, the whole gives the impression of a man who does his own thinking, and who would have the will and force to pursue a good many of his ideas into practical action if given an opportunity.

If Mr. Rowell is a man of this kind, it is a good thing for Ontario. Ontario and Canada can be only the better for first-class men in politics on both sides. That is the best guarantee for each party keeping straight and the country getting the best possible out of the party system.

CONSERVATIVE CRITICISM.

While the Mail and Empire disparages that portion of Mr. Rowell's statement of policy that deals with reform in New Ontario, the Ottawa Citizen, also Conservative, has the following justification of Mr. Rowell's position — especially strong, coming from a strong Conservative journal, The Citizen says:

The suggestions (Mr. Rowell's) for the development of northern Ontario are on the right lines, and especially the advocacy of measures for the encouragement of prospectors and miners by the reduction of fees that, while they swell the general revenue, have been doing much to penalise the development of the mining industry. In the early days of the present government the discovery of Cobalt constituted such a get-rich-quick proposition that the mining laws and regulations that were subsequently out in force seemed to aim at hampering and restricting the enterprise of prospectors and the development of mining properties, on a sort of general theory that the whole north country was a Cobalt. It is needless to say that the whole north country has not proved a Cobalt, though certain localities are rich in minerals, but require all the facilities and encouragement that the government can afford in order to secure their development. Probably nowhere in the world has there been discovered a mineral camp, outside of Cobalt, where silver could be actually quarried out in paying quantities from the surface, and where the owners of properties could secure the capital for "making a mine," without first having to undertake that very necessary and expensive work. Other parts of the north country are rich in minerals, but not in the sense that Cobalt is. While the prospect of good results may be almost equally sure, the initial development requires the expenditure of a great deal of capital before there is any return. This state of affairs does not seem to have been grasped, consequently the existing regulations, which may be applicable to silver quarries alongside a line of transportation, constitute a hardship to deep mining unblessed with any transport facilities. In some portions of the mineral region prospectors and mine owners have ot pay tithes to the government and to lumber companies for every tree that is felled to be used in timbering buildings, or providing firewood, and the total of the fees is almost equal to the market value of the timber. This is putting a tax on industry with a vengeance.

In addition to this prospectors are so mystified with unworkable regulations, that it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to stake a claim with any assurance that it could not be jumped in a dozen different ways, notwithstanding that he is mulcted for all sorts of fees when he attempts to make good his claim. There is undoubtedly a great necessity for a revision of the Mining act and the mining regulations, with a view to encourgaing that industry in New Ontario.

JUGGLING ACCOUNTS.

(Brantford Expositor)

The rather startling announcement has been made by Hon. Mr. Matheson, financial chief of the Whitney Government, that he only hopes to balance the accounts for the past fiscal year. An even balance sheet for the past year means, in brief, that the spending powers of the Whitney Government have more than kept pace with the revenues of the province and the sums secured from the rapid depletion of timber wealth. In other words Sir James Whitney and his cohorts are drawing annually on Ontario's bank balance for current expenditures, much of which is occasioned by the demands of party patronage for increased salaries.

An even balance sheet by an extravagant government which for revenue puproses has squeezed the license holders of the province to the limit, robbed the dead, and has used the capital account of the province for current expenditure is not a creditable result of seven years' stewardship.

Hon. Mr. Matheson, financial chief of the Whitney Government, who juggles the revenue from the capital into the current account, was once a bitter assailant of the very practice which he now invokes to save his government from what would otherwise be a startling deficit.

Hon. Mr. Matheson once hated succession duties. To him they were abhorrent and meant legislation which practically robbed the dead. This was in opposition. Now, Hon. Mr. Matheson rejoices that such legislation, passed by the Liberals, gave this province over a million dollars in succession duties in 1910.

Revenue from the liquor traffic was likewise abhorrent to the financial oritic of the former Whitney opposition. It was like wringing money from the impoverished poor, and the dissapations of the people. But the brute majority of the Whitney Government has produced a change and a pride that always goes before a fall. With expenditures rising on every hand, the government now mulcts a direct percentage tax on barroom receipts. This hits only the big cities of the province, but the fund is emptied into one common channel of provincial extravagance.

It is only natural that Ontario electors should expect Hon. Mr. Matheson to put into practice what he preached while in opposition. The truth is, however, that the Whitney Government in 1910 secured a revenue of $8,891,001, all of which, with the exception of the comparatively small amount of $300,000 was derived from sources provided by former Liberal legislation.

The juggling of proivncial finances only goes to show that the Whitney Government was elected under false pretences, and such being the case, had to fall back on the very experients adopted by the Liberals for revenue purposes.

ALL YOU NEED IS A CASCARET TO-NIGHT

No Sick Headache, Bilious Stomach, Coated Tongue or Constipated Bowels by Morning

Turn the rascals out—the headache, the biliousness, the indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse and regulate your stomach; remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and that misery-making gas; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out of the system all the decomposed waste matter and poison in the intestines and bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night will surely strighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Children love to take Cascarets because they taste good—never gripe or sicken.

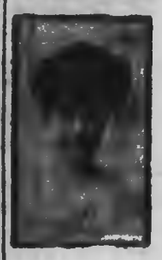
THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"OH, dear," sighed the lady-who-always-knows-somehow, "I'd just love to go. There's nothing I'd like better than to slip off to the woods on a day like this. But, my dear, I've promised to meet Mrs. L. in town—you know we are on that fair committee together—and buy some decorations."

"Why, big sister," said Molly, "didn't I hear you saying that she broke an engagement with you the other day because she had a chance to go autoing with some rich neighbours of hers?"

"Yes," said the lady-who-always-knows-somehow.



"Then, why on earth don't you telephone her and break the engagement to-dayfor the same reason?"

"I shouldn't like to do that," said the lady.

"But if she does things like that to you," protested Molly, "why shouldn't you do things like that to her?"

"That," said the lady-who-always-knows-somehow, "is just exactly the reason why I shouldn't."

"I don't see that," said Molly.

"Why, you see," said the lady, "it's quite evident from her doing that sort of thing that she isn't used to people who have much sense of honour and obligation. Now, isn't it all the more incumbent on me for that reason to show myself that kind of a person? It always seems to me that when people are rude, thoughtless or mean to me, that is just one more reason why I shouldn't be that way to them."

Don't you think that the lady's ideal in this matter is a beautiful one?

I do.

How often we say or hear others say, "She does this or that to me. I don't see why I shouldn't do it to her."

Why that's just exactly the reason why you shouldn't.

Being rude to people who are rude to you, being ungrateful to people who have shown you ingratitude, meeting thoughtlessness with thoughtlessness and meanness with meanness—why, this is to fight fire with fire. And despite the old notion that it is good to do that, I've always found that water is a much better agent for putting out flame.

Haven't you?

Perhaps you can afford to show "yellowness" towards big people who are too big and fine to be affected by the contagion.

But the smaller people are, the bigger and whiter you ought to show yourself to them. They need the stimulus of your example. They need the support of your point of view.

She was impolite to you—why shouldn't you be to her?

He was dishonest and over-reaching in his dealings with you — why shouldn't you treat him the same way?

Dear sir, dear madam, you have stated the very strongest reason why you should live up to your highest ideal of yourself in your dealings with this person.

Here's wishing you the strength to do it!

TIT-BITS

Really modern couples are just as apt to be truly mated as the old-fashioned sort of which we read about in the romances. A young Clevelander who is often described as a "man about town" became engaged not long ago, and he spoke as follows to the lady who had honoured him:

"I don't want to have anything that I must hide after we are married, dear. So I may as well tell you that I play poker, I smoke cigarettes, I drink, I stay out late, and I bet on the races."

"I'm glad to hear you say so," said the up-to-date girl, brightly. "I was so afraid that you and I wouldn't be perfect companions!" — Cleveland "Plain Dealer."

WITH THE WITS

"Maw," said the Georgia youngster, "if dad makes a record in the legislatur', they'll send him to congress, won't they?" "I hope so, my son. I've never had any use for that congress since it failed to pay me for the cotton I lost endurin' the war, an' they can't hit it too hard for me!"—Atlanta Constitution.

"I wish I was twins, mother, then half of me could do lessons and half could play."—Punch.

"Ever hear Miss Hygee sing? She can do it beautifully in five languages." "Yes, but I like her sister better; she can refuse firmly in one."—Chicago Tribune.

Willis—"I wonder if there ever will be universal peace?" Gillis—"Sure; all they've got to do is to get the nations to agree that in case of war the winner pays the pensions."—Puck.

"I have a cook now that took a college course in domestic science last summer." "You seem enthusiastic, Mabel." "Yes; I find we belong to the same secret society."—Washington Herald.

"There is one discordant note in your garden, my dear madam," remarked the aesthetic landscape gardener. "What is that?" asked the lady much alarmed. "I notice," he replied with a shudder, "that you have dogwood planted near some pussy-willows." — Baltimore American.

"You have placed the large berries on top?" "Yes," replied the affable dealer. "That saves you the trouble of hunting through the box for them."—Washington Star.

"That fellow is a source of great uneasiness to me. He may be worthy, but I wish that he would keep away from my house." "Courting your daughter, is he?" "Naw; he's courting my cook."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Reuben—Josh says that city feler gev him a hundred an' some odd dollars for thet horse o' his'n. Silas—You ain't heerd the hull of it. When he took them dollars to the bank he found they was all odd.—Catholic Standard and Times.

Diogenes hurried down the street, dragging a man by the collar. "Are you sure that's him?" someone asked. The old fellow's smile was simply cherubic. "It must be," he said. "He is a lawyer, but he admits that he can't make head or tail of the Standard Oil decision."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

SURE

The Robust Physique Can Stand More Tea and Coffee Than a Weak One.

A young Virginian says: "Having a naturally robust constitution far above the average and not having a nervous temperament, my system was able to resist the inroads made upon it by the use of coffee (tea is just as bad) for some years, but finally the strain began to tell.

"For ten years I have been employed as telegraph operator and typewriter by a railroad in this section and until two years ago I had used coffee continually from the time I was eight years old, nearly 20 years.

"The work of opening the telegraph key is a great strain upon the nerves and after the day's work was over I would feel nervous, irritable, run down and toward the last suffered greatly for insomnia and neuralgia.

"As I never indulged in intoxicating liquors, drugs or tobacco in any form I came to the conclusion that tea and coffee were causing the gradual break-down of my nervous system and having read an article in the Medical Magazine on the composition of coffee and its toxic effect upon the system, I was fully convinced that coffee was the cause of my trouble.

"Seeing Postum spoken of as not having any of the deteriorating effects of coffee I decided to give up the coffee and give Postum a trial. The result was agreeably surprising.

"After a time my nerves became wonderfully strong. I can do all my work at the telegraph key and typewriter with far greater ease than ever before. My weight has increased 35 pounds, my general health keeping pace with it, and I am a new man and a better one." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

BODY IS RECOVERED

(Port Hope Guide.)

The body of John Fishleigh, who was drowned in the harbour here on January 6th, was found this afternoon. The dredge was working just west of the freight shed and the body was brought up in the large dipper.

It will be remembered that deceased came here from the west on January 6th and registered at the St. Lawrence. He left the hotel late that night, stating that he was going to stay at Mr. Jacob Greenaway's. It is supposed that he lost his way and fell into the harbour. Mr. Elliott, night foreman at the Standard Ideal was attracted by his cries, but was unable to reach him before he went down. From the description given by Mr. Elliott is was almost certain that John Fishleigh was the unfortunate man, but every effort to recover the body proved fruitless. When found to-day the boots were gone but all the rest of the clothing was in place and very few marks upon the body. The remains have been identified as those of John Fishleigh and the question of an inquest has not been decided.

The body was recovered at the exact spot where Fishleigh was supposed to have fallen in.

Funeral.

The remains of the late John Fishleigh who was drowned on January 6th, were taken to Mr. A. W. George's morgue, and $93.35 was found in the trousers pocket of deceased. There were three $5 bills, two $2 bills and one $1 bill, and 35 cents in silver, and a post office order for $75. His watch remained in his pocket and was stopped at half past one.

Mr. Samuel Bebee, Peterborough, a brother-in-law of the deceased, took charge of the remains and the interment took place in Welcome cemetery this afternoon.

BIRTHS.

ALLEN—In Peterborough on Thursday, Nov. 9, 1911, the wife of Mr. J. F. Allen, 289 Dalhousie Street, of a daughter.

A SOUTH SEA VOLCANO

An active volcano submerged forty fathoms below the surface of the sea, is emitting its molten lava into the waters of the Pacific Ocean, according to an announcement made by the hydrographic office of the navy department in a notice to mariners received in this city.

The submarine volcano was discovered by the British man-of-war Torch, while cruising in the south seas a few weeks ago. It lies about nineteen hundred miles northwestward of Tongabatu Island, in the Tonga or Friendly group, its exact location being in latitude 20 degrees 50 minutes south, longitude 175 degrees 33 minutes west. Although out of the path of regular steamers it is in a locaion that might readily be visited by sailing vessels and by inter-island trading ships.

This submerged volcano, which is disturbing the waters for miles around, is believed to be the cause of the wide area of discolored water recently reported in that vicinity by Captain Percy Holford of the steamer Tofuo, which was passing near by in the Tonga group.

LAID TO REST

The remains of the late Mrs. John Sandy were interred in the Little Lake cemetery this afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Manning of Ashburnham, and late of Charlotte street officiated at a very impressive service at the late residence of the deceased, 280 Stewart street at 2 o'clock, after which the funeral cortege proceeded to the cemetery for interment.

Despite the inclement weather conditions, a large number of friends and relations, including many out of town visitors, assembled to show their last mark of esteem for a lady who was universally beloved. The magnificent display of floral tributes were also symbolical of the high esteem in which the deceased lady was held.

The pallbearers were Messrs. W. J. Martin, J. Penrose, G. Borwnlee, W. Bulley, P. E. Harding, T. Goard.

IN DREAD OF CROUP

Every mother dreads croup unless she knows about Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Given in frequent small doses, at the first indication of trouble, this treatment loosens the cough and affords relief and comfort. Its use should be kept up until the child is entirely recovered.

Hunters Return

Mr. A. Nelson, a big game hunter from Brighton, arrived in the city today, en route to his home. He reports a very successful hunt for his party, and states that the deer are plentiful this year. That Mr. Nelson's trip to the north in quest of big game was a successful one, was evidenced by the large deer which he was having shipped to his home. Accompanying this one was another, which was being shipped by Mr. Ganforth, another returning hunter.

HOGARTH IS OPPOSED

Former Peterborough Lacrosse Player Running for Legislature

It looks as if Don. Hogarth, the old Peterborough lacrosse player, who was nominated by the Conservatives to stand for the Legislature in Port Arthur, is going to have troubles of his own. An Independent Conservative candidate has been placed in the field. Hogarth will be remembered by Peterborough lacrosse fans as a splendid player. A despatch from Port Arthur says:

Port Arthur, Ont., Nov. 9.—Following a meeting of Conservatives dissatisfied with the nomination of Don Hogarth, a statement was handed out to-day that it had been decided to place F. H. Keefer, K.C., in the field as an independent Conservative. It is said that a petition is to be placed in Mr. Keefer's hands asking him to run. It contains, among others, the names of eight members of the executive of the Conservative Association. Keefer is at present in Toronto.

The main dissatisfaction is over the fact that Hogarth is the "real estate" partner of Mr. Carrick, who holds the Federal seat.

Local Gentlemen Attend Banquet

(MilBrook Reporter)

The men's banquet in the Presbyterian church on Monday night proved quite successful and interesting, notwithstanding the decidedly unfavourable night. The tables were beautifully spread by the ladies of the Church and looked as pretty as the dinner was toothsome. nd it is needless to say that those present enjoyed this part of the programme as much, if not more, than what came after.

Mr. H. R. Armstrong was Toast Master for the occasion, and acquitted himself with becoming dignity and grace. The speakers were Rev. Mr. Pogue and Mr. Cowan of Peterborough, the former taking for his subject "The Saving of Man, a Man's Job," and Mr. Cowan's subject "The Church's Opportunity," both being very interesting addresses, Mr. R. F. Downey of Peterborough, a splendid soloist, contributed excellent selections, accompanied by Miss Clarry. Rev. Wm. Johnston contributed a few words of felicitation at the close of the speeches.

Votes of thanks to the speakers were moved by Dr. Jemison and Mr. A. T. Armstrong, and to the ladies by Messrs. R. J. Doak and Charles Thorndyke. Miss Leitch responded for the ladies, in a dainty reply. Miss Bessie Armstrong discoursed sweet strains on the piano during the dinner. The banquet was much enjoyed by all present. — Millbrook Reporter.

Dr. Marsh In Hamilton

(Hamilton Times)

Before the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, Hamilton Branch, Rev. D. B. Marsh, D., Sc., F.R.A.S., of Springville, Ont., lectured Tuesday night on "Our Nearest Companion." Dr. Marsh, as a former member and ex-president of the local society, whose interests he did so much to promote during his stay here, made a host of friends who were pleased to have an opportunity of hearing him again and the hall was crowded to capacity. William Bruce presided.

Dr. Marsh's subject dealt with the moon and principally with the roughness of its physical features. The lecture was illustrated with a number of fine views, showing the surface of the orb. Dr. Marsh said the roughness was explained by the volcanic disturbances to which the moon is subjected. Dr. Marsh said there could be no question but that there would come a time when the earth would reach that stage.

It was announced that G. Parry Jenkins, F.R.A.S., who has been appointed to a position with the Hydro-Commission, will be obliged to move to Toronto and regret was expressed at the loss of such a valued member.

The two travelling salesmen were discussing business conditions. One of them in the book trade ventured the query: "Does Browning sell as well as ever over in Boston?" "O, yes," said the other, who represents a $3 shoe concern. "Better, in fact. People are wearing tan shoes all the year 'round now."—Judge.

The Least Fuel, The Most Satisfaction.

When You Burn the Coal See That You Get the Value

It requires no argument to prove that the range you can use every part of, at the same time, is the range that will give you the full return for the fuel you burn. On the

HAPPY THOUGHT

Range you can use the oven and the top of the stove at the same time. While ironing you can have a batch of biscuits in the oven, and when baking you can prepare dinner without cooling the oven. This is the only way to keep down fuel bills and the only true range economy. The Patent Damper regulates the heat so that it can be used on any part of the range or on all the range.

Everywhere the Happy Thought, by its many labour-saving devices, is lightening the work of the housekeepers. Its efficiency is the result of the care taken to construct it and it amply justifies anything said in its favour by those who have used it.

More than a quarter of a million "Happy Thoughts" are in daily use in Canada.

"PRINCESS SOPHIA" IS LAUNCHED

MONTREAL, NOV. 9.—A cablegram received by the Canadian Pacific Railway officials yesterday, announces the launching of their new boat "Princess Sophia," at the yards of the Bow McLachan and Company of Paisley, Scotland. This boat, while not as big as the other "Princesses" steamships that have recently been built by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is of the best construction, and is well fitted for the Pacific Coast service of the Company, in which it will be entered. It is 245 feet long, 44 ft. beam, and with 18 ft. depth, it is equipped with coal or fuel oil fuel. The new "Princess" will probably be ready for its long trip round Cape Horn to Vancouver, in eight or ten weeks. The Canadian Pacific already have one steamer making this trip, the steamship, "Princess Alice," which was reported to have arrived at Montevideo, a week or two ago. The "Princess Alice" is also a new steamship.

PROGRESSING FAVOURABLY

The work on the south end sewer, which has come in for so much discussion at council meetings this season, is now progressing with some degree of speed. The system used, is the first of its kind known to be put in operation in this city, that of using steel sheting for the sewer. On the George street sewer, at the south end, a ditch between twenty and thirty feet wide had to be dug down for some distance before the narrow trench could be dug on account of the quick sand, but in the present system the steel sheeting does away with all this digging, or at least, with the greater part of it. A ditch slightly wider than the ordinary width of a sewer trench is made, and the steel lining or sheeting saves an immense lot of work. The men were unable to work this morning on account of the rain and mud, but with the change this afternoon, all is going on merrily again.

REPORTS PRESENTED

On Wednesday evening the delegates to the recent convention at Montreal made their reports to the membership of Murray street Baptist church. Addresses were given by Mr. William Garbutt, Mr. John Riddell and Mr. Thomas Distin. The subjects of Foreign Missions, Northwest Work and French Evangelization were dealt with in a very interesting manner. Further reports will be presented next Wednesday evening by Dr. Scott and Mr. R. Harding.

BODY RECOVERED

(Port Hope Guide.)

The remains of the late Albert Darling, who was drowned in the File Factory pond, Tuesday afternoon, were recovered shortly after five o'clock. The deceased was in conversation with a number of men just north of the File Factory bridge, when the hat of one of the G.T.R. surveyors blew off into the water. Mr. Darling and Mr. William Lowe jumped into an old punt and pushed out for the hat.

As one of them leaned over to secure the hat, the boat overturned, and they were both thrown into the icy waters. Lowe managed to reach the west shore, but Darling, unable to swim, sank, and the body never came to the surface. Every effort possible was made to recover the body, but it was not found until the water was let off probably an hour and a half later.

Coroner Aldrich was summoned but deemed an inquest unnecessary.

Deceased leaves a widow and several children.

ENJOYABLE SMOKER

A most enjoyable event was held at the armouries last evening, when No. 7 Company held a smoker, about forty members attending. A small impromptu programme was given, after which refreshments were served, and a social time enjoyed. The guests assembled in the recreation room about eight o'clock, and the gathering did not disperse until about eleven o'clock. Games were played and selections on the gramaphone were rendered, which added much to the pleasure of the evening.

MANAGER IS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER "THE TOWN MARSHAL"

Following is a copy of a letter from Mills Bros., Sodus, N.Y., (managers New Theatre) in regard to "The Town Marshal" which appears at the Grand Opera House on Saturday, matinee and evening performances:

Sodus, N.Y., Oct. 28th, 1911.

Dear Mr. Wee,—We were more than pleased with the performance your Company gave us to-night. We do not hesitate to say that it gave as good, if not better satisfaction, than any popular priced company we ever played. The piece is an excellent one and the cast was a surprise to us. We want to congratulate you for engaging such competent and agreeable people. We also wish to assure you that so long as we can get Wee attractions as good as "The Town Marshal" we will take them and be mighty glad to get them. We are very careful of our attractions, as the managers know, and if our endorsement of "The Town Marshal" is worth anything to you, you can use it freely.

With kind personal regards,
We remain,
Very truly yours,
Mills Bros.

The Rev. Irl R. Hicks' 1912 Almanac

Before the great Drouth of 1901, the Hicks Almanac gave timely warning. For over two years prior to 1911, the Hick's Almanac again sounded a warning of drouth danger. And so for forty years this same friend of all the people has steadfastly refused the offers of speculators and continued to warn the public of the coming dangers of storm and weather. As they should have done, the people have stood nobly by Professor Hicks, their faithful public servant, who has grown old in their service. Send only one dollar to Word and Works Publishing Company, 3401 Franklin Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, and get his Magazine and Almanac both for one year. The Almanac alone, a fine book of 150 pages, is only 35c. by mail. Let everybody respond and receive the warnings of our National Seer for the coming year. 3d.

AROUND THE HEARTH

By Jennie Allen Moore

"Were I so tall to reach the Pole,
Or grasp the ocean with my span,
I must be measured by my soul,
The mind's the standard of the man."

THE SERVANT QUESTION

To give a whole page of my ideas on the servant question is something I promised, and therefore shall fulfil, although it seems to be a subject worn threadbare, one that has always been and always shall exist, as broad as the world, that cannot be explained, and is frequently unsolvable. It has been presented to us from every standpoint, has been reasoned out, and viewed from every possible position. Each phase of the question has received its quota of attention; it has been scoffed at, wrangled over, and debated upon, until there would seem to be nothing more to say, and when all is said and written, it remains at the starting point.

We cannot get past the fact that domestic service is so objectionable, that girls will enter any other employment in preference, and in consequence, are growing less in numbers: that they are asking more money for less service, and demanding greater privileges continually. Also that housekeepers are finding it more and more difficult to secure retain the services of a maid, that there is a lack of interest in their work, and an independence of spirit among them that is unendurable That is what I understand the so-called servant question to embody, with its branches and spur lines of discontent and dissatisfaction, reaching the lives and homes of all who are obliged to perform and accept such necessary service.

The whole system seems to be unsettled and needs readjustment. Of all the present-day problems that women have to deal with it is the most vexed. There are wrongs to be set right on both sides; there are underlying principles to be regulated, a solid foundation to be laid. Everything seems to be too haphazard in relation to the question. It lacks the business basis upon which men engage their employees, they demand qualification for the position, discharge them as often as their inability is discovered, treat them as being responsible for their side of the bargain, and failing to meet requirements, pay and dismiss them. They do not batter each other with a fusilade of questions regarding character and privileges, nor waste time discussing a contract that may only last a day. They are told to "come on in the morning, and we'll give you a trial," and if at night they are paid of, no one accuses the employer of being a hard man. This is where women should take a leaf out of man's book, not fearing the verdict of being a "dreadful woman to please," because she is trying to select what answers the demand in her case.

* * *

There is a root to the matter, deep-seated and well grounded, and it sprang up generations ago when all labor was considered menial, and slaves were compelled to work for tyrannical masters, and all through the centuries that inherent sentiment has lived, bearing its fruits of opposition to tyranny on the one hand, and an overbearing attitude of superiority on the other, a down trodden race looked down upon by an aristocratic class. The labor question and laws are endeavouring to uproot this long fostered idea that work is ignoble. They are preaching a new gospel of dignity of labour, and proving the truth of "The mind's the standard of the man."

Let us go back in Canadian history to the root of the matter, when all were on an equal footing, and the daughter of one respectable settler helped the wife of another in times of sickness, and in busy seasons. Jack was as good as his master; there were no fine distinctions; all sat together and ate at the same table. As the country grew and the Old Land customs crept in, there was resentment about people being so much better and grander than their servants, and when maids arrived who had spent years in service, and perfected themselves for their positions, who were not averse to wearing the badge of servant, or ashamed of the name, young Canada wakened to the fact that they must fall in line. But they never did it with a good grace, and this feeling of equality was largely responsible. The very air and swing of the new country breathed freedom, the maid of one year was the mistress of next, and the Old Country girls caught the infection, and threw aside much of the restraint which had not always surrounded them, and, behold! we have an independent class of workers to deal with, who demand their rights, and largely make their own laws.

Right here a great mistake has been made, and both sides have blundered. There has been a tendency to keep down this self-reliant spirit among servants, to make them feel subordinate, and they have been subjected to indignities, their demands have not been met. Then they, themselves, do not seem to realize that while the earth lasts there will always be servants and masters, and that their master is servant to some above him, that we are all servants in a way. They have not learned to understand how dignified they could be in performing their tasks, nor how much power they have to elevate their own work to the measure of their minds. "I have never been asked to do such a thing," a maid demurred, when asked to do a certain piece of work. I took the pail and brush and did the work myself. "Now," I said as I finished, "I do not feel that I have lowered myself in doing that, because I do not stoop to the level of my work, I raise it to the level of my mind." In my experience with servants I constantly try to impress that all work should be characterized by the best that is in us of mind and effort, that "whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well."

* * *

Women complain of the incompetence of the average maid. They are not qualified to fill the place, but are willing to learn at her expense. She undertakes to teach, to train, to reason with, the results varying according to the material she has to work upon, and there may be patient instruction and honest endeavour, or it may be scoldings and dismissal. Often when they have done their best, even teaching them to speak our language, overlooking mistakes and condoning faults, they meet with downright ingratitude, inasmuch as some slight provocation, or more money, will lead them to desert a woman who has been faithful and kind, and strike out for fresh pastures, no matter what the predicament the sudden departure may mean to the one who has sacrificed so much time and nerve force to help her attain to a standard of usefulness which will benefit her for all time.

On the other hand, servants accuse women of being unreasonable, of keeping them occupied too long hours, and allowing them no time they can call their own while in the house, thrusting upon them in their leisure work they are not supposed to do, and expecting them to understand the care of children as well. Let me give you the verdict of one who believes she knows: "If women would show some consideration for the comforts of their maids, treat them as though they were human beings; let them get out of the kitchen occasionally, and try and elevate them by example and good treatment, there would be less trouble in keeping help in the home."

A diversity of mistress and maid, the different ways of dealing with them, and the various demands of our homes, has raised a barrier of distrust and suspicion. This can often be broken down by timely explanations. For instance, a maid broke out with, "A woman told me to-night that she wouldn't work for people if she wasn't good enough to go in and out of the same door the family did." I explained that it was not a question of good enough, but a matter of convenience. "You know," I said, "how often after office hours my husband has little business talks in the front hall; you would not want to disturb that by walking through, and you also see how the children use the side door." She was perfectly satisfied. No two homes are conducted exactly on the same principle, and are widely diverse as it is possible to be, and should afford an opening for every style and disposition of maid. There are qualities common to all our necessities, such as honesty, truthfulness and faithful service. Beyond that, one should decide the attribute desirable in a domestic for her particular needs, then kindly overlook what is not up to the standard in other matters. (I would ask thoroughness as a chief quality.)

* * *

"When you women treat your helpers as we men do ours, you will be able to keep them," said a man to me. "We are not ashamed to be seen speaking to them on the street, or walking with them, or even driving with them, but you women would not be seen doing that." I did not try to argue the point with him, because I knew there were grains of truth in the sweeping assertion, but I resolved to think it over, and get at the reason why women do not make "jolly good fellows" of themselves, as this man seemed to feel he was prepared to do. Now, I swallowed his speech with a pinch of salt, because I think he would do all he said in a business way, but I doubt whether he would give him an invitation for a pleasure trip on his yacht, or to a dinner in his home. And why not?' The man would not want it, nine times out of ten; he would prefer his own chums.

Just so with maids. Their friendships are formed before they enter our homes, their enjoyments and diversions lie in an entirely different direction. They have individual tastes, and do not want to be interfered with. I admit there are women who seem to fear that they will lose prestige should they notice their servants on the streets, but they are in the minority, and most girls are recognized with a nod and a smile from their mistress. As to driving out together, why, if they both go, who is to mind the baby, answer the door, the telephone, take in the meat, the ice, and most important proposition, dear man, get the dinner?

The chefs in your clubs, or bachelor apartments, are not interested in your pleasures, they are interested in doing what you are paying them big wages to do—serving your meals, and doing it well. Our maids ought to have the same interest in the meals dished up in the family, and be perfectly disinterested as to your recreations. There is no reason why we should be confidential friends any more than men should. Ours is a business deal, too ;we engage them to do certain parts of our work, nd in most cases they would repel any advance towards comradeship, and give us to understand they were capable of managing themselves. I am positive that if I filled the position of servant, hired girl, in any person's house, I would keenly resent anything that prevented me from living my own life, as I chose to live it. I will relate a case of mistaken kindness to prove my contention. A friend of mine asked her maid to join the family on the Chrismas sleigh ride. She went, giving evidence of her unwillingness by a very sullen demeanor. During the drive she confided to the oldest child that she had given up her own plans with her girl friend, and came along, because she thought she was wanted to help mind the children, while the motive had been to give her pleasure, which was misunderstood.

So after nearly a quarter of a century of housekeeping, and dealing with the servant question, I have come to the conclusion that the rock of offence that prevents many excellent girls, who love house work above all else, from entering in, is not the lack of the bond of sympathy that many people believe should exist between mistress and maid, nor the absence of creature comforts, but because of the social ostracism. A girl may be pretty, neat, competent, educated, but because she is Mrs. So-and-So's maid, she is debarred from association with her equals. As if there is any degradation in one good woman working for another, whether she trims her hat, makes her gowns, or dusts her parlour! The secret lies here—the social status—and girls turn to other occupations, to office work, to clerking, anything, so long as they are admitted within the circle of society, and homes are deprived of smart, clever housekeepers just because women refuse to allow a good, pure girl to enter the ranks and mingle with her "set," because she has not specified hours to work in some public office, but prefers the privacy and protection of a home, and is willing to bear with the diversity of labour a household represents.

The remedy lies largely in the hands of the servants themselves, and the domestic science training schools hold the key of the solution. Of course, every girl cannot come in touch with that, but it is within the reach of all to raise the standard of their profession. Housekeeping is an art, and it requires an artistic eye and an expert brain to make it a success. When a girl can produce a certificate of efficiency, and can enter a home with the self-assurance that she knows her business, and elevates her calling by bringing to bear upon it scientific knowledge, dons a uniform that will distinguish her as a graduate of a certain institute, she will meet with the same respect that our graduate nurses exact from the people who employ them. Her deportment will coincide with her ability, carrying with it the dignity that will remove all barriers of social standing, her "wages" will be called a salary, she can have her own apartments and appointed hours, and command the best patronage from regular customers, whose homes will open welcome doors, and accord the same courtesy as that which the seamstress and music teacher receive.

If the fact that a woman doing her own work is not lowered in the eyes of her friends, why should the individual who performs the same tasks be demeaned? That brings me back to where I started, viz., that "The mind's the standard of the man." The whole question, therefore, resolves itself into that of a mental attitude. How this will right itself remains to be seen. My prophetic vision fails me here. The Chinaman, the Jap, and other foreign element may assist in solving the matter, but of them I know nothing by experience, only by hearsay. It is with British and Canadian girls my article deals, and the sooner women adopt the business basis, and are broad minded enough to remove the society ban, the quicker will the servant difficulty disappear. We will have to be educated up to it, and there is no doubt we will rise equal to the circumstances which alter cases in this progressive age, and in this broad and prosperous land of liberty.

"PALS" TO PLAY AGAINST EACH OTHER TO-MORROW

To-morrow's Inter-Collegiate final game between Ottawa College and Toronto 'Varsity will be interesting to Peterborough people on account of the fact that Frank Heffernan and Pete Campbell will be playing against each other, the former with Ottawa, and the latter at quarter-back for Varsity. The two boys have been "pals" all their lives. They lived in the same neighbourhood in their boyhood days, played on the same 'kids' baseball and hockey teams, in fact were always team-mates. To-morrow they are called upon to do battle against each other for the honour of their respective colleges in a game that will decide the Inter-Collegiate championship. Whatever the result of the game is, two things are certain, that both boys will play in a manner that will be creditable to themselves and to Peterborough, and that they will come out of the battle as firm friends as ever.

Past Season Essentially American League Year

This was American League year.

The Athletics proved it, the Sox proved it, and the Browns proved it. The Cleveland Naps, who allowed themselves to be beaten by the Cincinnati Reds, were the only negative in the post-season debate, and that negative a weak one.

Those baseball followers who have wagged their heads and insisted that it was a matter of class—that the National League, day in and day out, was a superior playing organization to the American League, will be forced to maintain a discreet silence. Likewise those critics who prate about the futility of short series so far as deciding the relative merits of the two teams, have no ground upon which to base arguments. The post-season series this year have been too decisive to admit of cavil.

The Sox, fourth in the American League, beat the Cubs, the runners up to the Giants in the National League, four straight games. Then came the Athletics, and they gave the Giants such a beating as they never received before. The result of the post-season series shows that this year, at least, the teams of the American League average better than those of the National.

The reason is apparent. The American League has replaced fading stars with younger and more ambitious players. The National League is just starting the process of rebuilding, which the American League has fairly completed. The American League was the weaker two years ago. Its veteran stars, captured from the National League in the time of the big baseball war, began to outgrow their days of usefulness, and the American League magnates had to have the jolts administered by the Cubs and Pittsburg to Detroit to make them realize it. When they saw the need they prepared to fill it. The result is apparent in great teams of young men such as the Athletics, Naps and the White Sox.

The old teams must rebuild. They are doing so, but the process is a slow one and the supply of young players is not equal to the demand.

Connie Mack, wisest manager of the American League, will never be caught with a team of veterans who are losing their grip. It has been his principle always to have youngsters ready to step into the various positions, and in this way his team maintains a steady average.

Fred Clarke, of Pittsburg, works along the same line, and so these two teams, year in and year out, are fighting for the top in the first division.

THREE TORONTO TEAMS ARE IN TO-MORROW'S GAMES

(Toronto News.)

The critical stage in the race for the leadership in the three rugby unions is here. On the result of the games next Saturday the ultimate winners in at least two, if not three, of the unions will be known beyond a doubt, while the troublesome question of a tie up in both the interprovincial and the O.R.F.U. will be decided by Saturday night. The Intercollegiate race is much more clearly defined, as there are only two teams left in the running, and the winner of the game here will be the team to claim the 1911 championship and the right to meet the winners of the Interprovincial-O.R.F.U. semi-final game in the struggle for the Dominion honours.

As it stands now a win for the Oarsmen at Ottawa will give them the Big Four championship, while a defeat will tie them with the Rough Riders and also with the Tigers, provided the Hamilton crew pull out a victory in Montreal.

The race in the O.R.F.U. will come to a close if the Hamilton Alerts win their game in Hamilton from the T.A.A.C. outfit, while a victory for the latter will make it necessary for the two to meet again the following week to decide the championship. Both St. Michael's and Dundas are out of the running.

A Cleancut Issue.

A battle for the Intercollegiate is a clear-cut one. Both Ottawa College and Varsity havesuffered one defeat the former losing to McGill at the start of the season, while Varsity lost to Father Stanton's youngsters in Ottawa. Therefore, everything depends on Saturday's game at the stadium. The team that walks off with the big end of the score will be the college champions for the 1911 season.

Toronto thus stands a rattling good chance of landing the championship in two of the unions, and has an outside chance of winning the O.R.F.U. Never before has the Queen City had such an opportunity to grab all the rugby honours unto herself, and a win for Varsity, the Argonauts and the Torontos would just about send this town rugby mad.

The chances of victory in the Intercollegiate look very bright, as the students have only to defeat a team which had a tough time beating them when they were at least forty per cent. weaker than they are now right in Ottawa, and then the score only gave them a margin of two points. Both teams have kept right on winning since, but Varsity's showing has been better than that of the Ottawa College outfit on the whole season. The local Collegians defeated Queens easily both here and in Kingston, and also defeated McGill twice, although on both occasions they had to go the limit to do it. Ottawa College on the other hand, were lucky to defeat Queens both at home and in the Limestone City; of course they sprung a surprise when they defeated McGill so easily last week, but judging from the accounts, the Montreal students did not play up to the form they showed against the Blue and White.

Look For a Victory.

Varsity was beaten in Ottawa chiefly because they did not have any one to return Cornellier's kicks, and also because Captain Maynard was on the side lines for the first half. Then there was also the hard and fast rulings of the two inexperienced McGill students on the question of interference, which greatly handicapped the Blue and White. With a couple of efficient officials and with their greatly strengthened back line there should be little doubt of the result and the one thing more to be feared than anything else is the way in which the College lads keep on hammering away, no matter how bad the score looks. If Varsity keeps going from start to finish they should win by a fair margin.

The Argos in Ottawa.

The Argonauts have a tough row to hoe in Ottawa on Saturday, as anyone who has played in the Capital knows, but it can hardly be any rougher than the road over which the Oarsmen were asked to travel last Saturday in Hamilton, and there they were just beaten by one point. The Scullers have demonstrated beyond question that they are an even better team away from home than they are right at Rosedale, and their chances of bringing the interprovincial race to a conclusion on Saturday is at least an even one. They came away from the Mountain without any injuries and will be able to send an even stronger team on the field at Ottawa than that which represented them a week ago in Jungle Town. Ottawa will also be stronger of course, with both Jack Williams and Gerrard on the back line, and it will be a battle royal, but if the Oarsmen show the form they did last week their chances of victory look very bright.

Meet for the First Time.

The O.R.F.U. situation is a funny one, with only two games left on the schedule; the two strongest teams in the union have not yet met on the gridiron. The Alerts, the new organization from Hamilton, have made a clean sweep of all the other teams, and judging from the scores are an exceptionally strong team, the best the old union had for some years. The Torontos, after their first defeat by St. Michael's, have gone right ahead and landed both games with Dundas and the second game with St. Miques in a commanding style. The first clash between the leaders will come on Saturday in Hamilton and if the Alerts win, the final game will not be played, as they will then have the championship cinched. But in the Torontos they will meet a much stronger team than any they have defeated up to date, and will have to go all the way to win. The loss of Fleming has been a severe one to T.A.A.C., but young Smith has shown up exceptionally well and with old Pete Flett back in form there will be a real battle in Hamilton and the chances for a Toronto victory are pretty good.

A Baseball Story

BY IRA F. THOMAS

(Star catcher of the twice world's champion Athletics, and the man who stopped the base running of the Cubs and Giants.)

NEW YORK, NOV. 7.—To violate the confidence of Connie Mack and his board of strategy is a sin unpardonable on the bench of the world's champions, but as the secret of any Mack campaign holds good only until an important series is over, I have no hesitancy in telling of some of the plans we made to beat the Giants and how we beat Mathewson at his own game.

Just as long as the "if" is in baseball just that long will fans have their own ideas as to the relative merits of the rival clubs, and perhaps in no series was this more thoroughly illustrated than in the one we just finished with the Giants. Columns of "dope," called "inside" stuff, were printed as to how the Giants were going to steal the world's series, just as they did the National league pennant. To offset this there were more columns printed as to how the Athletics' batting would offset the speed of the Giants on the bases.

To a certain extent neither of the arguments came true, as the Giants did not get many chances to steal, and those who attempted it were cut down on the paths. In only a few innings of the series did the Athletics show their true form in batting. So that part of the "dope" went askew also.

The "if" in baseball caused to be held one of the most important meetings ever conducted on the Athletics' bench a full month before the world's series started, and that "if" was Christy Mathewson. We realized that Mathewson was the backbone of the Giants, and we held a meeting to plan the attack on him.

The bravest members of the Athletics' team must have realised what a tough proposition it was to beat Mathewson, and Connie Mack realized it and made his plans a month before the series opened. It was at this meeting that every weakness in Mathewson was discussed, and before the meeting was over every member of our team knew just what Mathewson would pitch.

We first decided to analyse Mathewson, and decided on the following:

That Mathewson had a curve ball.
That Mathewson had a fast ball.
That Mathewson had a "fadeaway."

We had batted against the best curve balls in the land and we hit them, and we had batted against the best fast balls in both leagues and we hit them, but we were rather unacquainted with this "fadeaway."

MATTY'S SECRET

We disposed of the curve and the fast one and concentrated our efforts on solving the "fadeaway." Just how we discovered the secret of Matty's "fadeaway" will perhaps never be known outside of the Athletics' bench, but this much I can tell, and that is that by watching Matty closely we could tell by a certain little step he made that he would pitch this famous ball. That movement was almost minute, and I daresay even Matty did not know he made it, but every time he pitched his "fadeaway" he made that one little step that warned us of what was coming. It took a long time to discover this, but when we learned it we knew that we had accomplished a whole lot toward solving the problem. Then we watched him every time he pitched his "fadeaway," and we discovered something remarkable. Only once in ten pitches was Matty able to put his "fadeaway" over the plate.

I have since wondered why the National League clubs never studied Mathewson as closely as we did, for we have solved him, and I do not think he could ever beat us again.

Having learned this much about Matty we decided not to hit at the "fadeaway" at all, but to take it every time he pitched it.

Just as soon as we learned how he pitched this ball we studied him, and deducted that as he had very little speed on it there must be a great deal of lost motion somewhere. We also discovered that he threw it in such a manner and that he gave his arm such a peculiar twist that he couldn't get much speed on it, and also that it must be very wearing on his arm.

Then we learned that he used his curve ball in the pinches and pitched his "fadeaway" mostly to left-handed batsmen, and for them it "broke" or "faded" low, and on the outside of the plate. There were many more things we learned about this great pitcher that I cannot tell, but this much will show to what pains we went and how deeply we studied him to learn all we could about him.

"KILLING HIM OFF"

Then the all important question arose as to whom we would pitch against "Matty" in the opening game on the Polo Ground. Some of the players were eager to do what we in baseball call "waste" a pitcher, figuring that if "Matty" were right no one could beat him and that if by chance he were not right almost any pitcher could beat him. It was not an admission of fear on the part of the Athletics, but looking ahead more than one game. If we pitched one of our second string men against him, and he beat us, we would have our first string men to pitch the next two games.

We argued another way, too. We figured that "Matty" had a great chance to win his first game, inasmuch as it would be played on the Polo Ground, before his home crowd. "Connie" Mack carried the undying adulation of every Athletic player when he announced that the best plan would be to kill "Matty" off. "Connie" decided to pitch a man against "Matty" who would hold the Giants longer than "Matty" could hold the Athletics, and he announced Bender as his choice.

This move took nerve, for if Bender lost we would also have lost one of our best first string pitchers. Perhaps no one but one of us can realize what it would have meant for us to start the second game with the fact confronting us that we did not have Bender and we were one game behind.

But the decision of "Connie" Mack to "kill off" Mathewson in the first game worked better than we anticipated. We lost that game, and the worst Bender should have received was a tie game, but Bender pitched the heart out of Mathewson.

Every player of our team who stepped to the plate faced "Matty" with the one idea in his head—to take the "fadeaway." We knew every ball "Matty" would pitch. We learned that from his motions. We know when the "fadeaway" was coming, and I can safely say that "Matty" never saw an Athletic bat swing at his "fadeaway."

"MATTY" OUTGAMED

It was heartbreaking for "Matty." Here he was pitching inning after inning this famous ball, so deceptive as to baffle almost any batsman, and he saw our players watching them go by and heard the umpire call them all balls. Face to face with this situation "Matty" had then only two balls to call back upon, his drop curve and his last one, and when he began to use these unceasingly we began to hit him, and we hit every ball hard, as all those who saw the game will testify.

Although we lost that game and "Matty" beat us, we all felt that we had done what we set out to accomplish, "kill Matty off." "Matty" pitched himself out in that game and we all felt that he could never beat us again. Which he did not.

HELPFUL HINTS ON HAIR HEALTH

Scalp and Hair Troubles Generally Caused by Carelessness.

Dandruff is a contagious disease caused by a microbe which also produces baldness. Never use a comb or brush belonging to some one else. No matter how cleanly the owner may be, these articles may be infected with microbes, which will infect your scalp. It is far easier to catch hair microbes than it is to get rid of them, and a single stroke of an infected comb or brush may well lead to baldness. Never try on anybody else's hat. Many a hat-band is a resting place for microbes.

If you happen to be troubled with dandruff, itching scalp, falling hair or baldness, we have a remedy which we believe will completely relieve these troubles. We are so sure of this that we offer it to you with the understanding that it will cost you nothing for the trial if it does not produce the results we claim. This remedy is called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. We honestly believe it to be the most scientific remedy for scalp and hair troubles, and we know of nothing else that equals it for effectiveness, because of the results it has produced in thousands of cases.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is devised to banish dandruff, restore natural colour when its loss has been brought about by disease, and make the hair naturally silky, soft and glossy. It does this because it stimulates the hair follicles, destroys the germ matter, and brings about a free, healthy circulation of blood, which nourishes the hair roots, causing them to tighten and grow new hair. We want everybody who has any trouble with hair or scalp to know that we think that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is the best hair tonic and restorative in existence, and no one should scoff at or doubt this statement until they have put our claims to a fair test, with the understanding that they pay us nothing for the remedy if it does not give full and complete satisfaction in every particular. Two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

GREAT SUCCESS

The local hunting parties seem to be having exceptionally good luck this season. Word came to hand this morning that the Winch party at Buckhorn have "bagged" seven fine specimens of deer up to the present time and that there is every indication that many more may yet be shot. It is said that deer are plentiful this year, and this is confirmed by the fact that, during the last day or so frequent consignments of deer have been received at the local butchers' establishments.

"THE AVENGER"

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER I.

The man and the woman stood facing one another, although in the uncertain firelight which alone illuminated the room neither could see much save the outline of the other's form. The woman stood at the further end of the apartment by the side of the desk—his desk. The slim trembling fingers of one hand rested lightly upon it, the other was hanging by her side, nervously crumpling up the glove which she had only taken off a few minutes before. The man stood with his back to the door through which he had just entered. He was in evening dress; he carried an overcoat over his arm, and his hat was slightly on the back of his head. A cigarette was still burning between his lips, the key by means of which he had entered was swinging from his little finger. So far no words had passed between them. Both were apparently stupefied for the moment by the other's unexpected presence.

It was the man who recovered his self-possession first. He threw his overcoat into a chair, and touched the brass knobs behind the door. Instantly the room was flooded with the soft radiance of the electric lights. They could see one another now distinctly. The woman leaned a little forward, and there was amazement as well as fear flashing in her soft, dark eyes. Her voice, when she spoke, sounded to herself unnatural. To him it came as a surprise, for the world of men and women was his study, and he recognized at once its quality.

"Who are you?" she exclaimed. "What do you want?"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"It seems to me," he answered, "that I might more fittingly assume the role of questioner. However, I have no objection to introduce myself. My name is Herbert Wrayson. May I ask," he continued with quiet sarcasm, "to what I am indebted for this unexpected visit?"

She was silent for a moment, and as he watched her his surprise grew. Equivocal though her position was, he knew very well that this was no ordinary thief whom he had surprised in his rooms, engaged to all appearance in rifling his desk. The fact that she was a beautiful woman was one which he scarcely took into account. There were other things more surprising which he could not ignore. Her evening dress of black net was faultlessly made, and he knew enough of such things to be well aware that it came from the hands of no ordinary dressmaker. A string of pearls hung from her neck, her only ornament, and her black hat, with its drooping feathers was the fellow of one which he had admired a few evenings ago at the Ritz in Paris. It flashed upon him that this was a woman of distinction, one who belonged naturally, if not in effect, to the world of which even he could not claim to be a habitant. What was she doing in his rooms?—of what interest to her was he and his few possessions?

"Herbert Wrayson," she repeated, leaning a little towards him. "If your name is Herbert Wrayson, what are you doing in these rooms?"

"They happen to be mine," he answered calmly.

"Yours?"

She picked up a small latch key from the desk.

"This is number 11, isn't it?" she asked quickly.

"No! Number 11 is the flat immediately overhead," he told her.

She appeared unconvinced.

"But I opened the door with this key," she declared.

"Mr. Barnes and I have similar locks," he said. "The fact remains that this is number 9, and number 11 is one storey overhead."

She drew a long breath, presumably of relief, and moved a step forward.

"I am very sorry!" she declared. "I have made a mistake. You must please accept my apologies."

He stood motionless in front of the door. He was pale, clean-shaven, and in his correct evening clothes he seemed a somewhat ordinary type of the well-bred young Englishman. But his eyes were grey, and his mouth straight and firm.

She came to a standstill. Her eyes seemed to be questioning him. She scarcely understood his attitude.

"Kindly allow me to pass!" she said coldly.

"Presently!" he answered.

Her veil was still raised; and the flash of her eyes would surely have made a weaker man quail. But Wrayson never flinched.

"What do you mean by that?" she demanded. "I have explained my presence in your room. It was an accident which I regret. Let me pass at once."

"You have explained your presence here," he answered, "after a fashion! But you have not explained what your object may be in making use of that key to enter Mr. Barnes' flat. Are you proposing to subject his belongings to the same inspection as mine?" he asked, pointing to his disordered desk.

"My business with Mr. Barnes is no concern of yours!" she exclaimed haughtily.

"Under ordinary circumstances, no!" he admitted. "But these are not ordinary circumstances. Forgive me if I speak plainly. I found you engaged in searching my desk. The presumption is that you wish to do the same thing to Mr. Barnes'."

"And if I do, sir!" she demanded, "what concern is it of yours? How do you know that I have not permission to visit his rooms—that he did not himself give me this key?"

She held it out before him. He glanced at it and back into her face.

"The supposition," he said, "does not commend itself to me."

"Why not?"

He looked at the clock.

"You see," he declared, "that it is within a few minutes of midnight. To be frank with you, you do not seem to me the sort of person likely to visit a bachelor such as Mr. Barnes, in a bachelor flat, at this hour, without some serious object."

She kept silence for several moments. Her bosom was rising and falling quickly, and a brilliant spot of colour was burning in her cheeks. Her head was thrown a little back, she was regarding him with an intentness which he found almost disconcerting. He had an uncomfortable sense that he was in the presence of a human being who, if it had lain in her power, would have killed him where he stood. Further, he was realizing that the woman whom at first glance he had pronounced beautiful, was absolutely the first of her sex whom he had ever seen who satisfied completely the demands of a somewhat critical and highly cultivated taste. The silence between them seemed extended over a time crowded and rich with sensations. He found time to marvel at the delicate whiteness of her bosom, gleaming like polished ivory under the network of her black gown, to appreciate with a quick throb of delight the slim roundness of her perfect figure, the wonderful poise of her head, the soft richness of her braided hair. Every detail of feature and of toilette seemed to satisfy to the last degree every critical faculty of which he was possessed. He felt a little shiver of apprehension when he recalled the cold brutality of the words which had just left his lips! Yet how could he deal with her differently?

"Is this man—Morris Barnes—your friend?"

"your friend?" she asked, breaking a silence which had done more than anything else to unnerve him.

"No!" he answered. "I scarcely know he man. I have never seen him except in the lift, or on the stairs."

"Then you have no excuse for keeping me here," she declared. "I may be his friend, or I may be his enemy. At least I possess the key of his flat, presumably with his permission. My presence here I have explained. I can assure you that it is entirely accidental! You have no right to detain me for a moment."

The clock on the mantelpiece struck midnight. A sudden passion surged in his veins, a passion which, although at the time he could not have classified it, was assuredly a passion of jealousy. H remembered the man Barnes, whom he hated.

"You shall not go to his rooms—at this hour!" he exclaimed. "You don't know the man! If you were seen—"

She laughed mockingly.

"Let me pass!" she insisted.

He hesitated. She saw very clearly that she was conquering. A moment before she respcted this man. After all, though, he was like the others.

"I will go with you and wait outside," he said doggedly. "Barnes, at this hour—is not always sober!"

Her lips curled.

"Be wise," she said, "and let me go. I do not need your protection or——"

She broke off suddenly. The interruption was certainly startling enough. From a table only a few feet off came the shrill tinkle of a telephone bell. Wrayson mechanically stepped backwards and took the receiver into his hand.

"Who is it?" he asked.

The voice which answered him was faint but clear. It seemed to Wrayson to come from a long way off.

"Is that Mr. Wrayson's flat in Cavendish Mansions?" it asked.

"Yes!" Wrayson answered. "Who are you?"

"I am a friend of Mr Morris Barnes," the voice answered. "May I apologize for calling you up, but the matter is urgent. Can you tell me if Mr. Barnes is in?"

"I am not sure, but I believe he is never in before one or two o'clock," Wrayson answered.

"Will you write down a message, and leave it in his letter-box?" the voice asked anxiously. "It is very important or I would not trouble you."

"Very well," Wrayson answered. "What is it?"

"Tell him instantly he returns to leave his flat and go to the Hotel Francis. A friend is waiting there for him, the friend whom he has been expecting!"

"A lady?" Wrayson remarked a little sarcastically.

"No!" the voice answered. "A friend. Will you do this? Will you promise to do it?"

"Very well," Wrayson said. "Who are you, and where are you ringing up from?"

"Remember you have promised!" was the only reply.

"All right! Tell me your name," Wrayson demanded.

No answer. Wrayson turned the handle of the instrument viciously.

"Exchange," he asked, "who was that talking to me just now?"

"Don't know." was the prompt answer. "We can't remember all the calls we get. Ring off, please!"

Wrayson laid down the receiver and turned round with a sudden sense of apprehension. There was a feeling of emptiness in the room. He had not heard a sound, but he knew very well what had happened. The door was slightly open and the room was empty. She had taken advantage of his momentary absorption to slip away.

He stepped outside and stood by the lift listening. The landing was deserted, and there was no sound of any one moving anywhere. The lift itself was on the ground floor. It had not ascended recently or he must have heard it. He returned to his room and softly closed the door. Again the sense of emptiness oppressed him. A faint perfume around the place where she had stood came to him like a whiff of some delicious memory. He set his teeth, lit a cigarette, and sitting down at his desk wrote a few lines to his neighbour, embodying the message which had been given him. With the note in his hand he ascended to the next floor.

There was apparently no one in flat number 11, but he rang the bell, and listened. There was no answer, no sound of anyone moving within. For nearly ten minutes he waited—listening. He was strongly tempted to open the door with his own key, and see for himself if she were there. Then he remembered that Barnes was a man whom he barely knew, and cordially disliked, and if he should return unexpectedly, the situation would be a little difficult to explain. Reluctantly he descended to his own flat, and mixing himself a whisky and soda, lit a pipe and sat down, determined to wait until he heard Barnes return. In less than a quarter of an hour he was asleep!

CHAPTER II.

Wrayson sat up with a sudden and violent start. His pipe had fallen on to the floor, leaving a long trail of grey ash upon his waistcoat and trousers. The electric lights were still burning, but of the fire nothing remained but a pile of ashes. As soon as he could be said to be conscious of anything, he was conscious of two things. One was that he was shivering with cold, the other was that he was afraid.

Wrayson was by no means a coward. He had come once or twice in close touch with dangerous happenings, and conducted himself with average pluck. He never attempted to conceal from himself, however, that these few minutes were minutes of breathless, unreasoning fear. His heart was thumping against his side, and the muscles at the back of the neck were almost numb as he slowly looked around the room. His eyes paused at the door. It was slightly open, to his nervous fancy it seemed to be shaking. His teeth chattered, he felt his forehead, and it was wet.

He rose to his feet and listened. There was no sound anywhere from above or below. He tried to remember what it was that had wakened him so suddenly. He could remember nothing except that awful start. Something must have disturbed him! He listened again. Still no sound. He drew a little breath, and with his eyes glued upon the half-closed door recollected that he himself had left it open that he might hear Barnes go upstairs. With a little laugh, still not altogether natural, he moved to the spirit decanter and drank off half a wineglassful of neat whisky!

"Nerves," he said softly to himself. "This won't do! What an idiot I was to go to sleep there!"

He glanced at the clock. It was five minutes to three. Then he moved towards the door, and stood for several minutes with the handle in his hand. Gradually his confidence was returning. He listened attentively. There was not a sound to be heard in the entire building. He turned back into the room with a little sigh of relief.

"Time I turned in," he muttered. "Wonder if that's rain."

He lifted the blind and looked out. A few stars were shining still in a misty sky, but a bank of clouds was rolling up, and rain was beginning to fall. The pavements were already wet, and the lamp-posts obscured. He was about to turn away when a familiar but unexpected sound from the street immediately below attracted his notice. The window was open at the top, and he had distinctly heard the jingling of a hansom bell below.

He threw open the bottom sash and leaned out. A hansom cab was waiting at the entrance to the flats. Wrayson glanced once more instinctively towards the clock. Who on earth of his neighbors could be keeping a cab waiting outside at that hour in the morning? With the exception of Barnes and himself, they were most of them early people. Once more he looked out of the window. The cabman was leaning forward in his seat with his head resting upon his folded arms. He was either tired out or asleep. The attitude of the horse was one of extreme and wearied dejection. Wrayson was on the point of closing the window when he became aware for the first time that the cab had an occupant. He could see the figure of a man leaning back in one corner, he could even distinguish a white-gloved hand resting upon the apron. The figure was not unlike the figure of Barnes, and Barnes, as he happened to remember, always wore white gloves in the evening. Barnes it probably was, waiting—for what? Wrayson closed the window a little impatiently, and turned back into the room.

"Barnes and his friends can go to the devil," he muttered. "I am off to bed."

He took a couple of steps across the room, and then stopped short. The fear was upon him again. He felt his heart almost stop beating, a cold shiver shook his whole frame. He was standing facing the half-open door, and outside on the stone steps he heard the soft, even footfall of slippered feet, and the gentle rustling of a woman's gown.

He was not conscious of any movement, but when she reached the landing he was standing there on the threshold, with the soft halo of light from behind shining on to his white, fiercely questioning face. She came towards him without speech, and her veil was lowered so that he could only imperfectly see her face, but she walked as one newly recovered from illness, with trembling footsteps, and with one hand always upon the banisters. When she reached the corner she stopped, and seemed about to collapse. She spoke to him, and her voice had lost all its quality. It sounded harsh and unreal.

"Why are you—spying on me?" she asked.

"I am not spying," he answered. "I have been asleep—and woke up suddenly."

"Give me—some brandy!" she begged

She stood upon the threshold and drank from the wineglass which he had filled When she gave it back to him, he noticed that her fingers were steady

"Will you come downstairs, and let me out?" she asked. "I have looked down, and it is all dark on the ground floor I am not sure that I know my way."

He hesitated but only for a moment. Side by side they walked down four flights of stairs in unbroken silence. He asked no questions, she attempted no explanation. Only when he opened the door and she saw the waiting hansom she very nearly collapsed. For a moment she clung to him.

"He is there—in the cab," she moaned. "Where can I hide?"

"Whoever it is," Wrayson answered, with his eyes fixed upon the hansom, "he is either drunk or asleep."

"Or dead!" she whispered in his ear. "Go and see!"

Then, before Wrayson could recover from the shock of her words, she was gone, flitting down the unlit side of the street, with swift silent footsteps. His eyes followed her mechanically. Then, when she had turned the cornre, he crossed the pavement towards the cab. Even now he could see little of the figure in the corner for his silk hat was drawn down over his eyes.

"Is that you, Barnes?" he asked.

There came not the slightest response. Then for the first time the hideous meaning of those farewell words of hers broke in upon his brain. Had she meant it? Had she known or guessed? He leaned forward and touched the white-gloved hand. He raised it and let it go. It fell like a dead, inert thing. He stepped back and confronted the cabman, who was rubbing his eyes.

"There's something wrong with your fare, cabby," he said.

The cabby raised the trap door, looked down, and descended heavily on to the pavement.

"Well, I'm blowed!" he said. "Here, wake up ,guv'nor!"

There was no response. The cabby threw open the apron of the cap and gently shook the recumbent figure.

"I can't wait 'ere all night for my fare!" he exclaimed. "Wake up, God luv us!" he broke off.

He stepped hastily back on to the pavement, and began tugging at one of his lamps.

"Push his hat back, sir," he said. "Let's 'ave a look at 'im."

Wrayson stood upon the step of the cab and lifted the silk hat from the head of the recumbent figure. Then he sprang back quickly with a little exclamation of horror. The lamp was shining full now upon the man's face, livid and white, upon his staring but sightless eyes ,upon something around his neck, a fragment of silken cord, drawn so tightly that the flesh seemed to hang over and almost conceal it.

"Throttled, by God!" the cabman exclaimed. "I'm off to the police station."

He clambered up to his seat, and without another word struck his horse with the whip. The cab drove off and disappeared. Wrayson turned slowly round, and, closing the door of the flats, mounted with leaden feet to the fourth storey.

He entered his own rooms, and walked without hesitation to the window, which was still open. The fresh air was almost a necessity, for he felt himself being slowly stifled. His knees were shaking, a cold icy horror was numbing his heart and senses. A feeling of nightmare was upon him, as though he had risen unexpectedly from a bed of delirium. There in front of him, a little to the left, was the broad empty street amongst whose shadows she had disappeared. On one side was the Park, and there was obscurity indefinable, mysterious; on the other a long row of tall mansions, a rain soaked pavement, and a curving line of gas lamps. Beyond, the river, marked with a glittering arc of yellow dots; further away the glow of the sleeping city. Shelter enough there for any one—even for her. A soft, damp breeze was blowing in his face; from amongst the dripping trees of the Park the birds were beginning to make their morning music. Already the blackness of night was passing away, the clouds were lightening, the stars were growing fainter. Wrayson leaned a little forward. His eyes were fixed upon the exact spot where she had crossed the road and disappeared. All the horror of the coming day and the days to come loomed out from the background of his thoughts.

CHAPTER III.

The murder of Morris Barnes, considered merely as an event, came as a godsend to the halfpenny press, which has an unwritten but immutable contract with the public, to provide it with so much sensation during the week, in season or out of season. Nothing else was talked about anywhere. Under the influence of the general example, Wrayson found himself within a few days discussing its details wih perfect coolness, and with an interest which never flagged. He seemed continually to forget his own personal and actual connection with the affair.

It was discussed, amongst other places, at the Sheridan Club, of which Wrayson was a member, and where he spent most of his spare time. At one particular luncheon party the day after the inquest, nothing else was spoken of. For the first time, in Wrayson's hearing, a new and somewhat ominous light was thrown upon the affair.

There were four men at the luncheon party, which was really not a luncheon party at all, but a promiscuous coming together of four of the men who usually sat at what was called the Colonel's table. First of all there was the Colonel himself—Colonel Edgar Fitzmaurice, C.B., D.S.O.—easily the most popular member of the club, a distinguished retired officer, white-haired, kindly and genial, a man of whom no one had ever heard another say an unkind word, whose hand was always in his none too well-filled pockets, and whose sympathies were always ready to be enlisted in any forlorn cause, deserving or otherwise. At his right hand sat Wrayson; on his left Sydney Mason, a rising young sculptor, and also a popular member of this somewhat Bohemian circle. Opposite was Stephen Heneage, a man of a different and more secretive type. He called himself a barrister, but he never practised; a journalist at times, but he seldom put his name to anything he wrote. His interests, if he had any, he kept to himself. In a club where a man's standing was reckoned by what he was and what he produced, he owed such consideration as he received to a certain air of reserved strength, the more noteworthy amongst a little coterie of men, who amongst themselves were accustomed to speak their minds freely, and at all times. If he was never brilliant, he had never been heard to say a foolish thing or make a pointless remark. He moved on his way through life, and held his place there more by reason of certain negative qualities which, amongst a community of optimists, were universally ascribed to him ,than through any more personal or likeable gifts. He had a dark, strong face, but a slim, weakly body. He was never unduly silent, but he was a better listener than talker. If he had no close friends, he certainly had no enemies. Whether he was rich or poor no man knew, but next to the Colonel himself, no one was more ready to subscribe to any of those charities which the Sheridanites were continually inaugurating on behalf of their less fortunate members. The man who succeeds in keeping the "ego" out of sight, as a rule neither irritates nor greatly attracts. Stephen Heneage was one of those who stood in this position.

They were talking about the murder, or rather the Colonel was talking and they were listening.

"THE AVENGER"

"There is one point," he remarked, filling his glass and beaming good-humouredly upon his companions, "which seems to have been entirely overlooked. I am referring to the sex of the supposed assassin—"

Wrayson looked up inquiringly. It was a point which interested him.

"Nearly all of you have assumed," the Colonel continued, "that it must have taken a strong man to draw the cord tight enough to have killed that poor fellow without any noticeable struggle. As a matter of fact, a child with that particular knot could have done it. It requires no strength, only delicacy of touch, rapidity and nerve."

"A woman, then——" Wrayson began.

"Bless you, yes! a woman could have done it easily," the Colonel declared, "only unfortunately there don't seem to have been any women about. Why, I've seen it done in Korea with a turn of the wrist. It's all knack."

Wrayson shuddered slightly. The Colonel's words had troubled him more than he would have cared to let any one know.

"Woman or man or child," Mason remarked, "the person who did it seems to have vanished in some remarkable manner from the face of the earth."

"He certainly seems," the Colonel admitted, "to have covered up his traces with admirable skill. I have read every word of the evidence at the inquest, and I can understand that the police are completely confused."

Heneage nodded assent, and the Colonel returned to the subject with avidity a few moments later.

"This man Morris Barnes," he affirmed, "seems to have been a somewhat despicable—at any rate, a by no means desirable individual. He was of Jewish origin, and he had not long returned from South Africa, where Heaven knows what his occupation was. The money of which he was undoubtedly possessed he seems to have spent, or at any rate some part of it, in aping the life of a dissipated man about town. He was known to the fair promenaders of the Empire and Alhambra, he was an habitue of the places where these—er—ladies partake of supper after the exertions of the evening. Of home life or respectable friends he seems to have had none."

"This," Mason declared, leaning back and lighting a cigarette, "is better than the newspapers. Go on, Colonel! Your biography may not be sympathetic, but it is life-like!"

The Colonel's eyes were full of a distinct and vivid light. He scarcely heard the interruption. He was on fire with his subject.

"You see," he continued, "that this man's days were spent amongst a class where the passions run loose, where restraint is an unknown virtue, where self and sensuality are the upraised gods. One can easily imagine that from amongst such a slough might spring at any time the weed of tragedy. In other words, this man Morris Barnes moved amongst a class of people to whom murder, if it could be safely accomplished, would be little more than an incident."

The Colonel lit a cigar and leaned back in his chair. He was enjoying himself immensely.

"The curious part of the affair is, though," he continued deliberately, "that this murder, as I suppose we must call it, bears none of the hallmarks of rude passion. On the contrary, it suggests in more ways than one the touch of the finished artist. The man's whole evening has been traced without the slightest difficulty. He dined at the Cafe Royal alone, promenaded afterwards at the Alhambra, and drove on about supper-time to the Continental. He left there at 12.30 with a couple of ladies whom he appeared to know fairly well, called at their flat for a drink, and sent one out to his cabby—rather unusual forethought for such a bounder. When he reappeared and directed the man to drive him to Cavendish Mansions, Battersea, the driver tried to excuse himself. Both he and his horse were dead tired, he said. Barnes, however, insisted upon keeping him, and off they went. At Cavendish Mansions, Barnes alighted and offered the man a sovereign. Naturally enough the fellow could not change it, and Barnes went in to get some silver from his rooms, promising to return in a minute or two. The cabby descended and walked to the corner of the street to see if he could beg a match for his pipe from any passer-by. He may have been away for perhaps five minutes, certainly no more during which time he stood with his back to the Mansions. Seeing no one about, he returned to his cab, ascended to his seat, naturally without looking inside, and fell fast asleep. The next thing he remembers is being awakened by Wrayson here! So much for the cabby."

"What a fine criminal judge was lost to the country, Colonel, when you chose the army for a career," Mason remarked, turning round to order some coffee. "Such coherence—such an eye for detail. Pass the matches, Wrayson. Thanks, old chap!"

The Colonel smiled placidly.

"I am afraid," he said, "that I should never have had the heart to sentence anybody to anything but I must admit that things of this sort do interest me. I love to weigh them up and theorize. The more melodramatic they are the better."

Heneage helped himself to a cigarette from Mason's case, and leaned back in his chair.

"I never have the patience," he remarked, "to read about these things in the newspapers, but the Colonel's resume is always thrilling. Do go on. There won't be any pool till four o'clock."

The Colonel smiled good-naturedly.

"It's good of you fellows to listen to my prosing," he remarked. "No use denying that it is a sort of hobby of mine. You all know it. Well, we'll say we've finished with the cabby, then. Enter upon the scene, of all people in the world, our friend Wrayson!"

"Hear, hear!" murmured Mason.

Wrayson changed his position slightly. With his head resting upon his hand, he seemed to be engaged in tracing patterns upon the tablecloth.

"Wrayson knows nothing of Barnes beyond the fact that they are neighbours in the same flat. Being the assistant-editor of a journal of world-wide fame, however, he has naturally a telephone in his flat. By means of that instrument, he receives a message in the middle of the night from an unknown person in an unknown place, which he is begged to convey to Barnes. The message is in itself mysterious. Taken in conjunction with what happened to Barnes, it is deeply interesting. Barnes, it semes, is to go immediately on his arrival, at whatever hour, to the Hotel Francis. Presumably he would know from whom the message came, and the sender does not seem to have doubted that if it was conveyed to Barnes he would obey the summons. Wrayson agrees to and does deliver it. That is to say, he writes it down and leaves it in the letter-box of Barnes' door, Barnes not having yet returned. Now we begin to get mysterious. That communication from our friend here has not been discovered. It was not in the letter-box; it was not upon the person of the dead man. We cannot tell whether or not he ever received it. I believe that I am right, so far?"

"Absolutely," Wrayson admitted.

"Our friend Wrayson, then," the Colonel continued, beaming upon his neighbour, "instead of going to bed like a sensible man, takes up a book and falls asleep in his easy-chair. He wakes up about three or four o'clock, and his attention is then attracted by the jingling of a hansom bell below. He looks out of window and sees a cab, both the driver and the occupant of which appear to be asleep. The circumstances striking him as somewhat unusual, he descends to the street and finds—well, rather more than he expected. He finds the cabman asleep, and his fare, scientifically and effectually throttled by a piece of silken cord."

Wrayson turned to the waiter and ordered a liqueur brandy.

"Have one, you fellows?" he asked. "Good! Four, waiter."

He tossed his own off directly it arrived. His lips were pale, and the hand which raised the glass to his lips shook. Heneage alone, who was watching him through a little cloud of tobacco smoke, noticed this.

"Have you finished with me, Colonel?" Wrayson asked.

"Practically," the Colonel answered, smiling, "unless you can answer one of the three queries suggested by my resume. First, who killed Morris Barnes? Secondly, when was it done? Thirdly, where was it done? I have left out a possible fourth, why was it done? Because, in this case, I think that the motive and the man are practically identical. I mean that if you discover one, you discover the other."

"You are a magician, Colonel," he declared quietly. "I glanced through this case in the paper, and it did not even interest me. Since I have listened to you I have fallen under the spell of the mysterious. Have you any theories?"

The Colonel's face fell a little.

"Well, I am afraid not," he admitted regretfully. "To be perfectly interesting the affair certainly ought to present something more definite in the shape of a clue. You see, providing we accept the evidence of Wrayson and the cabman, and I suppose," he added, laying his hand affectionately upon Wrayson's shoulder, "we must, the actual murderer is a person absolutely unseen or unheard of by any one. If you are all really interested, we will discuss it again in a week's time after the adjourned inquest."

"I, for one, shall look forward to it," Heneage remarked, glancing across towards Wrayson. "What about a pool?"

"I'm on," Wrayson declared, rising a little abruptly.

"And I," Mason assented.

"And I can't," the Colonel said regretfully. "I must go down to Balham and see poor Carlo Mallini. I hear he's very queer."

The Colonel loved pool,, and he hated a sick-room. The click of the billiard balls reached him as he descended the stairs, but he only sighed and set out manfully for Charing Cross. On the way he entered a fruiterer's shop and enquired the price of grapes. They were more than he expected, and he counted out the contents of his trousers pockets before purchasing.

"A little short of change," he remarked cheerfully. "Yes! all right, I'll take them."

He marched out, swinging a paper bag between his fingers, travelled third class to Balham, and sat for a couple of hours with the invalid whom he had come to see, a lonely Italian musician, to whom his coming meant more than all the medicine his doctor could prescribe. He talked to him glowingly of the success of his recent concert (more than a score of the tickets sold had been paid for secretly by the Colonel himself and his friends), prophesied great things for the future, and laughed away all the poor fellow's fears as to his condition. There were tears in his eyes as he walked to the station, for he had visited too many sick beds to have much faith in his own cheerful words, and all the way back to London he was engaged in thinking out the best means of getting the musician sent back to his own country. Arrived at Charing Cross, he looked longingly towards the club, and ruefully at the contents of his pocket. Then with a sigh he turned into a little restaurant and dined for eighteenpence.

CHAPTER IV.

Exactly one week later, six men were smoking their after-dinner cigars at the same round table in the dining-room at the Sheridan Club. As a rule, it was the hour when, with all the reserve of the day thrown aside, badinage and jest reigned supreme, and the humourist came to his own. To-night, chairs were drawn a little closer together, voices were subdued, and the conversation was of a more serious order. Not even the pleasant warmth of the room, the fragrance of tobacco, and the comfortable sense of having dined, could altogether dispel a feeling of uneasiness which all more or less shared. It chanced that all six were friends of Herbert Wrayson's.

The Colonel, as usual, was in the chair, but even on his kindly features the cloud hovered.

"Of course," he said, "none of us who know Wrayson well would believe for a moment that he could be connected in any way with this beastly affair. The unfortunate part of it is that others, who do not know him, might easily be led to think otherwise!"

"It is altogether his own fault, too," Mason remarked. "He gave his evidence shockingly."

"And his movements that night, or rather that morning, were certainly a little peculiar," another man remarked. "His connection with the affair seemed to consist of a series of coincidences. The law does not look favourably upon coincidences!"

"But, after all," the Colonel remarked, "he scarcely knew the fellow! Just nodded to him on the stairs, and that sort of thing. Why, there isn't a shadow of a motive!"

"We can't be sure of that, Colonel," Heneage remarked quietly. "I wonder how much we really know of the inner lives of even our closest friends? I fancy that we should be surprised if we realized our ignorance!"

The Colonel stroked his grey moustache thoughtfully.

"That may be true," he said, "of a good many of us. Wrayson, however, never struck me as being a particularly secretive sort of chap."

"Unfortunately, that counts for very little," Heneage declared. "The things which surprise us most in life come often from the most unlikely people. We none of us mean to be deceitful, but a perfectly honest life is a luxury which few of us dare in dulge in."

The Colonel regarded him gravely.

"I hope," he said, "that you don't mean that you consider Wrayson capable——"

"I wasn't thinking of Wrayson at all," Heneage interrupted. "I was generalizing. But I must say this. I think that, given sufficient provocation or motive, there isn't one of us who wouldn't be capable of committing murder. A man's outer life is lived according to the laws of circumstances and society; his inner one no one knows anything about, except himself—and God!"

Heneage shrugged his shoulders and lit a cigarette.

"No!" he said, "I am not cynical. I simply have a weakness for the truth. You will find it it rather a hard material to collect if you set out in earnest. But to return to Wrayson. Let me ask you a question. We are all friends of his more or less intimate friends. You would all of you scout the idea of his having any share in the murder of Morris Barnes. What did you make of his evidence at the inquest this afternoon? What do you think of his whole deportment and condition?"

"I can answer that in one word," the Colonel declared. "I think that it is unfortunate. The poor fellow has been terribly upset, and his nerves have not been able to stand the strain. That is all there is about it."

"Wrayson has been working up to the limit for years," Mason remarked, "and he's not a particularly strong chap. I should say that he was about due for a nervous breakdown."

A waiter approached the table and addressed the Colonel—he was wanted on the telephone. During his absence, Heneage leaned back in his chair and relapsed into his usual imperturbability. He was known amongst his friends generally as the silent man. It was very seldom that he contributed so much to their discussions as upon this occasion. Perhaps for that reason his words, when he spoke, always carried weight. Mason changed his place and sat beside him. The others had wandered off into a discussion upon a new magazine.

"Between ourselves, Heneage," Mason said quietly, "have you any thing at the back of your head about Wrayson?"

Heneage did not immediately reply. He was gazing at the little cloud of blue tobacco smoke which he had just expelled from his lips.

"There is no reason," he declared, "why my opinion should be worth any more than any one else's. I think as highly of Wrayson as any of you."

"Granted," Mason answered. "But you have a theory or an idea of some sort concerning him. What is it?"

"If you really want to know," Heneage said, "I believe that Wrayson has kept something back. It is a very dangerous thing to do, and I believe that he realizes it. I believe that he has some secret knowledge of the affair which he has not disclosed—knowledge which he has kept out of his evidence altogether."

"A—guilty—knowledge?" Mason whispered.

Sciatica AND Lumbago

Suffered for Twenty-five Years and Could Get No Relief

Now Tells of the Wonderful Results Obtained by the Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Sciatica, neuralgia and sciatic rheumatism are the result of a run-down nervous system. For this reason all treatments must necessarily fail which do not build up the nervous system.

Mr. Collins suffered for twenty-five years and never was able to obtain satisfactory treatment until he began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. While the Nerve Food forms new blood and restores the exhausted nervous system, the Kidney-Liver Pills invigorate the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mr. W. T. Collins, Morpeth, Ont., writes: "It affords me pleasure to be able to speak favourably of two of Dr. Chase's medicines—the Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. I had been a sufferer for twenty-five years from sciatica, lumbago and neuralgia and tried almost all the medicines I could hear of, without one particle of benefit, until I commenced to use Dr. Chase's. I noticed an improvement before I had used two boxes, and the benefits obtained by continued use have been wonderful. I have so much confidence in these two medicines that I have recommended them to dozens of my friends, and I have yet to hear of a single case in which they failed to give satisfaction."

Dr. Chase's medicines are for sale by all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

The Peerless Peninsular

a durable cast-iron range with modern conveniences

You don't want to use a range as a step-ladder—as the ordinary thing—but you do want a strong, well-built range. This picture is given here to show that the oven door — a weak spot in most ranges—is a firm, strong piece of construction in the Peninsular and it is typical of the whole make-up of this durable range.

Some people prefer a cast-iron range but want one or two features usually found only in steel ranges.

The Peerless

is designed for just such people.

It has the perfectly-fitting doors and parts, the firm, substantial body and the cosey, homelike appearance peculiar to cast-iron ranges.

Low Closet for Pots and Pans

At the same time it has an oven made partly of iron and partly of steel — an oven that will heat quickly and evenly all over.

Grates Easy to Remove

It has a large oven, two inches deeper than any other range of the same size, just large enough to cook four pies at once.

It has a drop oven door, which is not usual on a cast-iron range.

These are all things that you can see—very important things, but not more so than the things you cannot see—the interior construction, which decides whether or not your pies will burn, whether your oven will twist and bend, whether it will be perfectly tight so as to keep out dust and smoke, whether it will wear.

These unseen points you can be sure of when you buy a Peerless Peninsular, or in fact any Peninsular range.

Fifty years of building stoves — honest stoves — are behind every range that bears the name "Peninsular." That name says the materials are good—the flue arrangement is good—the oven is built to heat evenly—the range will wear.

All modern conveniences have been embodied in the Peerless, too.

It may be had with a hot water reservoir and a steel warming closet or not, as desired. The warming closet has a drop door like the oven, making it easy to pull out dishes and adding double shelf room when needed.

Top Raised for Broiling.

There is a Peninsular range to suit every purse and to please every taste in range architecture.

"The Cost"

illustrates some of the more popular lines and explains why. Peninsular ranges cost less in the long run than others. Don't buy a range before reading this book. It's free.

"Fruit-a-tives" saved my Life

RIVIERE À PIERRE, Q., May 9, 1910.

"I look upon my recovery as nothing short of a miracle. I was for eleven years, constantly suffering from Chronic Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

I was treated by several doctors and they simply did me no good. During the latter part of my illness, I was so thin that I weighed only 90 pounds, and I vomited everything I ate.

The doctors gave me up to die as the stomach trouble produced heart weakness and I was frequently unconscious. I received the Last Rites Of The Church.

At this time, a lady strongly urged me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. When I had taken one box, I was much better and after three boxes, I was practically well again, and had gained 20 pounds. I have taken 13 boxes in all and now weigh 150 pounds and am well."

WORK HORSES

From Farm and Dairy.

Experiments have just been concluded at the Illinois Experiment Station that throw light on many of the questions in connection with the feeding of work horses. The experiments had for their object a comparison of clover and timothy hay for farm horses at work; the effect of mixing ground grain with chaffed clover hay; comparison of alfalfa hay with clover and with timothy hay, respectively; comparison of corn and alfalfa hay with a mixture of corn, oats, bran, oil meal, timothy and alfalfa hay; effect of grinding corn and oats when fed with wheat bran, timothy and alfalfa hay. The experiments were conducted by E. C. Obrecht, Assistant Chief in Horse Husbandry. The conclusions reached were as follows:

Where a mixed grain ration of corn, oats, oil meal and bran is fed, clover hay is equally as efficient if not a little superior to timothy for horses at hard work.

There was no observable difference in the effect of clover and timothy upon the spirit of the horses or their ability to endure hot weather. Those receiving clover had a glossier coat of hair and their bowels were looser, but not too loose to endure hard work.

ANENT CLOVER FEEDING

When clover is used as a horse feed, the quality should be good and the quantity fed limited.

A slight saving in grain may be made by mingling it with chaffed hay, but the saving in this test did not appear to be enough to justify the expense.

There may be a benefit not shown in these tests, in preserving the horse's health, by mingling the grain with chaffed hay. The results of this test are not conclusive on this point.

Where the grain was ground and mingled with chaffed clover and with chaffed alfalfa, the latter proved to be a little more efficient in preventing loss in weight of horses at hard work.

The mingling of grain with chaffed timothy hay did not prove satisfactory.

ALFALFA SAVED 22 PER CENT GRAIN

Where alfalfa hay is fed as the roughage part of a ration for farm horses at hard work, less grain is necessary to prevent them from losing weight than where timothy hay is fed. In this test there was a saving of about 22 per cent of grain.

Though too short to be conclusive these tests indicate that mature horses at hard work can be maintained quite satisfactorily for a short time, at least, on corn fed in conjunction with alfalfa hay, and at a saving in cost.

A saving of about 10 per cent may be made by grinding the grain for farm work horses when at hard labor.

It requires twice as long for horses to consume ground grain fed dry, as when the same quantity is fed thoroughly dampened.

Farm work horses at hard labor should receive from 1 1-5 to 1 1-3 lbs. of grain, and from 1 to 1 1-4 lbs. of hay, per 100 lbs. of live weight a day, in order that their weight may be maintained.

Satisfactory results have been secured by feeding the grain in three equal feeds, and giving one-half the hay at night, the other half being divided between the morning and noon feeds.

FEED FOR IDLE DAYS

The grain fed should be reduced one-half on idle days until four days have elapsed, or until they are again put to work, when it may be again increased if desirable. By following this method attacks of azoturia were prevented.

The results of the experiment indicate that the general impression is correct that horses may very properly be given a more bulky ration when idle or doing light work than when at heavy work. It is believed that the practice of permitting work horses to gorge themselves with hay is all too common.

CORN

From Farm and Dairy.

Bundle corn that is absolutely dry can be put in ricks 10 to 12 feet wide, and there will be very little risk of heating, especially if the rick is topped with some old hay or straw, to prevent rain or melting snow from penetrating the stack. Where the amount to put away is not very large, it may be placed on the top of a well-settled hay-stack, and thus avoid the risk of being buried in drifting snow.

Small amounts can often be placed in hay-sheds and hay mows, if one is sure that it is thoroughly cured and dry at the time it is stored; but it is not advisable to store a very large quantity in this manner.—O. M. Olson, Ext. Div., Minn. College of Agr.

DRYNESS ESSENTIAL

The problem of storing it is not an easy one; and many have met loss in their attempt at storing it. The first precaution to be observed in the storing of such feed is that it shall be absolutely cured and dry. The losses that have occurred have been almost entirely due to heating, caused by a presence of moisture.

If one is not sure that the bundles are perfectly dry, he should set them up several bundles deep along both side of a fence, or put them in very narrow ricks, say the length of a bundle in width, alternating the tops and butts in every course until the stack is completed.

STORING IN THE OPEN

An immense portion of the 1911 corn crop is standing in the shock, with the expectancy that it will either be fed in the bundle or husked from the bundle, and the stalks used as roughage. In either case, the approach of winter forces upon the owner the problem as whether it shall be left in the field and hauled in as needed, or hauled in when dry, and stored in some manner.

Past experience has taught most of us farmers that leaving it in the field until needed is a hazardous and very unsatisfactory procedure. The drifting and melting of the winter snow not only reduces the quality of the feed, but increases the task of getting it to the stock.

GOOD THINGS TO KNOW

From Farm and Dairy.

Make up your mind that dishwashing is something which has to be done three times a day, and every day, and that you are going to do it the best you can, says the Housekeeper.

Have as pretty dishes as you can afford, so that it will be a pleasure to keep them clean and shining.

Be sure the dishes are thoroughly scraped before starting to wash them. Soft paper may be used to wipe greasy silverware and dishes, so that the dish water may be kept free from scraps and grease.

Have your water as hot as you can bear your hands in. Have the first pan filled with hot soapsuds, the rinsing water kept clear and hot.

Wash the dishes in their regular order; glass first, silver second, cups and saucers next, plates and larger dishes last.

Have plenty of clean, substantial, dry, slightly warmed towels.

Have a good big tray on which to drain the dishes, or a slanting drainboard, if possible. Have another tray on which to put the dishes as you dry them and on which they may be carried into the dining-room to be put away. This saves many steps and a good deal of time.

Make your dishwashing a physical exercise. Keep the correct standing position; chest high, weight on balls of feet. Have plenty of fresh air in the room, and breathe deeply all the time you are working. You will soon notic othe benefit of this practice in your improved poise of body and general health.

Make your dishwashing a mental exercise. Sing while you work—something cheerful, inspiring, helpful—and think of the words as you sing them; or, repeat to yourself some well-known poem. You will be surprised to see how much faster the work goes and how it cheers and uplifts yet as well.

Clean out your oven flue before making your fire two or three times a week, or as often as necessary; you will then seldom have much trouble when you want it hot

Sewing machine needles may be used much longer if when the points begin to get dull they are rubbed on a piece of emery board.

Always rinse milk glasses in cold water previous to washing in hot soapsuds if you wish them to be clean and bright.

The simplest way to freshen black silk is to sponge the silk well with some strong cold tea, and then carefully iron on the wrong side.

Several newspapers laid one upon the other, then covered with a sheet of brown paper, and stitched together near the edge, make an excellent mat to lay upon a hardwood floor in front of the sink or range in the kitchen, and will save the cook a great deal of work. When soiled, this mat can be thrown aside and easily replaced by a fresh one.

To clean jewelry make a suds of tepid water with castile soap, to which add a few drops of ammonia. Wash the jewelry, rinse it and lay in a box of sawdust to dry, or polish with a bit of chamois.

Clean up the garden. Remove or burn all trash.

Tie up the currant bushes so the snow will not break them down.

Pull, top and pit the root crops. They may be left in pits outside until well into November.

Take up dahlias, cannas, gladioli, etc., as soon as the tops are frosted. Store in a cool cellar.

Prepare soil for "starting" boxes in the spring. Cover this, so it will not freeze, or place in the cellar.

Store squash and pumpkins in a dry cellar or basement. Even though it is quite warm, they will keep better than in a moist cellar.

Pruning of shade and fruit trees may be done this month. Paint all wounds, to prevent drying out. Do not prune when there is frost in the wood.

Remove and burn before next spring, all trees infested with the borer. Do not leave any dead trees in the yard or grounds, as they are only insect and disease-breeding quarters.

Prepare to get better results with fruits, flowers and vegetables next season, by noting the mistakes of this year, and a study of some of the good horticultural literature easily obtained.

Celery for winter use may be put in the cellar as soon as freezing weather begins. Pack it tightly in Loose; cover the roots with earth or sand. A cool, dark cellar is the best place to store celery.

HAVE THEIR CONFIDENCE

From Farm and Dairy.

Jas. Keachie, Dexter, Ia.

The first and most essential thing in dealing with creamery patrons is to have their confidence. To do this, we must have everything in the creamery in first class shape, have all scales clean and accurate, be strictly honest in all our work, treat all patrons squarely and have no favorites.

When a patron complains of his test or his weights, invite him into the creamery and let him do his own weighing. Of course we must see that he does it right. He will not want to do this many times and will soon be satisfied that your weighing is correct.

MAKE THE TEST PLAIN

of, have him present when you do the testing. Let him read his own test, show him you can duplicate the test and have him send the same sample to the dairy commissioner or to your state dairy school and have it tested there, then compare tests. If your work has been done carefully they will not vary much one way or another. Always be congenial with him and explain to him all the details of the test. You will be sure to win his confidence and he will be satisfied and tell his neighbors about it.

Do not be afraid to invite your patrons to visit your creamery and see how you are doing your work. Take time and explain everything to them. Visit them in their homes and make them feel you are interested in them. Give them all the information you can about caring for and maintaining a good dairy herd, but always impress upon them the importance of sanitation, as it is on the farm that most of our contamination starts.

THE BOX of BORNEOS

An Adventure of Peter Crewe—"The Man with the Camera Eyes."

By Harold Carter.

(Copyright, 1911, By W. G. Chapman, in the United States and Great Britain.)

It was a rough passage, and though we were already half way between New York and Tilbury, our destination, few of the passengers had found their sea legs. I sat on the captain's right; upon his left was a pleasant, florid, gray-haired man, rather slow of speech, who was introduced to me as Mr. Peter Crewe.

"Do you find that this Atlantic breeze agrees with you better than the air of Plainfield, N. J., Mr. Langton?" asked Mr. Crewe politely.

"It certainly does," I answered. "But may I ask you how on earth you know that I am a resident of Plainfield, N. J.? To the best of my belief I have told nobody; in fact, as a lawyer, I am naturally secretive about such matters."

"I only know," replied Crewe, "because on two occasions I have seen you hurrying to the boat from the New Jersey terminal at nine o'clock in the morning. You carried a newspaper and a suitcase, and your shoes were red with Plainfield clay. Is not that reason enough?"

"Quite," I replied. "But how in the name of conscience do you remember me?"

"Why, I saw you," returned Crewe. "Everybody within a twelve mile radius of New York has seen everybody else—or at least, ninety per cent. of all other citizens, at some time. Need I remind you that on August 12, 1910, you took a small party to a roof garden on Forty-second street? Or that, the previous February, you rendered first aid to a child who had been knocked down by a street car on Sixth avenue?"

"You saw the accident?" I gasped.

"No. Your photograph was in one of the newspapers. To go further back, you walked fifth in the ninety-fourth rank of the sound money parade of 1900 up Broadway. In 1898—"

"Stop!" I exclaimed. "You will tell me next the date of my first lawsuit, the name of my client—"

"There my art fails me," answered Crewe. "I could not recall the name of my father or mother—except that I presume the surname coincided with mine."

Later in the day, discovering Mr. Crewe alone in the smoking room, I showed him the photograph of a young man in cowboy attire and asked him if he could give me his history. He took the photograph and studied it intently; then closed his eyes in mental concentration.

"I have only seen this young fellow twice," he said. "Seven years ago he strolled up Broadway from the Battery in a suit of English clothes, carrying a 'Gladstone' bag. Three years afterward, while visiting New York from the west, he was arrested at the corner of Twenty-third street and Fifth avenue on a charge of intoxication."

I leaped from my seat. "For the love of heaven, explain your secret to me," I exclaimed. "You may be the man I am most in need of."

Crewe smiled in a self-depreciatory manner. "It is very simple," he explained. "You are, no doubt, aware of the discovery of psychologists that every mental image remains permanently impressed upon the brain?"

"Yes."

"Unfortunately, when the average man sees a thing he straightway forgets it. Similarly with what he hears. When you and I hear a passing sound—the scrape of a wave against the ship, the fall of a twig in the park—the impression is so faint that it is at once lost and never recurs to us throughout life. But when I receive an image through the eyes I never forget it. I have always had this faculty. In my earlier days it caused me much inconvenience. Now, having acquired a modest competence and retired from business, I derive considerable amusement from this power. I travel, I study, I try to turn my advantage to the good of humanity. Already I may say that I know practically every inhabitant of New York city by sight and can recall every occasion on which I have ever seen him. I could tell you strange stories in this regard. I know half London and two-thirds of Paris. Not a day passes but I meet a dozen old acquaintances, all of whom are blandly unconscious of having ever encountered me before."

"But why should you not help me?" I exclaimed. "You are just the man I need to help me in unraveling a painful mystery."

"I shall be delighted to be of service to you," said Crewe. "Let us be perfectly frank—that is all I ask. I will confess that, like many persons with some especial gift, I have other deficiencies. I am a poor judge of character and motive; if a man deceives me I never give him another opportunity."

"I will be entirely frank," I answered. "I am traveling to England to investigate an affair which threatens the life of a man whom I believe to be innocent. Here is the story:

"Upon a small estate in Surrey there lived two brothers, retired Anglo-Indian officials. Both were widowers. Sir George Bamwell, the eldest, a baronet, had a daughter. His brother, William Bamwell, to whom the baronetcy would in due course descend, had a son, a ne'er-do-well, who, after a rather profligate career, went off to America, where he became successively a sheep-herder, prospector, and cowboy. The boy was cast off by his father, a martinet of the old English school, and it was understood that the bulk of his money would go to Selim, an Indian servant, whom William Bamwell had brought home with him, and who had served the brothers faithfully for twenty years."

"The boy, I take it, is the original of the photograph you showed me," said Crewe.

"Yes, and your statements in regard to him were perfectly correct. He did land in New York seven years ago, and he was arrested upon a charge of intoxication at a subsequent date.

"Last year Claude Bamwell, the son, returned home unexpectedly. He had tired of his roving life. He asked his father to give him another chance to redeem himself and to let him remain with him. The cousin, Lydia, the daughter of Sir George Bamwell, who had conceived a romantic attachment for her graceless relative, was instrumental in effecting a reconciliation between the father and son. Claude was given his chance and seemed to make good use of his opportunity. Within six months father and son were on friendly terms. William Bamwell, who was perhaps seventy years of age, had a passion for amateur photography. Claude humored his father and never tired of helping him in his hobby. Father and son began to appreciate each other better than they had ever done before.

"This increasing intimacy was not looked upon favorably by Selim, the Hindoo servant, especially since William Bamwell contemplated altering his will in favor of his son, Claude, and greatly reducing the legacy which Selim had come to look upon as his own reversionary right. However, Selim was inscrutable and kept his own counsel.

"The Bamwell brothers were very set in their ways. One of the characteristics common to both of them was their fondness for a certain East Indian cigar that came from Borneo. These they imported direct from the manufacturer. Claude, however, discovered a similar brand on sale in London, and gave a box to his father for a Christmas present—at Selim's suggestion, as he declares. In fact, according to Claude, Selim discovered the existence of this brand and induced him to purchase the box. Selim, however, denies that he ever heard of these cigars and ascribes the entire scheme of purchasing and presenting them to Claude.

"Now we come to the crux of the situation. Three months ago Sir George Bamwell was discovered dead in the library early one morning. He had been sitting up alone the night before, and had taken one of his brother's cigars—the first of the box. He was found dead, the half-smoked cigar upon the table before him. A post-mortem investigation disclosed the presence in the body of a minute portion of a powerful poison allied to prussic acid. The cigar was analysed, but nothing was found wrong with it.

"In spite of a rigorous cross-examination of all persons concerned, no motive or clue could be discovered. Sir George was buried in the family vault, and William Bamwell became Sir William.

"Not three weeks afterward the tragedy repeated itself. Sir William Bamwell was found dead in precisely the same manner. Again the presence of the prussic acid variant was disclosed at the post-mortem; again the cigar was analysed and found to be entirely harmless. Yet Sir William, like his brother, had undoubtedly died after smoking half of the Borneo cigar.

"But in this case several new facts were brought out at the inquest. In the first place, Claude had been with his father until a few moments before his death. The two men had been smoking together. Sir William was a very rapid smoker; Claude preferred cigarettes and barely burned away an inch of his cigars, which he smoked merely to humor his father. Again, it was proved that Claude had recently purchased prussic acid at a drug-show in the village. When interrogated, he acknowledged this fact, but asserted that his father used this deadly compound for intensifying the images upon negatives that had been under-exposed. It is perfectly true that a certain compound of prussic acid is used for this purpose, and Sir William had always compounded his own photographic chemicals.

"To cut the story short, Claude, or Sir Claude, as I must now call him, was arrested upon a charge of murder and is now awaiting trial at the assizes."

"And the motive?" Crewe queried.

"Fear that his father, who was becoming a little senile, and was largely under the influence of Selim, would again disinherit him."

"But did Claude know the contents of the will?"

"No. It had actually been changed in the son's favor, but so far as is known Sir William had kept his own counsel."

"Then that works either way," said Crewe. "Selim might have committed the murder, fearing lest the will would be changed in the son's favor, and not knowing that this had actually been done. And that very open purchase of prussic acid is not compatible with guilt. And the cigars—how do they come into the story? You say that analysis showed them to be harmless?"

"Entirely so; and to my mind, whoever was the murderer, it was not Claude. But the young man had a bad name, and Selim appears to have made certain statements which greatly increased the feeling against him. However, all that is now sub judice.

"It was the cousin, Lydia, who, at the instigation of Claude, telegraphed to me to gather all material I could tending to show that the young man's life in America had not been so bad as is currently rumored in England, and to hurry across the water with this material to aid the defense. I may say that Claude Bamwell has never been convicted of a felony, and only once of a misdemeanor. I am the attorney who defended him on the charge of intoxication."

"And you have photographs of the other parties in the case?"

"Unfortunately not," I answered. "But now, if you will co-operate with me and lend me the use of your wonderful power, perhaps you may be the means of saving from the gallows a man in whose innocence I firmly believe. Wild as he has been, I know that he could never have stooped to murder. And any remuneration—"

"Nonsense," said Crewe, waving aside the suggestion. "My dear Langton, I shall be glad to assist you to the very best of my ability, so long as you are entirely frank with me. And I confess that I am interested in your client's welfare. But I beg you never again to mention the subject of money. If I made my power the medium of profit I should be fearful of losing it."

In this manner Crewe and I came to be associated in this first of our many enterprises.

I passed many an anxious moment until the boat docked at Tilbury. As we sailed up the broad estuary of the Thames we saw the cargoes of every nation hurrying to the chief mart of the world. Here a lugger was beating up from France; there a stately East Indiaman moved on even keel, her decks filled with her swarthy, grinning Lascar crew; Norse lumber boats, tallow ships from Hamburg, trawlers, all contributed to the ever changing but never wearying panorama. It was a glorious spectacle, this approach to London through the mists of the Essex marshes. As we approached our dock, however, and the picture became clearer, we saw more sordid scenes. Mean riverside alleys, squalid opium dens disclosed themselves; an Asiatic, hurrying into a rag and bone shop with a parcel under his arm, glanced furtively round, as though the world were his enemy. But all my speculations and impressions were killed abruptly when, at the moment of docking, a messenger rushed up and thrust a telegram into my hands. I tore it open and read:

"Claude Bamwell found guilty wilful murder Godalming assizes. Judge refused postponement till your arrival, on ground your evidence not material. Come to Fairview instantly."

It was signed by the attorneys for the defence, Messrs. Clayton and Pole. From the urgent nature of the summons to the Bamwell country place I inferred that all hope had not been abandoned.

Crewe shook his head dolefully when I showed him this missive. Although he would not say so, I could see that he had scant hope in our ability to save Claude Bamwell's life. We took the train for Fenchurch street and, half an hour later, were speeding southward in the Godalming local. At four that afternoon we arrived at Fairview, a small and unpretentious place, but in good taste and a typical English gentleman's country seat.

We found Mr. Clayton in charge. Lydia, the cousin, was prostrated and under medical care. Hardly had we taken our seats for a conference, however, than she appeared dramatically before us, arrayed in black, her hair dishevelled, her eyes tear-stained.

"You must save Claude, Mr. Langton," she pleaded. "Indeed he never killed his father. Tell me that you have not come all the way across the ocean fruitlessly."

Slight as my hope was, I could not wholly cast it out.

"I will do my best," I said. "I understand an appeal is to be taken to the court of criminal appeal. I can testify that the stories as to Claude's wild life in America are fabrications. I will save him if he can be saved."

Mr. Clayton took Lydia by the arm and led her to the door. "We will spare no effort," he said.

She seemed to collapse. Mr. Clayton led her to her room, while we waited in painful doubt. I saw Crewe cast his eye upon a photograph that stood upon the mantel.

"That is Selim, the Indian servant," I explained to him. "I had a duplicate copy of it, but unfortunately left it at home in the hurry of packing. Pleasant-looking fellow, isn't he?"

Crewe made no answer. His eyes were closed; he seemed to be calling up some memory. At this juncture Mr. Clayton returned and seated himself beside me.

"Now, gentlemen," he said briskly—I had already introduced Mr. Crewe to him as my confidential assistant—"I must confess that matters look very black indeed. In our English courts a conviction for murder is practically never reversed and justice moves with appalling swiftness. Let me say, however, that I am assured a hideous wrong has been done, and that the real criminal is the Indian. But for his perjured evidence, a very different verdict would have been returned.

"What most impressed the jury was the fact that a prussic acid compound was found in the bodies of both Sir George and Sir William, while it was proved that Claude had bought prussic acid at the village drug store. Then there was the motive—fear that the will would be revoked. But what clinched the jurors in their decision was Selim's evidence that Claude had approached him with the project of destroying his father and sharing the money that might be left, irrespective of the will. Selim had been a faithful servant for many years; Claude was reputed to have been a man of vilest character in America. The judge, who is old and testy, refused to wait until you could put in evidence in rebuttal of this, on the ground that it was immaterial in law. Perhaps it was—but in fact it undoubtedly decided the jury's verdict."

"And where is Selim?" I asked.

"Living at the village hotel," said Mr. Clayton. "Living there brazenly. Says he will remain on the spot until his dear master has been avenged, and is the object of universal solicitude, as Sir Claude is of execration."

"And now," I said, "what part did the cigars play in this mystery?"

"None whatever," answered Mr. Clayton. "The cigar which the murdered man had been smoking was carefully analyzed and found to be perfectly innocuous. The fact that each of the victims died smoking was apparently nothing more than a coincidence."

"Have you the rest of the box?"

"No," Mr. Clayton answered. "Oddly enough, it cannot be found. It disappeared on the day of the murder, together with the bulk of the prussic acid supposed to have been purchased, and with a few other little articles having relation to the crime. But none of these is material. The prosecuting attorney suggested that Claude had hidden these in an effort to destroy all evidence of his crime."

"Can we see Selim?" asked Peter Crewe.

"It will do no good," said Mr. Clayton. "He is either a monument of avenging justice, whose life is dedicated to the service of a murdered master, or a villain of the most plausible stamp."

"Nevertheless I should like to see him," Crewe persisted.

"Well," said Mr. Langton, "if you think it will do any good, we can undoubtedly find him at the village hotel."

At Crewe's urging we started out for the village. It was a small country town of one main street, flanked by little laborers' cottages, with, here and there, a tradesman's residence of more imposing type. At the inn we learned that Selim was out walking.

"The poor fellow is so distraught," said the landlord, "he frequently takes long, lonely strolls about the country to revive his spirits."

"What time does the next train come in from Godalming?" Crewe asked.

"At 5:07," the landlord answered.

"And departs?"

"There is a 5:12 local running clear through to Charing Cross."

"We have just time to catch the local," said Crewe, looking at his watch. "Mr. Clayton, we leave you here and shall see you tomorrow." Then, disregarding the lawyer's look of surprise, he took me by the arm and, without further explanation, urged me to accompany him. I saw that something important must have transpired.

"This fellow Selim does not know you by sight?" he asked.

"No," I said.

"Still, it would be as well not to let him perceive two strangers when he arrives upon the down-platform."

"But where are we going?" I asked.

"Tilbury," said Crewe shortly. "There is no time to lose. With your permission I will defer explanations until later."

We reached the station with three minutes to spare. As we panted up the inclined pathway toward the train Crewe pulled me aside into the shadows of a cluster of box cars. An instant later I saw Selim pass stealthily by in the direction of the village. He had evidently arrived on the down train.

Still amazed, I entered the up train, and, as soon as we were settled in our compartment, Crewe turned to me.

"I think, Mr. Langton," he said, "that we shall find that box of cigars in that rag and bone shop along the waterfront of Tilbury. Doubtless you remember it."

"But—" I began.

"Did you not see this Selim entering it this morning as we came to anchorage?" Crewe asked.

"I remember an Asiatic with a parcel entering some shop."

"You could not distinguish the face? It was rather faint. Nevertheless that man was the original of the photograph upon the mantel at Fairview, and the parcel was a box of cigars wrapped in a dirty cloth. Selim must have learned of our coming and determined to remove all evidence from the scene of the crime. Not daring to burn or bury the cigars, he resolved to go to London secretly and dispose of the box to some one of his compatriots who frequent the Wapping and Tilbury purlieus. By great good fortune his visit synchronised with our arrival."

"But even if this should prove true—"

"It is true."

"What evidence can there be in the cigars?"

"That remains to be seen," my companion answered; and he would not discuss the subject further until we arrived once more at Tilbury at eight o'clock that evening.

At Crewe's suggestion we purchased cloth caps and threw away our felt hats; we turned up the collars of our coats and made ourselves appear as much as possible in our role of ship's officers ashore. To find the junk shop was easy. As Crewe had surmised, it was kept by an East Indian, a swarthy, ill-favored fellow who eyed us with no very great appreciation.

"Mate," said Crewe, "we want some smokes to take aboard with us in the morning."

Without a word the East Indian produced a handful of vile-looking cheroots. Crewe tossed them roughly aside.

"What d'ye take me for?" he said, somewhat thickly, as though slightly under the influence of liquor. "Gimme a box. Got any split boxes?"

Leaning over the counter I saw a small package wrapped up in a dirty cloth, which disclosed the end of a cigar box.

"Gimme those," I said pointing.

The East Indian looked at me furtively. He took up the box, unwrapped the cloth—and suddenly darted through the back door of his shop. Instantly Crewe leaped upon him.

"Hold him," he cried to me, as the Indian twisted himself adroitly out of Crewe's grasp. I saw his hand go down to his side and, with a fortunate blow, knocked him sprawling. His head came in contact with the edge of the door and the fall stunned him. The box fell from his clasp. Picking it up hastily I saw upon the cover the word "Borneo."

"Come on," cried Crewe, and, holding the box under my coat, I darted after him down the alley. We reached the main road panting, and, finding that we were not pursued, set off at a rapid pace toward the station. On the way we recovered our hats, which we had thrown behind some boarding.

It was five o'clock on the following morning when we reached Fairview, after many hours of waiting at junctions for trains which either did not run or did so with exasperating unpunctuality. We went straight to the house and called Mr. Clayton out of bed. Crewe held up the cigars.

"Now, Mr. Clayton, we must act quickly," he said, "or you will find that the quarry will have flown. Can you bring Selim to the house as soon as possible?"

"I will do so at once," said Mr. Clayton, much mystified.

"If he refuses to come—" I said.

"He will not refuse. I can procure a warrant from Mr. Tighe, our nearest magistrate. But may I ask—"

"I would rather say nothing," Crewe answered. "It is a desperate hope, and yet it seems built upon something of a foundation. At any rate it will do no harm. May I be allowed the setting of the little drama?"

"By all means," Mr. Clayton answered.

He set off as soon as he had snatched a hasty breakfast of bread and milk, and, after two hours of waiting, Crewe and I saw him reappear with Selim. The servant came in blandly; he was as suave in his demeanor as he had been pictured; nevertheless I thought I could discern an uneasy glance in his eye.

"Sit down, Mr. Selim," said Mr. Clayton. "These gentlemen are friends of Claude Bamwell's and wish to interrogate you."

"I shall be delighted to do everything in my power to assist them," said the Indian, seating himself easily at the table. "If only I could believe that the unhappy young man was not guilty of my dear master's death—"

"Do you smoke, Mr. Selim?" asked Crewe abruptly.

The Indian started violently; then, recovering his composure, replied:

"I am not much of a smoker, sir."

"But you have smoked? Will you oblige me by smoking a cigar with me?" And he produced the box of Bornoes.

I never saw such a change come over a human countenance as came over the Indian's. For a moment he gasped like a fish out of water. Before he could regain his self-possession Crewe had placed before him a sheet of paper and a pencil. Upon the paper was written:

"I swear that I and I alone am responsible for the death of my master, Sir George Bamwell."

"As an alternative to smoking, perhaps you will sign this," said Crewe. "You may do both," he added.

The Indian collapsed into his chair with a ghastly smile.

"No, I will smoke," he said, pushing the paper away.

Crewe calmly lit a cigar, and then applied a match to the Indian's. And there they sat, smoking in perfect silence, while we others gathered around in strained expectancy.

But I never saw two men who smoked more slowly.

"Come, throw away your cigar, Selim, and sign that paper," said Crewe, after a pause. The Indian's cigar now had an inch of ash on it; Crewe's was hardly rimmed.

Suddenly, as if inspired by some invincible determination, the Indian began smoking furiously. The smoke came from his mouth in puffs. His cigar was half consumed. The silence deepened. Some dreadful tragedy seemed to depend upon the issue of that smoking match.

"Selim," said Crewe, laying down his cigar, "sign that paper." And he removed the cigar from the Indian's mouth.

I saw the Indian shoot out a trembling claw. He grasped the pencil and wrote his name almost illegibly beneath the paper. Then he glanced into our faces with a pitiful smile. "It is finished," he said, and picked up the cigar again.

Crewe leaped toward him and tried to wrest the cigar from his mouth. But the Indian, with a grip of steel, held Crewe's wrists, all the while drawing in and puffing out the smoke in thick clouds. The ash was lengthening. Still none of us stirred. We were fascinated into inertia by this strange drama.

"Will you oblige me by smoking a cigar with me?"

All at once the end came. I saw an ashen pallor overspread Selim's swarthy face. He choked; he beat the air with his hands; then, without a sound, he toppled over to the ground. Mr. Clayton raised him quickly, but one look into Selim's face was sufficient to tell us all that life was ended.

"You see, gentlemen," said Crewe, "as I had suspected, those cigars were highly charged with a volatile poison, a variant of prussic acid. Selim had given the box to Claude to present to his father, or, rather, had cunningly contrived that Claude should purchase the box at the store in Tilbury, where he had it placed on sale. The reason why no poison was found in the cigar butts was that it had already been drawn out of the cigars into the lungs of the victims.

"You know that as one smokes a cigar toward the butt the stump constantly becomes warmer and damper, the fluids being driven back by the flame. There was no danger in the cigars until they were half smoked down, for the poison did not vaporise. After they were half smoked, however, the acid became sufficiently heated to pass into vapor, which was inhaled into the smoker's lungs and caused immediate death. It was a diabolical trick, and could only have originated in the cunning mind of an East Indian, a race notorious for its rendettas and vengeances."

"And if you had not so opportunely seen Selim entering the shop at Tilbury?" I suggested. "The coincidence was almost an impossible one, according to the laws of chance—and yet it saved an innocent life."

"There are no laws of chance," Crewe answered. "Believe me, Langton, somewhere or other lies the clue to every crime, if only one has the power to discern it."

Venice.

Of the books about Venice there is no end. For the historian the "Queen of the Adriatic" has always possessed a peculiar charm, and there are any number of histories of the famous city-state. Of course the great reservoir of information concerning the Venetian republic is the "Archives of Venice," published at intervals throughout the years and still being regularly added to. In order to become posted on the "monetary system of the Venetian Republic" one would have to wade through many works bearing generally upon Venetian history. There is no single exhaustive work along that particular line, but in nearly all of the histories of the republic may be found something illustrative of her wonderful financial system.

Had Some Consideration.

Pinkham had proposed and been refused. Although he appeared in an talkative mood, a man sitting opposite in the smoking car attempted to draw him into conversation. At one moment the stranger would, with an excess of politeness, apologise for calling Pinkham's attention to the fact that the ash of his cigar had fallen on his waistcoat, or a spark was endangering his tie.
